ciation or agent or corporation could go and pay the passage of an immigrant to this country for the private purposes of that association or agent. It would limit those associations to a case where they had paid money into the hands of a State agent, who would be under State authority and perform the functions which the State now authorizes him, as the representative of the State, to perform, but which is refused to an individual. I shall be satisfied if Senators will add these simple words which I have suggested. Of course, we can not amend a conference report, but it is a simple matter to effect this, and it has been done here often within the knowledge of Senators. If this report go back to conference by general consent and these words be added, there will be no practical difficulty in the way, if Senators are willing to accept them; but they do not seem to be willing to accept that proposition. They reject the proposition, showing that they know that the effect of the proposed law is to prevent any State agent from using money which may be furnished to him by an association for that purpose, and the reason they will not consent to it is that it is designed to break up the opportunity thus presented under the existing law and not let us have the advantages of it.

Mr. President, I hope Senators will not take offense when I say to them what I believe in my heart that there is no section of this country that could come before the Senate and make this appeal to them and be refused except the section from which we come. It seems to matter not what injustice is done to the South. I have never heard any such representations of great interests made to this Senate by any other section where a deaf ear was turned to them. Let any man, if he can, show that the proposition that I have made is not well founded; let any man show, if he can, that the effect of this is not to so change existing law as to deny to the people of the South the small opportunity they now have to meet this great, this pressing, this vital demand for labor.

Mr. President, we all of us sympathize in the desire that improper immigration shall not come to this country. There is a great deal in this bill that I most heartily approve in that regard in the exclusion of improper persons. I join Senators full handed in any effort to exclude from this country improper persons. There is also a great deal to sympathize with in the demand that we shall not have an undue competition with our labor by the introduction of foreign labor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULKELEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from

With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Is not the effect of what the Senator from Georgia is contending for to admit the importation of contract labor into this country?

Mr. BACON. I think not. That is not my understanding of it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I take it that the Senator does not wish to express himself as being in favor of the importation of

Well, I would not like to answer that question in the broad way in which the Senator puts it. I think, if it is done at all, it ought to be done under very careful restrictions. I would not wish to permit unlimited opportunity for the introduction of contract labor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator, then, is in favor of the importation of some contract labor?

Mr. BACON. I am not discussing that. I shall be glad to discuss it at some time, but that does not involve this proposi-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I was misled; because I had understood from certain portions of the debate, in which I took no small interest, that that was really the heart of the whole

Mr. BACON. No; the Senator is mistaken; and I am very glad to relieve him of his mistake. In what I stated yesterday there is no allusion to contract labor, except in response to the inquiry made of me by the Senator from Massachusetts, and that response was simply a declination to go into a discussion

The South Carolina law has no contract-labor provision in its terms or in its practice; and what is designed to be done by the Southern States under existing law on the line of what has already been done by South Carolina, is not to introduce contract labor, but simply to give an opportunity for the introduction of the best class of immigrants from the most desirable countries of Europe, who, when they come to us, shall be free to take labor or not, as they please and where they please and on such terms as they may agree to.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Georgia has used the phrase "contract labor" a number of times. Of course there is a definite understanding as to its meaning as used in the immigration law. I will ask the Senator from Georgia what is his understanding of the term "contract labor?"

Mr. BACON. I was just now endeavoring to give my definition of the term, but I will give it again, with pleasure. I understand "contract labor" to be this: Where a man goes to a foreign country, finds a man he desires to employ, makes a bargain with him that he shall come to this country to work for him or for any particular person he may designate, brings him here, and puts him to work for the purpose of discharging the obligation of that contract. That is what I understand by "contract labor." I draw a distinction as to that to which I can see a great many objections.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not the best definition of "contract labor.

Mr. BACON. I shall be glad to have the Senator give his definition of "contract labor," because that makes one of the troubles in regard to the matter, I think.

Mr. SPOONER. I will read the definition of contract labor as found in the conference report:

Persons hereinafter called "contract laborers"-

Mr. OVERMAN. From what page of the report is the Senator reading?

Mr. SPOONER. I am reading from page 3 of the conference report, beginning in the fourth line:

Persons hereinafter called "contract laborers," who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled.

On the lines of that provision a contract is not necessary in order to make one a contract laborer.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is as broad as language can make it.

Mr. SPOONER. It is as broad as language can make it. promise to get them employment makes them, under this definition, contract laborers.

That is in the law which is now proposed. Mr. BACON.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; and I think it is in the old law. Mr. BACON. I am looking to see whether it is the language; but we will not stickle on terms.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not stickling on terms.

Mr. BACON. I say I will not. I did not accuse the Senator of doing that. I say I will not stickle on terms. If contract labor can properly be defined in so liberal a style as that, of course there are different kinds of contract labor, then. But I say that the legitimate construction of the term "contract labor" is labor which has been contracted with, and the broadening of the definition does not change conditions at all. I contend that there can be no reasonable objection—not the objections which can be made at least to contract labor in its proper signification-to the procuring of a good class of immigrants coming to a country simply by making them acquainted with the character of the country to which they are invited, the character of the employment which can be had by those who are desirable, and the amount which they can secure in such employment if they make any arrangements for it. other words, when they are allowed to be practically free when they come to take such labor or not as they please. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BACON. The Senator can proceed without-making the

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Thank you. Would the Senator say that the arrangement which I will now describe is the importation of contract labor: Where the agent of a State or industry induces a laborer to come here, pays for his passage ticket and all expenses, under an arrangement with him whereby a proportion of his monthly salary shall be deducted each month until all of his indebtedness is paid? Would the Senator say that that arrangement was contract labor?

I should say it was.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is not in favor of that? Mr. BACON. I do not advocate anything of the kind. think that would be objectionable.

Under this South Carolina proceeding, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor states that the arrangement stated by the Senator was partially, but not altogether, the arrangement in that case, but that was canceled. I suppose if it had not been canceled it is possible the ruling of the Department might have been different from what it was. So far as I have or may have any influence in the matter I would not desire that there should be opportunity for that because of reasons which I need not now stop to enumerate.

But, Mr. President, in the procurement of the best class of immigrants there is nothing objectionable. On the contrary, there is everything that is desirable. This country owes a great deal to the tide of immigration that has flowed here for the past forty years. It has developed in large degree and enriched Let the Senators from the Northwest say whether or not immigration has been of value to their States. Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Minnesota, the Senator from Iowa, the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Kansas, and the Senators from the Dakotas say what would their States be to-day if it had not been for the impulse and the material assistance given in the development of those States by the desirable immigrants which they have had.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I rise merely to say,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not want the Senator to misunderstand my position with reference to immigration at large.

Mr. BACON. Oh, no.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Because I sympathize to a considerable extent with the view which the Senator happens to be now expressing. I am in favor of very large and liberal provisions with reference to the admission of immigrants, and I took occasion the other day to say that I supposed at one time or another we were all immigrants, and that the immigrants to this country, even those who are spoken of with much contempt habitually, are among our most admirable citizens, and their chil-

Mr. BACON. Still more admirable ones. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Their children ma Their children make splendid citizens. That is not the point I was raising with the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I am not criticising the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have about as strong a view as the Senator has in reference to contract importations.

I am not criticising the Senator, Mr. President. I was trying to emphasize the importance of this matter to us, and I want to appeal to Senators not to deny us the slight opportunity that we now have for the enjoyment of that which has brought such blessings upon other portions of the country.

I have no doubt that the great States of which I have spoken would in time have been developed and peopled by our own people even if they had had none of the assistance from these millions of immigrants, but it would have taken a long time to do it. Many of the very best people now in all that section are immigrants, and their descendants, one of whom sits among us as a Senator, and a very worthy one, whom we all admire and of whom we are all proud-the Senator from Minnesota [Mr.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Does the Senator from Georgia hold that this conference report, if adopted, would preclude the kind of immigration to which the Senator has just referred as going to our Northwestern States from going to Georgia?

Mr. BACON. It would not preclude their coming there voluntarily, but it would shut the door to all practicable hope of getting them there. The tide of immigration is elsewhere. It has been elsewhere for half a century. There are conditions in the South which are repellent to immigrants. There are conditions There are there which are not understood in foreign countries. conditions there which have been misrepresented in foreign countries; and those conditions are such that it is necessary that there shall be means used to get immigrants there.

Mr. President, just to illustrate the difference, take the great States that I have spoken of. I can not tell what the proportion of foreigners and the descendants of foreigners is in those States. while in my State, with two million and a half people, I have not the figures here now, but I think there are less than 10,000 people of foreign birth out of two million and a half people in Georgia. Yet here are these perishing and languishing industries, all calling for them and demanding them, and we have this slight opportunity, this door which has just recently been opened, and here it is proposed to shut it in our faces, in spite of what I have said to Senators twice before-and which I say again-that 20 per cent of the spindles in the South are idle because of the lack of labor, and there is no other place to go for it. Our white population has been exhausted, and the negro population can not be utilized; and unless we can do something in the way of getting foreign immigration, there is no opportunity for it.

While I would go as far as any man to exclude the undesirable, and while I do not propose to open any door to contract labor, I simply ask that the law as it stands to-day may remain; that we shall not be put in the position where the Govframent of the United States, in the face of such representa-tions as these, will turn to us a deaf ear and say, "We will hear nothing of it, and do nothing for you." We are not ask-ing, I repeat, to have the law changed. We are not asking any additional advantages, certainly not at this time. We are simply asking that the law may stand as it is.

Mr. President, I shall not further detain the Senate.

I wish only to repeat, in order that I may not be misunderstood, that the purpose is not to secure unlimited immigration. The purpose is not to give opportunity for the introduction of any immigration which shall be objectionable; the purpose is not to give the opportunity for contract labor, but the sole purpose is to do what has been done in the South Carolina case, through the agency of the State and by the assistance of private associations, in securing the best class of immigrants for work which is calling for them, and where there is no other source of supply

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I had intended to discuss another phase of this report, but inasmuch as there has been so much said about the South Carolina case and there is evidently so much misapprehension as to what is really meant and what is involved in it, before I proceed to the other branch I will try to add a little something to the subject in illustration of what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] has been contending for.

I hold in my hand decision No. 111, Department of Commerce and Labor, signed by Oscar S. Straus, Secretary, dated December 26, 1906, which has been quoted by the Senator from Georgia more or less copiously; but which, it seems to me, he would have done better to have had printed this morning in the Record, so that other Senators could get hold of it. It is not a document that is accessible, unless we send to the Department of Commerce and Labor for it, as I understand. Therefore, Senators are at a disadvantage in undertaking to get at the real facts in the case. Before I go any further, lest I might forget it, I want to ask that that decision be printed as a public document, because whatever may be the settlement of this question now, undoubtedly the widespread interest, you might say, the vital character of interest in the South in securing a desirable class of white immigrants, will not let this matter rest where it is or where it is proposed to put it by the adoption of this conference report. Therefore I make the request that decision No. 111, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, be printed as a Senate document. I should like to have it printed so that other Senators may get hold of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so or-

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, I want to call the attention of those Senators who are interested—and I have noticed by the inquiries that a good many Senators here are interested-in trying, it appears to me, to take political advantage or to give a political bias or color to this discussion— Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator, on second thought, will see that that is hardly an accurate interpretation of any inquiry made. We do not want any political advantage; we do not

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I have never noticed that the Senator's party was oblivious to always getting everything they could and keeping all they got, and getting everything in sight, if it were possible. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, the only method by which we have had political advantage over the other side has been that we have always insisted merely upon the simple right. do not need to take any advantage of the other side politically.

TILLMAN. I will try to demonstrate before I through that you are going to take advantage of the other side right in this bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No political advantage unless the other side should stand for contract labor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Right there—not to branch off and get into a line of thought which I had not intended to touch on at all—I will ask the Senator how many Congressmen will be chosen to represent the million immigrants who came into the country, last year, not all of whom are voters, and a million the year Does that mean any political advantage?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am tempted to make an answer as to how many Congressmen are represented by certain constituencies in which men are counted who do not vote, but I will not do so, because that would lead to quite a political debate, and time is short.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is entirely welcome to lead to that phase of this question, for I have been trying to aggravate him and his fellows into its discussion for the last month, and can not get a man of them to touch it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is impossible for the Senator either to make us angry or to irritate us. He can not irritate us into any discussion of that kind.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not a question of irritation. It is a question of getting you up a tree where you can not get down and you stay up there because you do not dare crawl down.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What the Senator complains of is that we will not let him get us up a tree.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator wants to discuss that phase of it, well and good. If he wants to interrupt me to show how of it, well and good. If he wants to interrupt he to show how bright and witty and cutting he can be, well and good. If he wants enlightenment, well and good. I will give him some light later on, if he will permit me.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am always glad to get light from every source, and never more happy than when I get it from the Sena-tor from South Carolina, which I always do whenever he tries to give it. The only reason for my inquiry of the Senator was that he said we are trying to take a political advantage of the other side, and I wanted to point out that we were not taking any political advantage.

Mr. TILLMAN. You simply said you did not need any.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. We do not need any political advantage. TILLMAN. The Senator does not assert that there has not been an attempt, he does not believe but that there has been an attempt made to give a political turn to this matter by showing that we on this side are in favor of contract labor while those on the other side are not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Who tried to show that? I merely asked the question of the Senator from Georgia-

Mr. TILLMAN. And the basis of your question, at least as I understood it, and the purpose of the discussion of the Senator from Massachusetts, who precipitated this phase of it, has all along the line been to try to get the Senator from Georgia to commit himself to the doctrine of contract labor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is perfectly immaterial what he commits himself to, provided merely that we understand what he is trying to do.

Mr. TILLMAN. And not enough of you stayed-

Mr. THLLMAN. And not enough or you stayed—
Mr. BEVERIDGE. One moment. I think we do on both sides—and the Senator's side is not guiltless of that—play what is called "small politics," of which the country never hears anything. It amounts to nothing. But as to taking political advantage, Mr. President, we do not need to take any political advantage of the other side. They are in a bad enough case as it is.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has gotten to where he started a while ago.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, if you will permit me I will go on.

I started to try to give the facts in regard to the South Carolina case, in order that the Senate might understand, which it does not now, what is involved in that case. I will give the summing up in the language of Mr. Earl, the solicitor of that Department. After quoting various decisions of the Supreme Court and giving the law in full, this is his summing up:

Court and giving the law in full, this is his summing up:

Replying to your letter, therefore, in the light of all the foregoing considerations, I have the honor to say that in my opinion the plan pursued by Commissioner Watson, as it is shown to have been carried out, does not involve a violation of the immigration laws of the United States prohibiting the importation of contract laborers; and I am further of opinion that there has been no misapplication of the exemption in favor of States, Territories, and the District of Columbia contained in section 6 of the act of March 3, 1903.

The views taken in reaching this conclusion have made it unnecessary to consider questions which might arise in an ordinary case involving the contract-labor laws, as, for example, whether the payment by "another" of the passage money of foreign laborers induced to come to this country to perform labor would of itself constitute a violation of law. And it is proper to add that this opinion is based altogether upon the facts of the particular case as disclosed by the record referred to at the outset. It is obvious that very different questions would arise if the facts were that Commissioner Watson, instead of acting independently and as the representative of the State in behalf of the general body of its citizens and of its industries as a whole, acted in reality only under color of State authority and in fact as the agent of particular persons, firms, or interests; that the contributions made by private persons toward the expenses of the department of immigration, instead of being merely added to the general fund appropriated by the State, to be expended at the sole discretion of State officials, were used to assist in the immigration of foreign laborers to perform labor for the particular persons who so contributed; that Commissioner Watson, instead of being wholly free to act for the benefit of the State at large, was actually under the control of special interests and bound to act as they should direct; or that the immigrants themselves, instead of being entirely at liberty to accept or reject any employment provided for them, were coerced into working for particular employers. Such circumstances, and others which readily suggest themselves, would materially alter the complexion of the case, and are not, therefore, to be considered as covered by this opinion.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TILLMAN.

With pleasure.
The Senator has asked that this opinion be Mr. HOPKINS. published as a public document. I have never seen the letter that was addressed to the Solicitor by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and I do not know that many other Senators have. I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he is willing to ask that the letter of the Secretary be printed with the opinion?

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly, and anything else bearing on this question, for it is a very important one, and the Senate only needs to have the proper information to act, I believe, wisely and justly.

Mr. President, this summing up of Mr. Earl, it appears to me, answers conclusively the assertion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] in regard to the action of Commissioner Watson being a clear violation of law.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator will remember that my statement was based-

Mr. TILLMAN. On your understanding of what the Senator from Georgia said or what you heard from others

Mr. HOPKINS. It was based upon the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts, who purported to give the facts. I will state to the Senator that the reason why I made my request about the letters is that I think the pertinence and force and effect of this opinion can be better understood by having the letter of the Secretary with it, so that we can determine what facts were presented to the Solicitor rather than to take them from his opinion.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has asked that that be incorporated in the document, and I have consented, so that it will come whenever it is printed.

I was pointing out, however, that in summing up, the solicitor himself had given his conception of those facts, and his interpretation of the law applicable to them, and that in rendering his opinion he has declared that the action of Watson did not come within the prohibition of contract labor, and that Watson's action, which was South Carolina's action, was perfectly legitimate; and that under that decision we of the South have been led to understand that with this interpretation of the immigration laws as they now are an opportunity is offered for the Southern States to utilize the great flood of foreigners who are trying to get to these shores, in order to bring to the South the most desirable class of those foreigners. There are some of them, I confess, I would just as lief would stay in New York or Chicago, or anywhere else, and if I had my way I would insist, and put it into this proposed law, the provision-and never pass a law until we got it in-which the Senate passed last spring, that the educational test should be one of the things which we should demand and enforce, or have nothing.

The Senate conferees have surrendered. I suppose the House was set, and they could not help themselves. They had to take what they could get or take nothing. Everyone supposed that the immigration bill was dead anyway; that it was deadlocked in conference and would never see the light of day again. Lo and behold, an exigency has arisen on the Pacific coast; strenuous individuals are at work to accomplish certain ends; the able man who presides over the State Department drafts and amendment to a bill passed by the Senate last May, and last June by the House, and which has been in conference ever since; the conferees take a distinguished gentleman into their confidence, or he takes them into his confidence, and the Senate is notified that this bill must go through. Why? Speaking in plain terms, to keep the Japs out of California.

Therefore there is a twofold object involved in the urgency with which this bill has been pressed and is being pressed to adoption. The first of those objects is, as I said, to keep Japanese laborers from coming into this country.

The conferees, in furtherance of a policy which looks to sectional advantage, have incorporated provisions which change the law in regard to contract labor, which provide for a closing of the little dribble of immigrants who have started to go southward; and the two linked together are to be driven through Congress—the South's interest, as usual, ignored; the Pacific coast, of course, taken care of. They both involve the race question. The object of preventing undesirable Japanese from coming into this country is one with which every southerner sympathizes far more keenly than any man on the other side possibly can who does not live in the West. But when we in South Carolina, where we have 235,000 more negroes than whites, with our industries struggling, some of them languishing for want of labor—all kinds of labor, agricultural as well as manufacturing—seek to obtain some little assistance toward equalizing the races, getting something which may promise relief from what I believe to be an impending race conflict there, actuated by selfish greed certain people of certain States step to the front, hugging to their bosoms the popular issue of the welfare of labor, clamoring for the right of the workingman to be protected from the importation of contract labor, saying to us of the South: "You shall not have the opportunity to get a few thousand white people to help stem the tide of negro ignorance and barbarism with which we engulfed you forty years ago."

Mr. President, lest some think I speak too harshly, I desire to call attention to the fact that this must be in pursuance of a settled policy; that there is something more involved than the mere settlement of this question as to the admission of the Japanese and the exclusion of contract laborers. I hold in my hand two resolutions which were introduced in the House of Representatives. On February 2, Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the House of Representatives any information in his possession relative to the introduction of foreign laborers into the State of South Carolina by one E. J. Watson.

On the 5th the same Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the House of Representatives any Information in his possession relative to the introduction of foreign laborers into the State of South Carolina by one E. J. Watson, together with a copy of his solicitor's legal opinion, if any be on file in said Department, as to whether said laborers were lawfully admitted to the United States, and a copy of any documents in his possession furnishing the grounds for said opinion.

So it seems that a Massachusetts programme is being carried out.

I desire to say that if there is any man in the Senate who is opposed to the importation of contract labor, I am that man. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] will not go any further than I will along that line. My State is next to his in the number of cotton spindles and looms. We have a very large manufacturing population, composed at this time almost entirely of people born and bred in South Carolina, people as good as we have, but unfortunately they are poor.

I would do nothing to jeopardize the interest of that class of people. I would not have the manufacturing interests of South Carolina given the opportunity to go to Europe and make contracts with anyone they might see fit, regardless of their fitness as citizens, and bring over a horde of ignorant and debased foreigners to reduce the wages of my own people by bringing into competition with them these contract laborers But if the State needs more white people-and from Europe. who will deny it?-if by reason of the poverty of the soil, impoverished by a century and a half of improvident agriculture, naturally poor to begin with, it is an unpropitious field for new people to come to settle, if the condition there-of the excess of negroes who will compete in the labor market with these foreigners—makes it well-nigh impossible to attract white people there, white people from the North or white people from Europe-I ask the Senate whether if, under existing law, that State is permitted through organized efforts to bring in a good class of white men and women to help us develop our resources and to increase the white race there, we shall, because the Japanese are trying to get in on the Pacific coast, say to the South Carolinians, "We shut the door of hope, so far as white immigrants are concerned, in your faces to keep them out, while we shut the Japanese out from the Pacific coast to keep them from competing with white people upon terms that are dangerous." The two questions are cognate.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina what connection the provision contained in the first section of the bill, which it is contended would exclude Japanese from the Pacific coast, has with that provision of the bill which the Senator refers to, and which he contends would exclude immigrants from South Carolina? What is the necessity of connecting the two propositions? They are separate and apart, and there is no connection between them, and it seems to me that it is not necessary in this debate as to the effect of this bill on the Southern States to include matters affecting the Pacific coast. We have our troubles and we have endeavored in a diplomatic way to settle and adjust them in this bill, and it appears to me that there is no necessity for connecting the matters set forth in section 1 of the bill with what the Senator desires to correct as far as the Southern States are concerned.

Mr. TILLMAN. The trouble is that we can not correct anything under the status here. The conferees, who might be willing to withdraw this report and amend it or strike out what they have put in, so as to leave things in the South as they are, can not act, because, as the newspapers inform us, Mr. Schmitz and the school board of San Francisco are to meet the President this afternoon to settle this moot question as to the schools of San Francisco, and to determine whether or no a modus vivendi shall be secured to relieve the people of California from the incubus with which they are threatened.

Mr. FLINT. Assuming that may be true, and that the bill does provide relief for the Pacific coast, why can not the Senator devote his argument to that which would relieve the people of the Southern States? We are perfectly willing to do our part as far as we can to aid the people of the South with respect to any labor troubles they may have, but we do not care to have the matter of the Pacific coast controversy brought into a question of what may be best for the people of the Southern States.

Mr. TILLMAN. There is no real conflict, as I understand. The Pacific coast wants relief from the threatened invasion of Japanese laborers. The Southern States want the opportunity which now exists to remain, instead of taking it away by this bill, to induce a desirable class of white people to come to us to relieve our distress as far as labor goes, and also to give us more white people with which to combat negro domination. Why is it interfered with? Why not let South Carolina and the Southern States alone and let them get a few more white people down there?

We sympathize with the people of the Pacific coast. entirely willing to give them every possible relief in this bill or in any other way that they desire. I will vote for an exclusion act to-morrow to keep the Japanese out, although I do not see why there should be such feeling against them. Senators say I am fanatical on the race question because I object to negroes governing us and that I ought to side with the white people of the Pacific coast in their objection to the Japanese. I am willing to let the Pacific coast people settle their own local affairs in their own way, and where they are threatened with an invasion of undesirable Mongolians I am willing to keep them out, if it brings war.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. LODGE. If we are going to discuss that question, I think we ought to do it with closed doors.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am perfectly willing to go behind closed

Mr. LODGE. Only on that phase of the question, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I say I am perfectly willing to go behind closed doors to get a heart-to-heart talk with some people here who have gone out and will not sit here and listen, no matter what is said about this bill. Orders have been received from the White House that it must go through just as it is. That is what I am objecting to.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Massachusetts will not contend that we can not in open session discuss the legality of this I think it is legal, and I am in favor of it.

Mr. LODGE. Not in the least. I did not refer to that. But there are certain phases of this question which I think the Senator from Maryland and all other Senators will see ought not to be discussed in public.

Mr. RAYNER. I do. I think it is a perfectly legal provision, I think it is a happy solution of a very difficult problem, and I think we ought to be able to discuss that question in open session.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly, as to the legality of it.

Mr. RAYNER. Yes. Mr. TILLMAN. An And the desirability of it, certainly. If we have to kowtow and pigeon toe and not be willing to discuss in the open our own vital national issues because some foreign nation is involved, we have got to a desperate pass. If the Senator from Massachusetts wants to go into secret session, he is perfectly welcome to it. I am willing.

Mr. LODGE. It depends entirely on the course of the debate. I am going to say what I think and believe. Mr. TILLMAN. I am going to call things by their names. I should like the Senator to decide one way or the other, because if we are going into secret session I want to know it now.

Mr. LODGE. I have no desire to go into secret session on any other phase of the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I understand that, but the two are involved. The two are linked together. Here is the Japanese provision, brought in here, tacked onto a dead bill. The Senator himself had no more idea that this bill would become a law until the Japanese question arose than he had of flying.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is totally mistaken on that point. I said yesterday that this bill would have been brought in in any event without the provision to which the Senator refers.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, the newspapers have not so informed I can get my information only from the newspapers

Mr. LODGE. The newspapers did not know what the conferees were doing or the work they were doing. It is a curious thing they did not.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is curious. They know pretty well everything else and a good many things that do not happen.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from South Carolina will pardon me, I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts knew that the conference committee was so deadlocked and their becoming otherwise was so hopeless that one of the Representatives with whom he is acquainted in the House of Representatives moved to discharge the conferees in order to break the deadlock.

Mr. LODGE. I know nothing about that. I know that this bill was ready for report days before the Japanese clause was suggested.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Georgia is a stickler for the rules, and I call his attention to the fact that under the rules of the Senate no reference can be made to what transpires in the House of Representatives.

Mr. LODGE. I was about to say that it is against the rule to discuss what transpires in the House of Representatives

Mr. BACON. I am very happy to be corrected by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very glad to have somebody else called to order besides myself.

The point I tried to make (and I am ready for any Senator to defend it, if he can or will) is that in providing a means of easement, of relief, from a grave, a serious, and somewhat dangerous situation on the Pacific coast, I can see no reason why a more grave and serious and dangerous situation in the South should not be thought of and cared for. Is there any Senator here prepared to discuss and to oppose the proposition that the six States beginning with South Carolina and bordering on the Gulf of Mexico need white people? I called attention to the fact the other day that there are 30,000 more negroes in those six States than there are whites. It looks to me that instead of our closing the doors to white people getting there, even as contract laborers, which I am not in favor of, the Senate had better relax the laws rather than tighten them up.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN, With pleasure, always.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says he is against the importation of contract labor, and in the same sentence he says the situation is such that we had better relax the immigration laws even so as to include contract labor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Rather than to continue to have a condition that is so dangerous that I dread to think what is coming.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then is the Senator in favor of contract labor, or is he not?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But he is in favor of relaxing the laws, even if it includes contract laborers?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am in favor of the law being like it is now, under which the solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor says that the commissioner of immigration of the State of South Carolina, acting as agent for the State, may go to work and induce white people to come to South Carolina to work as farmers or as manufacturers.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But I call the Senator's attention to his words. No doubt he did not intend it in that way, but his words were that while against the importation of contract labor, yet the situation in his section is such that he would be willing to relax the laws even though they included contract laborers.

Mr. TILLMAN. I said I would rather have them relaxed than tightened.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Even though it included contract labor. Those were the Senator's words, and I knew he did not intend to use them so

Mr. TILLMAN. I am sufficiently anxious to have more white people than there are colored people live in South Carolina that if we could make contracts in Europe with men to come there to work on the farm and to rent lands, and build up homes, I would be in favor of it, and I think this Government could better afford to spend $100,000,000 to bring them there than to close the doors as it is doing in this proposed law.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senator's revision of his position is that he thinks the colored situation so serious that to relieve it he is really in favor of bringing people over from Europe under labor contracts.

Mr. TILLMAN. To do certain kinds of work. I say I would rather see that idea prevail than to see this one prevail.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely wanted to get the Senator's idea. Now, let me ask the Senator this question—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

With pleasure.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator think that the arrangement which I suggested a moment ago to the Senator from Georgia-the Senator was in his seat and listening-is contract labor?

The Senator will have to recapitulate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I will. I refer to an arrangement made with foreign immigrants to come here and work at a certain place, where their expenses of passage and maintenance are paid, under an arrangement by which money is deducted from their salary to pay back the debt to the person who gets them to come here. Would the Senator say that such an arrangement as that is an arrangement of contract labor?

Mr. TILLMAN. I should, undoubtedly. That is not what obtains in South Carolina. It is not what is desired in South Carolina. It is not the practice now, and nobody wants to institute such a practice.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What kind of contract labor, then, did the Senator say he would be in favor of to relieve what he thinks is a very dangerous situation in his State?

Mr. TILLMAN. I have just indicated it. If we could get men in Europe to come here

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Under contract, the Senator says Mr. TILLMAN. Under contract, to go on certain plantations and rent lands or to farm them on shares or to work for wages, but to have them selected, so that when they got here they would not be an undesirable class of immigrants, but would be an addition to our civilization, by increasing the number of white people there. I would be willing to see that done, and I would be willing to see the Government of the United States inaugurate that scheme to put more white people in the South than are there now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Indiana wants to continue to catechise or cross-examine me, of course I will yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is extremely important, Mr. President, if the Senator does not object. I wish to ask the Senator one more question, and I feel compelled to ask it in view of his last response. He said he was in favor of making contracts with a desirable class of foreign immigrants to come here and take up a homestead of land or rent land or make a home on a plantation, etc. But is that the desire of the Senator and of the Senator from Georgia in their fight upon this conference report? Is not the whole controversy, as the Senator from Georgia stated it so many times, not only a desire but a neces-

Mr. TILLMAN. I want the Senator from Georgia to be here to answer for himself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from South Carolina, too: he is present. They said that the whole thing grew out of your crying necessity, and therefore the great desire for labor in your cotton mills.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; not with me. I do not know what the Senator from Georgia said. The mills in South Carolina need labor, but I am not concerned about them so much.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senator wants contract farmers, and the Senator from Georgia wants contract mill laborers. Mr. TILLMAN. What the Senator from South Carolina wants is that the people here who are subserving their own selfish interests should look at somebody else's interest a little. There is no need that we should all break our necks to help the Pacific coast and turn around and lock the door against the South. I want to help the Pacific coast. I am willing to go as far as any man in doing that and to relieve the situation there. But when we have an opportunity under the law as it now is to get some easement or promise of easement in the next ten years in the conditions in the South, which are so terrible, I do not see why the Senator from Massachusetts and those who believe with him should lock the door on us in that part of the country.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator yield to me?
Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. FULTON. The Senator speaks of resorting to expedients or at least to remedial legislation for the protection of the Pacific coast. I have not heard all the Senator's remarks and therefore

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator missed a great deal.

Mr. FULTON. I have no doubt of it; I always do when I miss hearing the Senator. But would the Senator be willing to admit the class of laborers which the Pacific coast people seek to have excluded in order to supply the labor market in which he is particularly interested? The Senator may have explained that when I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I have not touched on that question; but we have got one race question down there, and we do not You have got one on the Pacific coast, and we want any more.

sympathize with you.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator, then, is not willing that the class over is beening out should come to of laborers that the Pacific coast is keeping out should come to He would not have them come to relieve his want?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I want white men; more white men.
Mr. FULTON. I would then suggest that the Senator ought not to complain of the demand on the Pacific coast.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not complaining. I am indorsing the general purpose of the amendment which provides relief to the Pacific coast. I am only objecting to incorporating in the same law a new provision which closes us of the South out from any chance of getting more white people. That is what I object to.

I mentioned a little while ago the genesis of this, what we will call the "Pacific coast amendment." I want to read briefly from yesterday's New York Sun a dispatch from Washington:

WASHINGTON, February 13.

Washington, February 13.

After all the war talk and labor agitation, the international and domestic problem involved in the discrimination against Japanese on the Pacific coast is to be adjusted in a manner apparently satisfactory to everybody concerned. To Secretary Root is attributed the chief credit for the suggestion, of which the Sun told this morning, that the danger threatened through the immigration of Japanese subjects to the United States could be averted by a simple amendment to the pending immigration bill vesting the President with authority to forbid Japanese, or the subjects or citizens of any country, to enter the continental limits of the United States whenever their presence may become a "detriment to labor conditions."

The amendment was agreed to by the conferees of the Senate and House on the immigration bill and was reported to the Senate to-day as a proposed addition to that measure. While the amendment is construed to be new legislation and, therefore, not properly within the authority of a conference committee to propose, the desire for an adjustment of the Japanese difficulty is so strong in Congress that it is not likely that a point of order will be made against it.

Mayor Schmitz and the San Francisco school board, who came here at President Roosevelt's invitation to assist in the effort to dispose of the threatened differences with Japan, are satisfied with the solution provided for by the amendment. They had another conference with President Roosevelt and Secretary Root this afternoon, and some of them afterwards expressed themselves as delighted over the outcome.

Later on in the dispatch we find the following:

The text of the proposed amendment has been cabled to Tokyo, where an effort is probably being made to obtain an understanding with the Japanese Government that it will be satisfactory to that Government if the segregation of Japanese pupils from white pupils in the San Francisco schools is discontinued. A formal agreement of some sort with Japan under which the emigration of Japanese subjects to American possessions will be restricted will probably be an outcome of the amendment pending before Congress.

That is, to-day.

Between now and Friday the President will have conferences with Senator Aldrich, Senator Lodge, Speaker Cannon, and other leaders, and hopes that these will be so satisfactory that when Mayor Schmitz and his associates call at the White House on Friday afternoon he will be able to give them assurances that the amendment will be adopted. The San Franciscans are willing to give a promise that separate schools for Japanese will be built at convenient places, but they will modify the segregation order, if Japan desires, to the extent of permitting Japanese under a certain age to attend the white schools. It is expected that by Friday Secretary Root will have received sufficient assurances from Tokyo to justify the adoption of the amendment.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say that I recognize the gravity of the situation so far as Japan goes. I have great admiration for the Japanese people. If I ever sympathized with any nation in war—and I confess my heart used to go out to the Boers in the troubles with England—I certainly was with the Japanese side in the war with Russia, because I thought they were imposed upon, and had been driven, as it were, to the wall, and had to fight. But when I find that the great principles of local self-government, the fundamental principle of American liberty, is involved here, the purely police regulations of a State, without anything in the treaty with Japan involving the necessity or giving opportunity for Japan to say that the Californians have done something contrary to the treaty, as I understand it—I say I resent this tendency of the man at the White House taking it upon himself to meddle with everything in the United States. There would have been no issue of any serious moment, in my judgment, but for the President's message

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. TILLMAN. Always, with pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to say to my friend from South Carolina that I find nothing in the conference report which refers to Japan or any other oriental nation. The question whether the children of Japanese parents are entitled to the public schools of San Francisco is now pending in the courts of the country for a judicial determination, the same as the courts may determine whether any law we may pass here is constitu-tional or not. If it is decided that the treaty provisions have exceeded that which was delegated to the Government under the Constitution, they will of course be declared null and void.

Therefore I want to say to my friend, in addition, that it seems to me this provision is in the interest of the people of the It permits a desirable class of immigrants to come into this country and to go into South Carolina and assist him and his friends in developing the great resources of that State.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now the Senator has demonstrated how bad it is to come into the Chamber and participate in a debate the preceding part of which he has not heard.

Mr. PERKINS. My apology is that I have been working on the river and harbor bill to get an appropriation for South Carolina placed in that measure. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. After such a gracious statement as that I will of course have to apologize to my friend from California. was calling attention to the fact that with my old-fogy notions it is not a right thing to do for the President to call in question the right of a State to regulate its own schools in its own way. That is what I was saying. I sympathize to the limit with the attitude of the people of California and the Pacific coast in their desire and purpose. I hope to see that they shall manage their local affairs to suit themselves and not to suit anybody in Washington or anywhere else.

As far as enabling the people of the South to get desirable immigrants, if the Senator had been here he would see that the purpose of the bill as it has been amended in conference is to keep a single solitary white man from getting down there—I mean in the eastern end of the South. I suppose some of them will go to Texas, because that new country is all rich land that has not been worn out and plowed and skinned, like my

State and Georgia and Alabama have been.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, my friend is so brilliant I will have to let him come in.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator says that the land in his State has been plowed and skinned, etc. Is that the kind of land that the Senator wanted to make a contract with foreign immigrants to come and make farms out of?

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator knew anything about farming, which he does not, he would know that any land that was originally good can always be made good again, under wise and judicious agriculture, and pay a profit.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator said that some immigrants might go to Texas, because there was new land there, but they would not come to his State because the land there was worn out. He said a moment ago the kind of labor he wanted was contract labor to go out there and rent farms and build up plantations. I was asking whether that was the kind of land to which he invited them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator know that we have possibly half of our land that has never been plowed at all?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then the Senator was not accurate a

Mr. TILLMAN. We have poor land that has been worn out and skinned and washed away. We have both kinds.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And the Senator said a moment ago that they would go to Texas because there is new land, and they would not come to his State because it did not have land except skinned land or worn-out land.

Mr., TILLMAN. The main reason why they will not come there is because there are so many negroes. They do not like to go where there is so much color to the situation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now it is the negroes. A moment ago it was skinned land and now it is the negroes-skinned negroes. Mr. TILLMAN. Is there anything else which my brilliant friend wants to put in?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; but, Mr. President, quite seriously, the question is what kind of labor it is. The Senator from Georgia is now in his seat.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Georgia can answer the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Both Senators are applying for more white labor in the South. What kind of white labor is it?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am applying for more white men, and if they come there with money enough to buy farms of their own, as some of them have already done, and to set up a home on their own hook and become good South Carolinians, what have you got to say about it?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When the Senator says white men he certainly means white laborers. He does not mean white idlers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call attention to the rule which requires a Senator interrupting another Senator to address the Chair and get permission

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken, and the Chair will enforce the rule. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. PEYFERICE I with the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that when I rose I addressed the Chair and got the permission of the Senator from South Carolina to ask him a

The Senator from Georgia, and the Senator from South Carolina also, are contending here against this bill because they it prevents the South from getting more labor, and the Senator from Georgia yesterday most impressively pointed out that by reason of the lack of this labor, not on the farms, skinned or otherwise, but in the mills, 20 per cent of those mills were idle.

Mr. TILLMAN.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; the spindles in the mills.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from South Carolina said to-day that rather than make the law so rigid he would be in favor of its relaxation even to include contract labor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. BACON. The Senator from Indiana has misquoted me. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly. Mr. BACON. The Senator from Indiana has misquoted me. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to correct the Senator from Indiana

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.
Mr. BACON. The Senator from Indiana stated that I said that 20 per cent of the mills in the South were idle. said was that 20 per cent of the spindles in the South were idle—a very different thing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Well, spindles.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I had started to say something about the provision of this bill which relates to the Japanese question, and I had progressed far enough to announce my belief that anything relating to schools and local affairs of that kind ought to be settled by the people interested, and that as to all matters affecting the entry into this country of an undesirable class of immigrants, the people interested ought to settle that in large measure, coupled, of course, with the general policy of the nation.

We have had four race problems as a people. We dealt with the Indians, or, rather, our grandfathers did, and where are they? The Indians owned the country, if possession gives title; but practically all of them are dead. We got their lands. We settled that question to suit the selfish interests of the white people involved, which meant all the white people, North and

When the Chinese began to straggle across the Pacific in increased numbers, so much so in the early fifties and sixties that it became a menace and their competition was such, be cause they could undereat and outwork the Americans, that they were dangerous and undesirable, we settled that by the passage of the Chinese-exclusion act, which we passed in response to the demand of the white people who were interested.

We have had to deal with the Malays, the third race in the order of intelligence and capacity. We have settled them in the Philippines upon the basis of our own selfishness, and had no regard whatever for their rights or lives. We exploit their property and tax them without representation, doing any old thing which we see fit.

It is not worth while to mention the negroes. What I contend is that the people of the South ought to have the same consideration in dealing with their race question which the people of the North and of the South have had in dealing with the Indians, which the people of the Pacific coast have had in dealing with the Mongolians, and which the people of the United States are now exercising in dealing with the Malays; and when we seek, in our feebleness, to do that, environed by dangers and difficulties, and are trying to encourage more white people to come here and settle, Massachusetts steps to the front with resolutions of inquiry, and Massachusetts stands here as the sponsor for the doctrine that contract labor must not be admitted into the South, forsooth, because the Senator from that State has a large constituency of intelligent and good people who do not want the door thrown wide open for the admission into this country of European paupers to enter into competition in the labor market. We do not want European paupers to come into the South. So far as I am concerned, there are So far as I am concerned, there are certain countries in Europe from which I never would admit a solitary man. It is not worth while to mention them. We are trying to sift our immigration in South Carolina. very well satisfied with the people we have got there; and we shall welcome any of that stock. We can get those people, and we are trying to get them under this bill—a little driblet; we had, all told, 468, I think on the first shipload and 150 on the second. We have only had two ships come to Charleston with immigrants. The solicitor of the Department of Commerce and Labor has told us that the methods pursued in getting these to come were not unlawful; but the Senator from Massachusetts has taken the law, and, in his holy zeal to keep out contract labor, he tries to shut the door and lock it and throw the key away. "If you want anybody, come North to the slums of our cities and get the scabs and riffraff and the seum that we do not want." We of the South would rather you would keep them; we do not want them either; and so long as they continue to pour across the Atlantic in the hordes that are now coming—a million a year—if we can not get better ones, you may lock the door and throw the key away.

There is one other phase to which I wish to advert, but before I leave the part of the subject to which I have been addressing myself I wish to say that I have just had two telegrams handed to me, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHARLESTON, S. C., February 15.

Senator B. R. TILLMAN, Washington, D. C.:

Washington, D. C.:

Any change immigration law this time tremendous disaster to entire South, especially South Carolina. Industries starving and fields neglected for want of labor; negroes going North; South taking steps under Secretary Strauss's interpretation present laws. Investigation shows impracticable begin movement otherwise; immigrants in Europe understand by America only New York and Baltimore. South is black district to them. By Southern States inducing immigration direct to southern ports for one or two years changes in law would not make so much difference. Please fight matter with every possible resource.

R. M. Rhett, Mayor.

COLUMBIA, S. C., February 15.

COLUMBIA, S. C., February 15.

Hon. Ben. R. Tillman,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I note with gratification your action yesterday in regard to immigration bill in protecting the interests of this State and the South Southern Association, of which I am president, favors all proper restrictions, but it is vital to the material interests of the South that the clause relating to States and Territories, upon which this State's course has been based and the Straus decision has been rendered, be not changed in any way whatsoever.

D. C. Heyward,

D. C. Heyward,
President Immigration and Industrial Association.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will state that D. C. Heyward is our retiring governor. He only went out of office in January after four years' service.

If the Senator will allow me-Mr. LODGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The clause to which Governor Heyward refers has not been modified or altered in the slightest degree.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], I think, demonstrated a while ago that it had been modified very materially

Mr. LODGE. It has not been touched.

Mr. TILLMAN. And I think he demonstrated that it was so seriously changed that the opportunities of Commissioner Watson, or any other immigration officer like him in the South going to Europe and inducing people to go to the Southern States, is barred or cut off entirely

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do. Mr. LODGE. The existing law now provides:

Provided, That this section shall not apply to States or Territories, the District of Columbia, or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States advertising the inducements they offer for immigration thereto, respectively.

And that is the exact clause in the conference report.

Mr. TILLMAN. But, Mr. President, the Senator also incorporated in the conference report a definition of contract labor, which is not in the existing law, as has just been demonstrated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner]. The bill, as it is now presented to the Senate, if it should pass and become a law, will forbid absolutely all chance of the South getting a solitary immigrant.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator permit me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.
Mr. LODGE. The definition in the existing law is:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation in any manner whatsoever to prepay the transportation or in any way to assist or encourage the importation or migration of any alien into the United States, in pursuance of any offer, solicitation, promise, or agreement, parol or special, expressed or implied, made previous to the importation of such alien to perform labor or service of any kind, skilled or unskilled, in the United States.

That has been simply transferred to section 2 of the bill as reported by the conference committee, where the language used

Persons hereinafter called "contract laborers," who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me for a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly. Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] correctly states that the clause with reference to States and Territories has not been changed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course I knew that.

Mr. BACON. But the Senator from Massachusetts failed to state the fact that in another part of this proposed law it is so arranged that, even if a commissioner goes and secures immigrants to come, not one of them can land on the shores of this country; in other words, they would be met and turned back.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I desire to call attention to another fact. The Senator from Massachusetts now contends that there has been no change in existing law in that particular, and yet those of us who heard him to-day will remember the fact that he justified this proposed law upon the ground that it was necessary to strike down the law as construed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor and as practiced by the State of South Carolina, else it would result in the inundation of this country, not only of South Carolina and the South generally, parts of the country, with labor procured by means of the machinery thus provided. Mr. LODGE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do. Mr. LODGE. I now ask the Senator if he will read the clause to which he refers?

Mr. BACON. I will do so with pleasure; but, before doing so, in order that the statement may be complete, I will say that the provision of the existing law under which the South Carolina commissioner proceeded was one under which he accepted of certain moneys contributed by an association in South Carolina, he himself being an officer of the State, and the employment of that money in paying the necessary expenses in communicating with the parties proposed to be imported from Europe and in paying their expenses to this country. In other words, the money was paid indirectly to those parties by a certain association, although it went through the hands of the officer of that State. On page 18 of the report-

Mr. LODGE. I hope when the Senator reads it that he will indicate the part which is in the existing law that is not found in the conference report.

Mr. BACON. Yes; I will state the part of the proposed law which affects that, and then I will read it in connection afterwards with the law as it now stands. This language is in the conference report:

And that said ticket or passage was not paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, either directly or indirectly.

In other words, that nobody shall be allowed to land who was induced to come or had a ticket furnished or his passage paid for, either directly or indirectly, by any association, to put it in brief form. The language of the law, as it now stands in the enumeration of those who are excluded and prohibited from landing in this country, is this:

Any person

This is the law as it now stands-

Any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes.

"The foregoing excluded classes" being persons of unsound mind or unsound body or those who are brought here for immoral purposes

Mr. LODGE and Mr. SPOONER. And contract laborers. Mr. BACON. Very well; contract laborers, if you please. Mr. LODGE. That is another of the excluded classes.

Mr. BACON. Well, the Department holds that this was not in conflict with the law as it now stands. That is the ruling that we stand on, and which we are authorized to accept as the correct ruling until it has been reversed by higher authority.

Mr. LODGE. That is the clause the Senator objects to

Mr. BACON. All I ask is that the law shall stay as it is now and not be changed. If the Senator does not wish to change that ruling, why does he wish to change the law? Can it be, except for the purpose avowed by him here to-day, that by the change of the law he understood we would strike out that provision of it? There is no escape from it.

I suggested, Mr. President, in order to relieve the matter of doubt, in order that it might be shown that it did not apply to a State, to leave the language of the law just as it is proposed here in the portion which I have read, and then add-

Unless so paid-

That is, the ticket-

Unless so paid through or by the official or agent or representative of

The Senator from Massachusetts is unwilling to accept that language, because if that language were added it would restore the operation of the law to where it is now.

Mr. LODGE. If that language were added

And the Senator is not willing for it to be re-Mr. BACON. stored where it is now; in other words, he wishes to destroy it.

Mr. LODGE. Well, the objection to that amendment of the Senator from Georgia is that if it were adopted the contractlabor laws of this country would be waste paper.

Mr. BACON. Exactly, as the Senator says Mr. LODGE. The contract-labor laws we The contract-labor laws would be destroyed. The issue is plain.

Mr. BACON. If it were adopted it would leave the law as it is now

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. Mr. BACON. I say it would, because that is the way it is construed now; but if not adopted, the law is overturned as it is now construed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Massachusetts answer me a question before he leaves the Chamber?
Mr. LODGE. With pleasure.
Mr. TILLMAN. Has the contract-labor law been changed in this bill at all; and if so, in what particular?

Mr. LODGE. I think it has been strengthened.

Mr. TILLMAN. I know; but in what particular? Mr. LODGE. I think it has been strengthened by making it more explicit; that is all.

Mr. TILLMAN. And making it say that a State agent can not go to Europe and get immigrants to come here?

Mr. LODGE. On anything but State money.

Mr. BACON. Very well; that shows it.
Mr. LODGE. I hope it will exclude that. I hope it will prevent manufacturers or any other employers of labor from bringing in contract labor under any pretense.

Mr. TILLMAN. Suppose there might be a partial contribution without any contract at all or any agreement or understanding, such as was the case in South Carolina?

Mr. LODGE. There the tickets were agreed for.

Mr. TILLMAN. They were not bound, and the ruling of the solicitor and the facts brought to the attention of the Department, as I understand, warranted them in making the decision by reason of there being no binding agreement or understanding or contract, but merely having had the money for their passage furnished, and then being left free to enter into contract after they got here or not, or to go where they pleased.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do. Mr. LODGE. The agent was obliged to make a contract to return them if they were not satisfied, and there was an arrangement made to pay back the passage out of their wages.

Mr. TILLMAN. Where does the Senator get that fact? Mr. LODGE. The Senator can find it all in the opinion, I

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not in this opinion. Mr. LODGE. Yes; it is.

Mr. TILLMAN. In decision No. 111?

Mr. BACON. On the contrary, it is expressly stated that while such an arrangement was made it was canceled.

Mr. LODGE. I read from the top of page 4 of the decision:

And first satisfying the Belgian Government that the advertised scale of wages was correct and that any Belgians having just cause of dissatisfaction upon arrival would be returned at the expense of the State to their homes.

Out of the total number who emigrated, about twenty-two became dissatisfied and were returned to their homes at the expense of Commissioner Watson's fund.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me— The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. BACON. In order that I may not be misunderstood, what I referred to as having been canceled was the other part of the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts, as to the return of the passage money by its being taken out of That is expressly stated as having been canceled.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, then, he is opposed to the Southern States getting any immigrants unless they appropriate money out of their State treasuries and pay all the expenses?

Mr. LODGE. I am opposed to any State—not to the Southern States, for this law applies to the whole country—I am opposed to any State, under the guise of a State agent, allowing private individuals to bring contract labor into this country.

Mr. TILLMAN. For all practical purposes, Mr. President, the Senator might just as well have said he is opposed to the South doing this, because the northern cities, mainly York, are the ports of entry where all of the immigrant ships come in, where the immigrants land, and from which they are distributed, and the agents have only to go to Europe and distribute the advertising matter and get the interest of the foreigners enlisted in any given locality, with the incitement to emigrate. The stream of immigration has always been through New York and has gone west, along that isothermal line, to the other States which have advantages to offer, clear to the Pacific coast. They have gotten these immigrants naturally and inevitably, while the South, with no immigrant depots and no transoceanic lines of steamers bringing immigrants to one of its ports, is practically out of the game, with no chance in the world to get in. And when we discover, through the interpretation of the law as it now stands, that the State agent may induce a very small number of white people to come to us to get employment, under such conditions as the Commissioner-General of Immigration says are not unlawful, the Senator hurries to incorporate in the bill now pending an amendment which

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.
Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will permit me, I know he does not wish to state it incorrectly

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to be just and fair and honest.

The clause to which the Senator objects was Mr. LODGE. in the House bill, and not in the Senate bill. It was insisted on by the House conferees and was accepted by the Senate conferees. There was no allusion to the South Carolina case at all by anybody.
Mr. TILLMAN.

Mr. TILLMAN. No; you just quietly fixed up words and incorporated amendments into the law which dealt with the South Carolina case specifically and accomplished the object of exclusion, which is here urged and pressed. Mr. LODGE. Now, Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the Senator has any right to misrepresent what was done. I never knew about the South Carolina case until within a week. I never read the opinion of the Department until after that clause had been incorporated in the report. There was no trickery or underhand business

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not charged anything of that sort.

Mr. LODGE. It was put in there honestly. It was put in the House last year. It was in the House bill. It passed by the House last year. the House after full debate and was insisted on by the House conferees. I thought it improved the contract-labor law and assented to it for no other reason. When I assented to it I had not read a word about the South Carolina case, and I do not think I had ever heard of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Absolving the Senator from Massachusetts from any personal purpose or feeling or interest here, I still feel that I can say, with all the emphasis of which I am capable, that the effect desired to be obtained here is to close the door in the South and prevent the influx there of white immigra-

As to whether the conditions of the contract under which these six hundred and odd immigrants have come to our State were such as to make it undesirable that they should have been admitted or not, is not for me to say. I have already expressed my belief and feeling that contract labor, in the common acceptation of the term—that is, labor brought over from Europe to work in factories-is undesirable and ought to be excluded. I plant myself on that doctrine and shall not budge from it; but when we are so earnestly desiring here that we break up one of our rules and turn our backs on our precedents in the Senate to help the Pacific coast exclude Mongolians for the purpose of protecting the civilization of the white race on that coast, I can not see, for the life of me, why there should not be some concern and interest in enabling the white race of the South to get more white people to help protect our civilization and fill up our waste places.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from South Carolina permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts for enlightenment?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

I should like to ask the Senator from Massa-Mr. MALLORY. chusetts if, under his construction of this proposed law, a State would be prohibited from purchasing a ticket out of the State funds for an immigrant to come to the State?

There is nothing to prohibit a State doing that. Mr. TILLMAN. Suppose a State were to do it and then somebody else came along and reimbursed the State? of ways of beating the devil around the bush, and my friend from Massachusetts knows how to do it as well as anybody here. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. That is one way which the Senator from South Carolina has just suggested. I think that ought not to be done. What I want to prevent is the great employers of labor, directly or indirectly, getting contract labor. If a State chooses to induce immigration, that is the affair of the State, and it is excluded from the operation of the law.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suppose we understand the attitude of the Senator from Massachusetts, and I suppose that his attitude is that of his party, and that this report is to go through the Senate just like it is, without any change or amendment, accomplishing its twofold purpose. The one is to get relief for the people of the Pacific coast in regard to the Japanese question, and the other is to prohibit the Southern States from utilizing the present law in the way we have started to do in South Carolina under the decision of Secretary Straus.

I will devote myself for a few moments to another phase of this question which I intended to take up at the beginning, but owing to the debate which had preceded it was more apropos and in sequence of thought to take it up as I did at the other

I made the point of order yesterday that the provision on, page 17 in regard to Japanese, we will say, although their name is not mentioned, was outside the jurisdiction of the committee of conference, and that the conferees exceeded their authority. I want to call the attention of those Senators who will bear with me a little longer and pay attention to a case last March when the conferees, all of whom were members of the Judiciary Committee, brought in the conference report on the bill to punish the giving of information as to markets or reports or esti-The report is signed by C. D. CLARK, KNUTE Nelson, and C. A. Culberson, on the part of the Senate, and by John J. Jenkins, C. E. Littlefield, and H. D. Clayton, on the part of the House. It will be found on page 4024 of the RECORD, March 20, 1906. This is the statement of Mr. Clark, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I will say to the Senator from Colorado that the question of order in this report is this—

I will state that the committee had itself called the attention of the Senate to a doubt in its mind as to whether it had transcended its authority; and when the point of order was under consideration, Mr. Clark said:

I will say to the Senator from Colorado the question of order in the report is this: The bill as passed both Houses provides a punishment for the disclosure of knowledge and for speculation in matters affected by that knowledge which has been acquired in an official capacity. It was discovered by the conferees that Members of Congress in either House were not included. It was further ascertained that judicial decisions have been held time and again that Members of Congress are not officers of the United States, but are officers of the State governments. Therefore, while doubting their real power as a conference committee to insert this provision, they thought the objects and purposes of the bill clearly demanded such a provision, so they inserted "and Members of Congress," and ask the judgment of the two Houses upon that amendment.

Then, Mr. President, after considerable discussion in which the regularity of this action was debated and universally denied, simply because they had incorporated the four words "and Members of Congress" in a conference report, we got over the trouble by having the conferees withdraw the report on their own volition, and what finally became of it I do not know. do not know whether the bill ever became a law. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] is present, and perhaps he can enlighten me. He was interested in it.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark]

can tell.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Wyoming is not in his

can tell you.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Texas tell us what became of the conference report to which I have alluded, in which the conferees exceeded their authority while doing what everybody acknowledged to be a proper thing? But the Senate just stood up here and compelled them to take it away because they had broken the rule.

Mr. CULBERSON. My recollection, as I stated yesterday, is that the conference report was withdrawn in view of the point of order

Mr. TILLMAN. I knew it was withdrawn. What became of the bill? Did the bill die? Or did the conferees go back and take out the obnoxious words?

Mr. CULBERSON. The bill was re-formed in some particulars and returned to the Senate, and under a resolution authorizing the conferees to add the objectionable matter it passed the Senate and went to the House.

Mr. SPOONER. Did it pass the House? Mr. CULBERSON. No; it was defeated in the House. Mr. BACON. It passed the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. It passed the Senate. The Senate passed a resolution authorizing the conferees to insert the objectionable matter, which was done, and it then passed the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am bringing this up for the purpose of showing what has been the habit of the Senate in this respect.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator is exactly right. The Senate in that case refused to permit the conferees, without previous authority from the Senate, to obtrude upon the Senate this objectionable matter against the rule and against the point of order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a more feeling recollection of another instance where the conferees of the Senate and House transcended their power and overstepped its limitations

Senators will recall that in June last, when the rate bill had passed both Houses, the conferees, after laboring earnestly, brought in a report, to which they had all agreed, and in that report notice was given to the Senate that the conferees had exceeded their authority knowingly in incorporating two or three very slight amendments, mainly verbal, though there was one clause added which provided that the law should not go into effect until sixty days after its passage, a provision acknowledged by everybody to be absolutely necessary. It was so material a provision of law that as soon as the bill became a law by the adoption of the conference report with that stricken out, a joint resolution was introduced, and it passed both Houses, amending it in that particular.

I contend here, Mr. President, that this provision in regard to the Japanese, to which allusion has already been made and upon which I made the point of order yesterday, is entirely outside the jurisdiction of the conferees; that they never had authority to incorporate it; that that subject was never considered by either the House or the Senate in the separate bills passed last May and June; that the issue which brought it out only arose since December, when the President's message brought to us the knowledge of the attitude of Japan in regard to the school question in San Francisco. I read in the papers this morning a statement suggesting that the conference report as it has been brought here and as we are asked to pass it is not the work of the conferees at all, but that this amendment, as it is stated in the newspapers—it can be denied by the conferees if they see fit—is the work of the Secretary of State and that Mr. Root drew it. I suppose the President sent it or handed it to some of his friends among the conferees, and the matter comes to us as the authoritative action of the agents of the Senate in dealing with this important question, whereas all the evidence we have goes to show that this particular subject must be outside the jurisdiction of the conferees.

Last June, when the rate conference report was before the Senate, I made a statement as to the amendments which the Senate conferees had incorporated in the bill along with the House conferees, and I wish to have read a brief extract from the RECORD. I realize that under the ruling of the Chair and the discipline which obtains among our friends on the other side, while I might pile up evidence here as high as the Washington Monument and as solid in reasoning as the granite or the marble of which that is constructed, it would not change the result of the vote. The only way this conference report can be defeated—and I am not prepared to go that length is for us to debate it and to compel the action of the Senate to be delayed on it. It is not worth enough to make it worth my while to resort to any such procedure. Even if the South can not get recognition or protection or opportunity, whichever way you choose to put it, and everything that California wants is to go, while everything we do not want is to go, Senators of course will settle that with themselves in their consciences, if those ever bother them any. But this subject of conferees and their powers having been so recently before us, and, as I said, my individuality having been brought in as a sufferer for three days here last summer when I bore the brunt and was trying to explain and defend and apologize and get back a report which the Senate would not let me get out of here, because one Senator after another wanted to air himself and to indulge in criticism upon the effrontery and boldness of the conferees in going outside of their powers as recognized under the rules, and none more vigorously than the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge].

I send to the desk and ask to have read the extracts from the Congressional Record which I have marked.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. Hale. Well, Mr. President, I do not think that I am assuming too much when I say that the Senate evidently intends to send that report back to the conference committee.

Mr. Tillman. We expect that, Mr. President.

Mr. Hale. I think the Senator expects that. He has been here long and discerns the signs of the times. Now, I have no objection, if it can be understood by the Senate that when the report is sent back to the conference committee it shall be dispossessed of all items that involve new legislation, unconsidered and not adopted by either House—that is, that all new matter shall be struck from the bill—

Mr. Tillman. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. Hale. Let me complete my remarks.

Mr. Tillman. I was going to ask the Senator is he not assuming a good deal, if he will permit me to say so, when he undertakes to indicate the line of work that the conferees shall follow, when it is contrary to the rules for the Senate to instruct conferees? I think the conferees can be trusted to examine for themselves what are the rights of the Senate, as well as what are their powers and duties, and that they can also be trusted to perform those in good faith; and I object, and shall continue to object, to have the Senator from Maine undertake to indicate what he feels and intends that we shall do. I want the Senate to say that.

Mr. Hale. I have not indicated a single proposition which the committee of conference has injected into this report. The Senate, I say again, very evidently means that the report shall go back. Now, it can go back after spending a day here in debating and delaying appropriation bills. I do not pretend to say what the amendments are; the conferees know well enough what they have put in that is new matter. If the time of the taking effect of the legislation should not be for sixty days, in order that the machinery might be set going,

Mr. Tillman. It has to be discussed some day, and I do not see the difference between discussing it to-day and to-morrow. The conference may give rise to debate, but I do not think the Senator from Maine is justified in assuming that the Senate is going to do one thing or the other, and to instruct the conferees.

Mr. Hale. I do not propose to instruct the conferees.

Mr. Hale. I do not propose to instruct the conferees.

Mr. Hale. I do not propose to instruct the conferees.

Mr. Hale. I will bow, of course, to the will of the Senate.

Mr. Hale. I have no more interest in getting the business of the Senate done than any other Senator here. I said this morning that I thought it was good business to take up the appropriation bills and pass them. The consideration of the conference report can be proceeded with at any time. If the Senate wants to take it up this morning, I will withdraw my motion, and the Senator can move to proceed to the consideration of it.

Mr. Tillman. That is all I ask. If the Senate prefers to take up the naval appropriation bill, I certainly shall consent, and have no objection at all.

Mr. Lodge. Mr. President—

Mr. Tillman. Let me make the motion, and then—

Mr. Lodge. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. Tillman. There is a way to get the report back to the conferees. I would have asked to withdraw it but for the fact that the conferees can not get the report back except by unanimous consent. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The Vice-Pressident. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the bill which will be stated by title.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof,

Mr. TILLMAN. I think it is due the conferees and due the Senate that the conferees should make an explanation.

Mr. Hale. If I had known that this matter was to be debated, I would not have withdrawn my motion.

Mr. TILLMAN. It will not take three minutes.

Mr. FORAKER. It will take three minutes, and more than that. I want to make some remarks on this report before it is disposed of. I think we ought to express ourselves as to some of the changes made in the report, in order that the conferees may have the benefit of our views.

Mr. Hale. I wish to make a motion, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am in possession of the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am in possession of the floor.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am in possession of the floor.

The Vice-Pressibent. The Chair asked the Senator from South Carolina if he would yield to the Senator from Maine, and he yielded.

Mr. HALE. I can move at any time that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill. Evidently this matter is going to lead to debate, and I object to that.

Mr. Balley. The Senator from Maine, as he says, can make a motion to take up a bill, provided he has the floor. But he can not take a Senator off the floor when he is in charge of a bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The Vice-Pressibent. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to make my explanation first. However, I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The idea that we can discuss and dispose of this matter in three minutes had better be given up. There is a mass of new matter in three minutes had better be given up. There is a mass of new matter in three minutes had better be given up. There is a mass of new matter in three minutes had better be given up. There is a mass of new matter in the conference report to when new the new the new the new that the conference report to when he had not a suppreceed with the report until 2 o'clock.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will not do that, and that we may proceed with the report until 2 o'clock.

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to make an explanation, and then the Senate will do as it pleases, of course.

Mr. President, as a Senator who has been burned, so to speak, by the action of conferees exceeding their powers and authority, mention of which has been made several times by me in this body, I would be the last man to go beyond the rule that I have sought to have others obey—not to inject new matter or to exceed the powers of a conference committee which are ne in, and we take the responsibility. There can be no pretense of any deception, and if the Senate wants to take them out, I shall be glad to have them taken out.

Mr. Hale. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. Tillman. Let me get through.

I will say right now that while I have noted that a good deal of the personal equation enters into this question, and that there is some opposition, my view of a legislator's duty is not that he is to consider men, but measures, and to make a symmetrical and workable and properly adjusted law, and therefore we felt that we had the right to insert this clause. Therefore the Senate conferees agreed to the suggestion for an increase in the salary of the secretary, and for the appointment of an assistant secretary.

Mr. Hale. I think there is where the conference committee has gone beyond its power. When you come to the Commissioners, the matter was fairly in issue between the two Houses on the compensation of the Commissioners and the additional number. The House put in two more Commissioners and increased the salary. The Senate declined to increase it.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senate also declined to increase the number or the compensation of the Commissioners.

Mr. Hale. Then the committee has created a new office absolutely. The Senator of course understands—

Mr. TILLMAN. I want to call the Senator's attention and the attention of other Senators to the fact that the rules as to conference reports, as I have studied them—and I have done a little of it—are very The Mr.

ports, as I have studied them—and I have done a little of it—are very lax.

Mr. Hale. They ought not to be.

Mr. Tillman. I do not know what the other conferees will do. I know what I shall do in regard to this proposition.

That leaves only one question in which we clearly exceeded our power. That was on page 41, section 11, No. 51, where without authority or power we inserted the words "sixty days." We did it on the theory that it was utterly impossible for this bill to go into effect immediately without creating an immense amount of friction and disturbance in the working of the machinery of the railroads. All the railroads will have to prepare and publish their rates. It was impossible that this law should go into effect immediately. It would have been better, probably, to have called this an oversight, and to have passed a joint resolution, and probably it would have been better to have done the same thing with regard to other new matter which we injected. We intended at no time to do other than to explain and to throw ourselves upon the mercy of our colleagues and say, "Gentlemen, we have done what we think is proper and wise under the circumstances. If you want to stick by the letter of the rules, of course we will obey your orders."

Mr. Tillman Now Mr. President pursuing the line of

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, Mr. President, pursuing the line of argument, or the presentation of facts, rather, in regard to the jurisdiction and power of conferees, and in connection with the rate bill, I ask to have read the parts of the RECORD of June 6 which I have marked. I simply want to make the case full to show how Senators here can change their attitude; how at one session they will stand up and argue and contend and ride roughshod over some of us because we have done certain things, and then at the next session they will come here and do the very same thing they have criticised us for, veering around to the opposite extreme and do the thing they want. That is what I am trying to show.

Mr. BACON. It is an illustration of the old story found in Webster's blue spelling book, about the ox that was gored.
Mr. TILLMAN. It is; surely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. Patterson. Mr. President, we have been listening for nearly a day to a discussion on the subject of new matter introduced by the pending conference report. Is there anything to prohibit, or, in other words, is it not, after all, a matter for the Senate to pass upon? The Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] shakes his head and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] shakes his head. I desire to call the attention of the Chair and of the Senate to what I find in the Senate report upon the subject of conferences and conference reports. I have discovered upon reading it that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] played a very important part in having the rule to which I call the attention of the Senate established. This matter is found on page 16 of that report in reference to conferences and conference reports:

call the attention of the Senate established. This matter is found on page 16 of that report in reference to conferences and conference reports:

"29. Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House. (1414-1417.) (50th Cong., 1st sess., Sen. Jour., pp. 1064, 1065; 54th Cong., 2d sess., Sen. Jour., pp. 90, 91, 96.)"

That Is Rule XXIX.

"In the House, in case such matter is included, the conference report may be ruled out on a point of order. (See Rule 50, below.)

"In the Senate, in case such matter is included, the custom is to submit the question of order to the Senate."

Then there is the following note:

"Note.—In the Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, Vice-President Hobart, in overruling a point of order made on this ground against a conference report during its reading in the Senate, stated that the report having been adopted by one House and being now submitted for discussion and decision in the form of concurrence or disagreement, it is not in the province of the Chair during the progress of its presentation to decide that matter has been inserted which is new or not relevant, but that such questions should go before the Senate when it comes to vote on the adoption or rejection of the report. (55th Cong., 1st sess., Sen. Jour., pp. 171, 172; Cong. Rec., pp. 2780-2787.) See also Cong. Rec., pp. 2877, 56th Cong., 2d sess., when the Presiding Officer (Mr. Lodge in the chair) referred with approval to the foregoing decision of Vice-President Hobart, and stated that when a point of order is made on a conference report on the ground that new matter has been inserted, the Chair should submit the question to the Senate winstead of deciding it himself, as has been the custom in the House. No formal ruling was made in this case, however, as the conference report, after debate, was, by unanimous consent, rejected. (56th Cong., 2d sess., Cong. Rec., pp. 2826-2883.)"

As I read this, it can have no other meaning than that if the point is raised that something that is found in a conference report is new matter, when called to the attention of the Senate, the Senate itself acts upon it.

Mr. Hale. Undoubtedly.

Mr. Patterson. And if the Senate decides it is not, or whatever may be the reason or motive of the Senate, the Senate has it in its power to retain that matter in the bill.

Mr. Hale. Undoubtedly. That is only a matter of procedure; but the fundamental proposition which the Senator from Colorado has raised is that there shall be no new matter inserted. Our processes are different from those of the House. I think, in the prevailing tendency of conferces to usurp power, that we have got to adopt—and I hope we shall do so before this session ends—the House rule, that such insertions shall be subject to a point of order and ruled out; but we have not gone as far as that. We have said the conferces should not put in new matter and that the question shall be submitted to the Senate; but it does not change the underlying and absolutely necessary proposition that no new matter shall be incorporated by the conferees.

Mr. Lodge. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me a moment?

Mr. Patterson. Certainly.

Mr. Lodge. The general parliamentary law and also the practice of both Houses is, of course, that there shall be no new matter in a conference report—that is, no matter which has not been adopted by one of the two Houses.

In the House of Representatives the point of order lies, and the Chair

Mr. Lodge. The general parliamentary law and also the practice of both Houses is, of course, that there shall be no new matter in a conference report—that is, no matter which has not been adopted by one of the two Houses.

In the House of Representatives the point of order lies, and the Chair decides. If the Chair decides that the matter is new matter, and therefore out of order, the conference report is rejected by that finding of the Chair. All that any parliamentary body can do with a conference report is to accept it or reject it. It can not amend it. It must be either accepted or rejected.

The point of order, when it lies in the House and is ruled on by the Speaker and sustained, carries with it the rejection of the report, just as when the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole in the House sustains a point of order against a clause in an appropriation bill it carries with it the rejection of that clause.

Here, if the point of order is made, it has been held by Vice-President Hobart, in a ruling which I sustained later when I happened to be in the chair, that the point of order must be submitted to the Senate. Therefore it comes down to the Senate as a question whether they shall reject the conference report on the ground that there is new matter contained in it.

That is the state of the parliamentary law, as I understand it, in this body; but that does not change the fundamental parliamentary proposition that conference committees have no right to put into conference reports matter which has not been adopted by either House.

Mr. Hale. But when the Senator says the conferes have a right, when they believe that in order to make a measure effective they may put in new propositions, he is transferring the legislative power, which ought to be confined to the two bodies, to a conference committee that is only appointed and constituted not to newly legislate, but to consider differences between the two Houses.

The Senator is not a radical Senator; he is a conservative Senator, and he ought to see the wide and far-reaching and dangerous proposition which he has made, that the conferees can take upon themselves the power of legislation that only inheres in the two bodies.

Mr. Patterson. Let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts another question, then. Let us carry it to its logical conclusion. If the conferees make a report incorporating new matter, and the point of order is made that it is new matter, and the Senate votes it down, and then the motion is made to agree to the report, is not that, so far as the Senate is concerned, a part of the measure?

Mr. Lodge. Undoubtedly that is the case under the Senate's practice. Mr. Patterson. That is what I have been contending.

Mr. Lodge. Undoubtedly that is the case under the Senate's practice, and that is the reason, I think, our rules ought to be amended and made like the rules of the House of Representatives, so that if the point of order is sustained and it is held that it is new matter—of course if the Chair holds that it is not new matter, then it is not liable to rejection—but if it is new matter, and held to be new matter, that that mere fact shall reject the conference report and send it back. We are dealing in a conference with the work of both Houses, and we are not proposing that six representatives of those Houses shall be allowed to introduce new matter which neither House has ever adopted.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President. I appologize for having re-

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I apologize for having reminded Senators of the attitude they occupied six or seven months ago on this very question. As I said a little while ago, the fact that they now do not think the rules of the Senate sacred and that certain conferees under certain exigencies are at liberty to do any old thing that certain powerful individuals want "does not cut any ice," to use a slang phrase.

My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner] is showing how expert he is in slang by picking out those things which I thought were good English.

Mr. BACON. There is a good deal of slang that is good English.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course; that is what I knew.

Mr. President, I have called attention to the proviso on page 17 as new matter entirely outside of the jurisdiction of the conferees, and under the exposition of the powers of the conferees, as laid down by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] and others, this report ought to be sent back to the conference committee without instructions, because that is not admissible, but with the under-standing that they have exceeded their authority and that they will voluntarily take out these matters. some Senators are prepared to contend that this proviso is entirely permissible under the rules; that the subject-matter was being dealt with by the bill passed by the Senate and the House, and that the conferees had a right to put this in. It is in; whether it is there rightfully under the rule or not is a

I want to comment just briefly on one phrase in this proviso, going now to the merits. I have tried to make it very plain, but I sympathize with and am ready to go as far as any other Senator here in safeguarding the interests of the white people of the Pacific coast. If this proviso shall accomplish the re-lief which is expected and the easement of conditions, no one will be happier than I. But there is one phase of it here which leaves a bitter twang in the mouth, and that is where it says:

That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

I have never been on the Pacific coast-I have that pleasure in store-but I have read somewhere that the people of that part of our country are worse ridden or dominated and controlled by labor unions than any other section of the Union. Whether that be true or not does not matter; but taking it for granted as true, I ask why it is that the President of the United States should be permitted, if this becomes a law—and I know it is going to become a law-to dicker with labor unions, or be influenced and controlled by labor unions, or to make bar-gains with labor unions? Why should the interests of labor on the Pacific coast make it possible for the President to issue an Executive order to prohibit the landing of a certain class of immigrants? We ought to have a law regulating such things, and it ought not to be left to Executive discretion. There ought not to be any hint or suspicion of bargaining here for political

We have all heard (I do not know how true it may be) that in the last Presidential election an understanding was reached by those who had control of the campaign that if the Mormon vote went a certain way a certain colleague of ours whose seat is in question would be cared for, and we have heard it talked that the Chief Executive, who was the beneficiary of that vote, though he did not need it, has exerted himself to the utmost to carry out the agreement in using his influence to stave off a vote and to protect in every way he could the interests of the Senator who represents Utah.

These bargains of a political character are not conducive to the public welfare. I do not see why this language in regard to the passports on the Pacific coast, if we are to legislate at all, could not have been so framed that the President would not be involved, and why the whole extensive power and jurisdiction of the Executive should be extended, and the disposition here to shirk our responsibility as lawmakers and to turn everything over to the Executive should have an additional illustration.

I do not like it. I would not like it if we had a Democrat in the White House. I am sick and disgusted with this disposithe White House. tion on the part of the Senate and of Congress apparently-not so apparently either, but actually—to surrender everything into the keeping of the Executive, and leave it to the President by control of the patronage or some other influence, dread of his popularity and influence in their respective States, for fear that they might fare like our friend Wadsworth, of New York, who doubtless with great honesty made a fight for his view last session on the meat-packers' legislation, and fell outside of the breastworks because he dared oppose the Executive. I do not like that tendency in our national life. Of course I am like-

An infant crying in the night: An infant crying for the light, And with no language but a cry.

But all the same I have continued to cry or to exercise my right to comment on these degenerate days and these tendencies, this servility, this cowardice, and this unwillingness of representatives of the States here and at the other end of the Capitol to stand for their rights as a part of the Government and to exercise their proper share in the functions of governing this I have these feelings and I can not help expressing country. them.

Now, while, as I said, this provision might possibly be defended on the ground that it is germane and relevant and relates to the subject-matter about which the two Houses were in dispute, there is one provision in the bill that is so clearly extraneous and new and outside of the jurisdiction of the conferees that while it is a particularly legitimate and proper thing to do, and a very desirable thing to do, and one which we favor having done, it is not a question under the exposition of Messrs. HALE and Lodge and other doctors of parliamentary law here.

I call attention to section 42, which I shall have printed in my remarks without reading, dealing with the subject of air space between decks on immigrant steamers.

The section referred to is as follows:

space between decks on immigrant steamers.

The section referred to is as follows:

Sec. 42. It shall not be lawful for the master of a steamship or other vessel whereon emigrant passengers, or passengers other than cabin passengers, have been taken at any port or place in a foreign country or dominion (ports and places in foreign territory contignous to the United States excepted) to bring such vessel and passengers to any port or place in the United States unless the compartments, spaces, and accommodations hereinafter mentioned have been provided, allotted, maintained, and used for and by such passengers during the entire voyage; that is to say, in a steamship, the compartments or spaces, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods, shall be of sufficient dimensions to allow for each and every passenger carried or brought therein 18 clear superficial feet of deck allotted to his or her use, if the compartment or space is located on the main deck or on the first deck next below the main deck of the vessel, and 20 clear superficial feet of deck allotted to his or her use for each passenger carried or brought therein if the compartment or space is located on the second deck below the main deck of the vessel; Provided, That if the height between the lower passenger (exclusive of the side scuttles) through which light and air are admitted together to the lower passenger deck are less in size than in the proportion of 3 square feet to every 100 superficial feet on that deck than in the proportion of one passenger to every 30 clear superficial feet thereof; and it shall not be lawful to carry or bring passengers on any deck other than the decks above mentioned. And in sailing vessels such passengers shall be carried or brought only on the deck (not being an orlop deck) that is next below the main deck of the vessel, or in a poop or deck house constructed on the main deck; and the compartment or space, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods, shall be of sufficient dimensions to allow 110 cubic feet for each and every p better sanitation and conditions conducive to health in these steamships, but why put it in there when the rule forbids it go-We have been told by Senators HALE and LODGE in the debate which I have read, that, however desirable and legitimate and proper a thing may be, there is a legitimate and proper way to enact it into law, and that the conferees, as the Senator from Maine has stated—six men—can not exercise the function of legislation; but here six men have exercised functions of legislation, and I ask the Senator in charge of the bill, I ask his associate conferees, I ask any Member on the other side of the Chamber to deny that section 42 is not absolutely new and altogether apart from anything passed on by either House. [A pause.] Well, I am going to have an answer, either "yes" or no," and I will wait here an awfully long time until I get it.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I beg the Senator's pardon; I did not hear what he said.

Mr. TILLMAN. I made the point that section 42 is absolutely new, was not considered or dealt with by the bill as it passed the other House or the bill as it passed the Senate; that it was outside the jurisdiction of the conferees, and under the dispensation, as announced from the desk a little while ago, when the Senator was out of the Chamber, of those doctors of parliamentary practice here, who lecture us all, and presume to occupy the pulpit or the chair, and tell us what we ought to or what we can do, or what we can not do-I say this section 42 was outside of the jurisdiction of the conferees and has no business here.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. The Senator's question is so long that do not like to attempt to answer the whole of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then answer whatever part you want of it. Mr. DILLINGHAM. It was not dealt with in either House. Mr. TILLMAN. Therefore my deduction is that it was outside of the jurisdiction of the conference committee.

No, Mr. President, that is not the amendment. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate, except to explain that I think the Senator is mistaken, and to say that it came legitimately within the scope of both the bills which dealt with the entire statute on immigration.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, well, if the Senator takes the ground that these conferees have the power to change the entire statute or any part of it just as they see fit, whether it is new matter or not, that, of course, settles it.

Mr. LODGE. But the entire statute was before the conferees because the House bill and the Senate bill passed upon the whole statute.

Mr. TILLMAN.

The House bill carried in that body, and the Senate bill was to strike out all of the House bill and to insert the new Senate bill.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. The House bill carried the entire immigration statute from beginning to end. Mr. TILLMAN. And carried the acts of 1885 and 1882?

Mr. LODGE. No; carried the whole act of 1903.

Mr. TILLMAN. But the act of 1903 is not all of our legislation in relation to immigration.

Mr. LODGE. Yes, it is; all of it was consolidated in that legislation.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator is mistaken. Mr. LODGE. Everything except what related to contractlabor laws was consolidated in it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. GALLINGER. I rise, Mr. President, simply to say that I am astounded at the answer made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge]. This is new matter. It was in neither bill, and the conferees had no jurisdiction or authority, in my judgment, to place it in the conference report.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly. After such a crumb of comfort as that I have just received from the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Gallinger] I shall hope to get a whole chunk of comfort from the Senator from Georgia, [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. I want to call attention to the fact that section 42 is not an amendment of the existing immigration law, but is an amendment to the act of August 2, 1882, which relates to a different subject-matter altogether. It is an absolute amendment to a different section of the law.

Mr. LODGE. An amendment to the first section of the navigation act.

Mr. BACON. Yes Mr. TILLMAN. I Did the conference committee have the navigation act before it?

Mr. LODGE. It had not; but it had everything relating to immigrants, their exclusion, and everything relating to their health. Their exclusion, their acceptance, and everything was before us, and that part of the navigation act relating to the subject-matter. It could have been done by a section that had no relation to the navigation act; and it would have been better legislation

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

Mr. LODGE. It does not refer to the act in any way, but the language is taken from it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. This act does not purport to be an act regulating the carriage of immigrants.

Mr. LODGE. It does purport to do so.

Mr. BACON. But it is an act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea. The act of 1882 is not an act relating purely to immigration.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not.

But this act relates wholly to immigration. Mr. BACON.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; but my contention is that we had the right, the whole statute being before us, to add a clause re-Mr. LODGE. lating to the health of immigrants, how many immigrants a ship should bring, if we had chosen to do that. We arrange for the manifest of passengers, clearance papers, etc. There is hardly a section in the immigration act that does not modify the old navigation act of 1863 so far as it relates to immigrants.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. President, it is a distinct amendment of the Mr. BACON. act of 1882; and the evidence of it is that on the succeeding page there is a reference made to the act of 1882 to the effect that it shall continue in force until the date specified there, when this new law shall go into force. The Senator from South Carolina has the report before him, and he can read it; but there is no question in the world about the fact that it is an amendment entirely independent of the statute.

Mr. TILLMAN. Section 42 says:

This section shall take effect on January 1, 1909.

That is intended to give the owners of immigrant ships time to make the necessary changes in the spaces between decks and the air spaces which would be available for each person carried. The proviso to section 43 is as follows:

That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons or persons of Chinese descent, nor to repeal, alter, or amend section 6, chapter 453, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905, or prior to January 1, 1909, section 1 of the act approved August 2, 1882, entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea."

In other words, this provision continues in force existing law until 1909, and then this provision in section 43 will go into effect in 1909; and yet the Senator from Massachusetts tells us that the entire statute of navigation as to the regulation of ships was under the jurisdiction of the conferees. I am astonishedno; I shall not be astonished now at anything for which the Senator contends. Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think that those statutes mentioned are navigation statutes?

Mr. TILLMAN. I took it from the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]

Mr. LODGE. The navigation act was passed in 1863.

Mr. BACON. This act is August 7, 1882, and that is the one referred to here.

Mr. LODGE. No; there is no act referred to there.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will read it to him.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have just read it to him; but the Senator from Massachusetts, having changed front on the subject of the power of conferees, is showing the zeal which the poet says the new converts feel. He out-Herods Herod; and the Senator, having reversed himself, is going back at the rate of a thousand miles a minute.

The Senator is right.

Mr. LODGE. 1 knew the Senator when he had to. [Laughter.]
Mr. LODGE. I did not know that it was in the repealing consumed so much of its time. I have felt quite earnestly not so much about the substance of this bill, but as to the manner in which it is pressed on us here.

When the rate bill was brought in here with a few very slight amendments put in it by the conferees, as we thought in the interest of a better law and a more workable statute, in no sense changing the purpose of that bill, we were-I will not say abused, because that is not a proper word-but we were criticised and lectured ad nauseam for three whole days because we had dared to do this outrageous thing. We finally got the conference report away from the Senate and carried it back, when lo and behold, I discovered that there had been a change of feeling and purpose, apparently, on the part of some of the members of the conference committee, and we could not get the free-pass provision alone treated on that day, and that was the only thing the Senate found special fault with. struck out all the new matter we had put in. The row in the Senate had been on the free-pass provision. But when the second conference report came back we had mysterious changes in the agreement reached in the prior conference, by which the interests of the people were injured, and necessary and final provisions of the original law as the Senate had passed it and as the House had agreed to it were changed.

Well, we could not get the Senate to agree to our free pass provision the second time. We carried it back, not with instructions, but after enlightenment coming from lecturers, and, lo, and behold, when we got into the third conference another vital change was made, under which the Standard Oil Company, whose dealings with the people and with the country and the carriers and their competitors have been so graphically brought out in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission under what is known as the Tillman-Gillespie resolution—the Standard oil Company succeeded in getting a change in the conference report by which the words "common carrier" were changed to "railroad," and a very vital section of the law was emasculated so far as that corporation was concerned. That is the lated so far as that corporation was concerned. That is the section which provided that no public carrier should own or produce the articles which it transported. When we changed it and said that no "railroad" should own or produce the ar-ticles transported, the hold which we had on the Standard Oil Company slipped and was broken. So that great monopoly was aided very materially by this rumpus or racket in the Senate which sent the bill back to conference on the two or three little verbal amendments which we had put in.

I do not think—I would not be willing even to utter the suspicion—that there was anything sinister in the row that was kicked up over the power of the conferees then. I am only speaking of results which followed the return of this report to the conferees.

I will call attention to another thing. We had put into that rate bill a provision that it should not go into effect for sixty Our doctors on parliamentary law here objected to that as being outside of our jurisdiction.

Mr. SPOONER. What provision?

Mr. TILLMAN. The sixty-day provision which we had put into the rate bill, although the Senate recognized the wisdom of our having put it in by immediately passing a joint resolution having it take effect within sixty days. But there is pending in Chicago a lawsuit, involving the criminality and culpability of certain parties under the Elkins Act, in which it is contended by counsel for the defendants—that is, the persons we have been trying to punish—that the fact that we passed the rate bill one or two or three days before the joint resolution became a law repealed certain punitive clauses, and that, therefore, certain men are to go scot free.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Illinois?
Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.
Mr. HOPKINS. Is the Senator awar

Is the Senator aware of the fact that that question has been submitted to the United States district judge there, and that he has held that there is nothing in that con-

Mr. TILLMAN. No. I simply know I had letters from there making an inquiry as to how that hocus pocus was worked here.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator that a proposition of that kind was raised by one of the lawyers for the defense in the case suggested by the Senator from South Carolina. was argued, but Judge Landis, sitting as the trial judge, in an elaborate opinion, held that there was nothing in the point.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad he did not follow Judge Humphrey's bad example, and get himself into bad odor by reason of his judicial opinion.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the Senator said that before. Mr. TILLMAN. I am always glad to do anything for my friend from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. The question to which the Senator from South Carolina is addressing himself is one separate and dis-tinct from the merits of the pending measure embraced in the conference report.

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly. I am just wandering around. Mr. CARTER. I wish to make a suggestion, with the permission of the Senator from South Carolina, which is that many Senators with whom I have conferred are exceedingly anxious to ascertain the position of the Senate upon the question of the importation into a conference report of, beating the bushes, as it were, vital subject-matter not considered by either House of Congress. A vote taken upon this question conjointly with the presentation of the merits may result, I fear, in the defeat of this conference report.

It does seem to me that the Senate can not afford to go on record as establishing a precedent to the effect that conferees appointed by this body may interject into a conference report subject-matter of vital concern never considered by either House of Congress.

That question has been disposed of so frequently in this body that it does seem unnecessary to call attention to it again. The question of order should be in some manner presented separate and independent of the merits.

Favoring this bill in a general way, although taking exception to some of its provisions, but, in the main, approving it, I am perfectly free to say that if the approval of the bill involved the approval of the principle that a conference committee of this body can enact legislation presented in a conference report which has never been considered by either House of Congress, I should feel inclined to vote against the proposition. I consider the maintenance of the integrity of the proceedings of the Senate and the regularity of enacting legislation of such supreme importance to the body as to justify the rejection of any matter which necessarily involved in its enactment the approval of the proposition that three members of a conference committee could interject legislation into a conference report never considered by either House of Congress. I trust the committee will ex-

The old-time religion, And it's good enough for me.

During Mr. TILLMAN's speech,

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer a resolution in this connection, which I ask to have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill S. 4403 be instructed to present to the conferees an amendment providing for the exclusion of Japanese laborers and coolies from the United States and their Territories and insular possessions and the District of Columbia, to be effective January 1, 1908.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, sir. Mr. LODGE. Merely in reference to the resolution. I make the point of order that nothing can take precedence of the question on concurrence in the report.

Mr. FLINT. I ask to have the resolution read again.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from South Carolina, as understand, merely yielded to me to offer the resolution at is time. I do not desire to take him from the floor.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina

After the conclusion of Mr. TILLMAN's speech,

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to submit to the Senate the point of order made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] to the provision of section 1 of the bill, which I will read:

Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign Government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

The Senator from South Carolina has made the point of order that this provision is new matter, incorporated without authat this provision is new matter, incorporated without authority, and in violation of the rules of the Senate, not having been considered or passed upon by either House of Congress, and that it is therefore subject to the point of order. I ask the Chair to submit that question to the Senate for its de-

I will read the rule of the Senate, as announced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], although it has been read once or twice. It will, however, bear repetition:

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Lodge in the chair) referred with approval to the foregoing decision of Vice-President Hobart, and stated that when a point of order is made on a conference report on the ground that new matter has been inserted, the Chair should submit the question to the Senate Instead of deciding it himself, as has been the custom in the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has hitherto shown that a point of order will not lie against a conference report. If such point of order were to be sustained, it would have the effect of amending the report. This, under the well-settled practice of the Senate, can not be done. This is in entire harmony with the decision of Vice-President Hobart, to which reference is As the Chair has hitherto shown, he is clearly of the opinion that the objectionable matter, if such there is, may be considered by the Senate when it comes to vote upon the question of agreeing to the report. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the request of the Senator from Texas is not sanctioned by either the rules or practice of the Senate, and can not be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken upon the conference report and any other matter that may be properly associated with it to-morrow at 4 o'clock, and that debate, if there is to be any further debate on the subject, shall be commenced to-morrow immediately after the routine morning

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes. Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I have had no opportunity to confer with other Senators, and I therefore express only my individual view. I am perfectly willing that there shall be consent that the vote shall be taken to-morrow, but I do not like to fix an hour, because it frequently happens that debate is carried on up to a certain point and important considerations arise why something should be said by some Senator, and with a fixed hour he may be denied the opportunity.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before adjournment.

please restate his request?

Mr. BACON. I would suggest as an amendment, unless the conferees desire some other disposition be made of the report.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, well. Mr. BACON. That is understood, of course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the Senate vote upon the conference report and all questions properly arising with regard thereto be-fore the adjournment to-morrow, and that the debate upon the general subject be resumed at the close of the routine morning business to-morrow. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa, did the House agree to the Senate proposition stopping this business of making ambassadors of all the ministers, or did that ever get into the bill?

Mr. COUSINS. The Senate receded from that amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish they had agreed to it all around.

Mr. COUSINS. I think it is agreed that at the next session that will be enacted.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But in the meantime we are making ambassadors out of all of these ministers.

Mr. COUSINS. The very reason why this legislation was not had was that it was the best way to avoid a situation which might make another ambassador.

APPEALS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire the attention of the House from the fact that I desire their assistance this morning in direction of the Committee on the Judiciary as to what action should be taken with reference to the bill H. R. 15434. I desire to take the bill from the Speaker's table, with the Senate amendment, and call the attention of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15434) to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions.

The SPEAKER. This is a House bill with Senate amendment, on the Speaker's table, and is laid before the House. Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That a writ of error may be taken by and on behalf of the United States from the district or circuit courts to the Supreme Court or the circuit courts of appeals, as prescribed in an act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereof, in all criminal cases, in the following instances, to wit:

From a decision or judgment quashing, setting aside, or sustaining a demurrer to any indictment, or any count thereof, where the ground for such motion or demurrer is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the indictment is founded.

From a decision arresting a judgment of conviction for insufficiency of the indictment, where the ground of insufficiency thereof is the invalidity or construction of the statute upon which the same is founded. From the decision or judgment sustaining a special plea in bar, when the defendant has not been put in jeopardy.

Appeals or writs of error in all such cases shall be taken within thirty days, shall be diligently prosecuted, and shall have precedence over all other appealed cases.

Pending an appeal or writ of error by the United States the defendant shall be admitted to bail on his own recognizance: Provided, That if upon appeal or writ of error it shall be found that there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, a verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair,

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair, whether this can come up except by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly. It is a House bill with Senate amendments, on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BARTLETT. Without going to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Chair believes there is no charge on the Treasury.

Mr. JENKINS. No charge on the Treasury.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, is it proposed to consider this

The SPEAKER. The matter is before the House for such disposition as the House sees proper to make of it.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it is a very important matter, and we would like to have time to examine it a little.

Mr. JENKINS. I think the gentleman will be content with the statement I make. I propose to make a statement for the information of the House. I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is a duty I owe to the House to call public attention to this amendment.

On the 17th of April, 1906, this House passed House bill 15434, which simply permitted the United States in all criminal actions, where the judgment was in favor of the defendant, to appeal the case to the Supreme Court of the United States for the purpose of obtaining from that court its opinion in regard to any question of law involved in that particular case. That bill left the House, and after almost a year of incubating it has returned to this House. All after the enacting clause has been stricken out and an entirely new substitute presented to us. I would not make any reference to this matter if it were not for the fact that I saw in the public prints the statement that this bill was not thoroughly considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, that it practically amounted to nothing, and therefore it was necessary for learned men to get together for months in order to perfect this bill and give the people of this country what they had been demanding. I want to say here and now that if this Senate amendment had been drawn at the instance of any criminal in the United States, by the sharpest criminal lawyers in the United States, for the pose of avoiding just exactly what the President of the United States and the Department of Justice sought, they could not have been more successful. In other words, it will be absolutely impossible for the Supreme Court to pass upon any question that the President and the Department of Justice sought for in this matter.

Now, this bill that was passed by the House was not drawn by the Judiciary Committee, nor was it drawn by any member of that committee, but it was drawn by the Department of Justice after years of consideration. This bill was recommended by two or three Attorneys-General of the United States. considered by the Committee on the Judiciary with the greatest care, and was amended in a slight particular in order to make it apply to cases pending. As every gentleman on the floor of this House knows, it has been very urgently pressed by the Department of Justice and the President of the United States. The so-called "meat case" in Chicago prompted their efforts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House this morning to the bill that comes back from the Senate. bill that went out of this House gave the Government of the United States an opportunity to appeal in any criminal action where the judgment was adverse to the United States and in favor of the defendant, but it very carefully guarded the rights of the defendant by providing that he could not be further punished by the Government. In other words, when he was acquitted, either by the action of the jury or the direction of the judge, that terminated his connection with the case. The House bill, further, very wisely provided for a bill of exceptions, because without a bill of exceptions it would be absolutely impossible to present many questions of law to the Supreme Court. But now, Mr. Speaker, we find this morning upon the Speaker's table an amendment, not general but very special, which only proposes to give the Government an appeal in a very few cases in questions that may arise, and it would be utterly impossible to conceive any case where one of the questions provided for would get into the Supreme Court of the United States, particularizing in a few cases when an appeal might be taken, thereby excluding all others in which the United States might be interested.

Now, I have no particular feeling about it as far as I am concerned, but the Committee on the Judiciary, after hours of careful consideration, came to the conclusion that they would recommend to this House that, as provided in the House bill, the United States should have the right to go into the Supreme Court of the United States to have that court determine as to the constitutionality of or to place a proper construction upon any particular statute. As matters stood and stand to-day, it is within the power of a single judge at nisi prius to absolutely thwart the intention of Congress and the legislation of Congress by holding that under any particular statute it is impossible to punish a party, and he will go scot free, and it is also impossible for the Department of Justice to obtain a decision so that we may be advised as to the correct ruling that should be made in the particular case.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker-

I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. JENKINS.

Mr. GILBERT. I want to know what the amendment is to which the gentleman directs his remainder.

Mr. JENKINS. I will come to that. If any gentleman desires to read the Senate amendment in full it will be found on the Brown of vesterday morning. The amendpage 2888 of the Record of yesterday morning. The amendment that is sent here to the House absolutely limits the right of the Government to an appeal and prevents the consideration of just such a case as occurred in Chicago, because no provision is made for a bill of exceptions to pass upon a question of law on the facts arising on the trial. Now, I am not 'nterested either for or against the Chicago case, as far as that is concerned, but I call the attention of the House to it so that they can measure the value of this amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the House bill allow an appeal from rulings made during the trial before the jury in a case where the defendant was acquitted by the jury?

Mr. JENKINS. I will answer the gentleman by saying that the House bill provides for appeal in every criminal action in which the United States is a party where there was any question of law involved.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understood the gentleman to say that if the defendant was acquitted by the jury the House bill provided that the defendant should have no further concern with the appeal.

Mr. JENKINS. Yes. Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Who was to oppose the Government on appeal, if the defendant was acquitted?

Mr. JENKINS. That question is not involved here this morning. I suppose the defendant would not care anything further about it but the responsibility would be thrown on the Supreme Court of the United States to properly determine the question whether the defendant was represented or unrepresented.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. So that we may assume in such cases as that the argument would be ex parte on the part of the Government?

Mr. JENKINS. Possibly the gentleman is right. Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me?

Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that when the defendant pleads not guilty to an indictment by the United States Government he is then placed in jeopardy, and if he is placed in jeopardy

Mr. JENKINS. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that question is not involved in this case, and my answer one way or the other would not be binding. But I will answer the gentleman by saying that the House bill provides that if a judgment is for the defendant and against the United States in any case in which the United. States is a party, the United States can appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States for the purpose of obtaining an opinion of that court on any question of law in the case.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. would like to know if there is any motion before the House. will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if he desires to make a motion?

Mr. JENKINS. I have made a motion that the bill be taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; and the bill is taken from the Speaker's table, but no motion is made and nothing is pending before the House. Of course the gentleman is proceeding by unanimous I will ask him if he is going to make any motion?

Mr. JENKINS. I am going to make a motion when I get through with my explanation to the House. I said that I thought an explanation was due to the House this morning.

Mr. PAYNE. That is all right, but why not make the tion now?

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman from New York will wait, I will make the motion as soon as I make the explanation.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not make any point of order, but I do not see why the gentleman does not make his motion now.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. I suggest to the chairman of the committee that the language of the proviso in the original House bill about which the gentleman from Texas seems anxious to

If on such writ of error it shall be found there was error in the ruling of the court during the trial, the verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

The language of the Senate substitute with a similar proviso is as follows:

If upon an appeal on writ of error it shall be found there was error in the rulings of the court during the trial, the verdict in favor of the defendant shall not be set aside.

Mr. JENKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker, my main purposewant to answer the gentleman from New York-is to let the House know what is contained in this Senate amendment. want to emphasize the statement that it would be absolutely impossible for the United States to ever obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on any legal question involved in any case where the verdict or judgment was in favor of the defendant and against the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment provides that an appeal or a writ of error can issue to the court on appeal from the district court or from the circuit court of the United States where the action is tried. Now, I want to call the attention of the House to the danger lying in that amendment.

Let us suppose, for instance, a case where the Government is proceeding against the Standard Oil Company, we will say, or any other of the great corporations who have been violating the laws of the United States, that the defendant is convicted in the circuit court of the United States or in the district court of the United States, and then appeals to the circuit court of appeals and that that court reverses the judgment of the lower court. Under this Senate amendment the United States is precluded from taking any appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and we have to rest content with the opinion of that court of appeals.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman has before him the Senate amendment. Will he please read to us the clause that would prevent a retrial as he suggests?

Mr. JENKINS. I observe from the question addressed by the gentleman that the gentleman does not understand me.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman stated that if the Standard Oil Company or some other company had been put upon trial and convicted, and had taken the case up to the circuit court of appeals or the proper court of appeals, and there had been a reversal, there could be no further trial.

Mr. JENKINS. There could be no appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, I say, on the part of the Government of the United States. If the gentleman will read the Senate amendment he will discover that I am correct.

Mr. KEIFER. I have been trying to read it, but I wanted to know what particular clause warranted the gentleman in

Mr. JENKINS. Why, there is no clause.
Mr. KEIFER. Then it is the gentleman's interpretation of it. Mr. JENKINS. I am not interpreting it at all. There is no provision made for appeal in a case of that kind. The appeal is only permitted from the district court or from the circuit court, the court that tries the case, the nisi prius court, to the court of appeals, and if the case is there reversed such action is final and there is no appeal from that court.

Now, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the committee

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I must insist that the gentleman make his motion so that we may be under some rule of the House. I object to proceeding further by unanimous consent.

Mr. JENKINS. I am going to ask for unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman indicate then some time if he asks unanimous consent?

Mr. JENKINS. I think I can conclude in ten minutes. I want to say to the gentleman from New York-

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. That this is a very important question.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I have no objection to the gentleman proceeding for any reasonable time, but I desire to bring him somewhere within the rules of the House, so that the time can be limited and we can go on with other business.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman from New York wishes to object, I am content.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for ten minutes.

The gentleman from New York asks unani-The SPEAKER. mous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is uneasy on this proposition, but still I feel it my duty to call the attention of the House to this matter, notwithstanding the objections of the gentleman from New York, and I think perhaps if I were a Representative from that State I would object to any exposure of this kind. plause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have not the slightest objection to the gentleman proceeding. I have allowed him to proceed here for half an hour when he was clearly without the rules of the House. I have asked unanimous consent that he have all the time he said he needed, ten minutes. Why he should make any such insinuation is unknown to me, and he ought to know that there is no ground for it. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I am thankful to the gentleman from New York. It is the first privilege I have ever had from the leader of this House since I have been here. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I shall call attention to this matter, and I want to say in justification of my taking up the time here this morning that I felt I would not be treating this House right if I came in here and asked for concurrence or if I came in here and asked for disagreement and then sent this bill to conference without an explanation. I want this House to know, and we want the assistance of this House as to what we should do in this matter. If we are going to have an appeal on the part of the Government when it is defeated, we should have them in all cases, and I agree that in those cases the defendant should go free, but as I was interrupted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] I was trying to call the attention of the House to the imperfections of this bill. The Committee on the Judiciary having been criticised, I want to say that the committee acted very promptly and did not have very much time to consider this very important measure, but some other gentlemen have had since last April to consider it, and we find, as we enter the opening part of the Senate amendment, that it provides for a writ of error and that a writ of error only may be taken; but as we proceed and read down through the amendment we discover that they have interchangeably provided for an appeal or a writ of error.

Now, there can not be any necessity for both. Any gentleman familiar with legal proceedings knows that if the provision is made for the issuance of a writ of error it only brings up questions of law appearing on the record, and that is why I call attention to the case in Chicago, for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that if this case went to the Supreme Court of the United States under the Senate amendment it would be impossible to obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on the legal questions involved, and that disposed of the case.

The Senate amendment also provides for a writ of error from a decision as well as a judgment. Writs of error lie only to reverse a judgment, not intermediate or interlocutory ruling by the court. This would permit the United States, on any ruling by the judge, to take the case up before judgment. It certainly can not mean this.

And as every gentleman knows many cases of law arise only when presented in a bill of exceptions on the facts. Now, the only question of law involved in the so-called "Chicago case" grew out of the facts which were presented at the trial. Hence I say again, that under the Senate amendment the United States could not obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States on the very question which was involved in this so-called "Beef-Trust case," so it is of vital importance to this House to know that as far as this amendment is concerned, as the bill comes to us this morning, there is absolutely no value in the bill to the United States, and all of these important questions that ought to be passed upon by the Supreme Court can never reach the Supreme Court under the Senate amendment.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly. Mr. CRUMPACKER. In the Beef-Trust case in Chicago the facts were developed under a special plea in abatement, I think, and the Senate amendment provides for an appeal from the decision of the court in sustaining a plea of that kind. Would not that provision in the Senate amendment cover the decision in that Chicago case?

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I was only speaking, when I was interrupted, of the apparently careless way in which this Senate amendment was drawn. If the gentlemen will look over that amendment they will see that there is a provision there that the defendant shall be released on bail. It almost tempts me to say, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment could not have been very carefully considered outside of this House, because if the defendant is acquitted, what is the use of providing he shall be released on bail and released on his own recognizance, one of the most ridiculous things, it seems to me, that ever went into any measure, because our insistence is that if the defendant is acquitted and the Government wants the opinion of the Supreme Court on the particular question of law involved, that the defendant should go free not only on his own recognizance, but absolutely go free. Now, if under the Senate amendment he is to go free, why is there any necessity of providing that the defendant shall be released upon his own recognizance'

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. JENKINS. Certainly.
Mr. BONYNGE. Is not the purpose of that to keep two parties to the suit, so that when you get to the appellate court you will not have an absolutely moot case, to which there shall be only one party?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, answering the question of the gentleman from Colorado, I will simply say it does not make any difference to me whether it is a moot case or not; the Department of Justice and the President of the United States have asked that the House bill become a law. something has been introduced here to take the place of the House bill that absolutely prevents the Government from the protection demanded. I apprehend when the case reaches the Supreme Court of the United States and only one party represented, the Supreme Court of the United States will give the same careful consideration to the questions involved as the same careful consideration to the questions involved as though both sides were represented.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. JENKINS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin the advisability, as he is opposed to the amendment, of sending the hill to his committee.

of sending the bill to his committee.

Mr. JENKINS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize this further fact in regard to this amendment. I am not pursuing criminals; I am not speaking as a demagogue when I say as I have with reference to this matter, but I feel I am simply discharging the duty which I owe to my colleagues in this House to point out to them that if a party is convicted in the district or circuit court of the United States and that case is appealed by the defendant to the court of appeals and that case is reversed, it is absolutely impossible for the Government to take an appeal in that case and will have to be content with a judgment of the court of appeals, when it is the wish of the Administration and people of this country that the United States Supreme Court be permitted to pass upon all important questions of law that may be involved in any particular case when the judgment is for the defendant

Let us be honest in the discharge of this duty. A great many important legal questions in which the Government is vitally interested are liable to come daily before the courts. No single judge should be permitted to dispose of the rights of the Gov-ernment, but the Supreme Court of the United States should be permitted to give their views of the law for future guidance. All that the Government asks is when a case goes against the Government the question of law upon which the case is ruled should be settled by the Supreme Court, not in any manner affecting the rights of the defendant. This I insist the Senate amendment will not permit; that under the Senate amendment the very matter that the Government wants disposed of can never reach the Supreme Court. By such action we are practically granting an immunity to those charged with crime.

Mr. SULZER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. JENKINS. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move that the bill, with the Senate amendment, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

Mr. SULZER. I thought that the gentleman would do that.
Mr. JENKINS. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the bill and the Senate amendment be referred to the Committee on the Ju-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the bill, with Senate amendment, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. KEIFER. For the purpose of saying a word on this motion. I do not wish to occupy more than a moment's time. There seems to be an inference drawn that anybody that is against the distinguished chairman's

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. Well, not in the ordinary sense, and not on the general merits of the proposition. The desirability of reference as contradistinguished from the consideration of the question upon its merits may be, under the statutes of the House, debated.

It is not my desire, Mr. Speaker, to take more Mr. KEIFER.

than two or three minutes' time.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio have three minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I understand the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to say that the Senate amendment curtails the right of the General Government to take appeals. My understanding is that it specifies the cases in which appeals may be taken by the Government in cases of decisions against the Government, and that as compared with the bill that passed this House it stands in the relation of an enlargement of the right of such appeal. If I had time I could demonstrate that under the bill that was passed by the House there would be very little opportunity of appeal, because that bill provided that the Government should have the right of appeal in cases where the defendant has the right of appeal, or rather, as the House bill recites, "the same right of review by writ of error that is given the defendant, including the right to a bill of exceptions," and as I understand and recollect the law, in most, if not all, of the cases after decisions are made as to the validity of an indictment and decisions on special pleas in abatement the defendant has not the right of appeal at all. Certainly the defendant now has not the right to go up to a higher court until after his case has been tried before a jury and a finding against the defendant. The purpose of the proposed legislation is to secure appeals on behalf of the Federal Government in all such cases. So an examination, I think, of this amendment will show it is an enlargement rather than a curtailment of the power or of the right of the Government to appeal.

I am in favor of giving the Government a right of appeal in cases of decisions against the Government; but, of course, after a man has been put in jeopardy by having the jury sworn a decision against the Government can only be taken up for the purposes of getting a ruling of the higher court as a precedent in future trials, because, without any provision in the bill which we propose to pass, the Constitution stands for a final acquittal after a man has been put in jeopardy by having the jury sworn. Nothing we can say in this bill here, or in any bill we might pass, can ever require him to again be put upon trial, whether the decision of the trial court was right or wrong.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on referring the bill with Senate amendment to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. Olmsted in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract or in navy-vards, as hereinafter provided, one first-class battle ship similar in all essential characteristics and additional to the battle ship authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, plans and specifications for which last-named vessel have already been prepared and submitted by the Secretary of the Navy for the information of Congress, as required by the provisions of the aforesaid act.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 5 on page 52 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask the gentleman to state the purpose for which he wishes to return.

Mr. FOSS. I desire to offer an amendment.

UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman state his amend-

Mr. FOSS. I ask that it be read. A provision similar to this one went out on a point of order yesterday, made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], and I have a new provision to offer which meets with the approval of those who objected yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the amendment be reported. The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "eight," in line 5, page 52, the following: "Provided further, That hereafter the purchase of supplies and the procurement of services for all branches of the naval service may be made in open market in the manner common among business men, without formal contract or bond, when the aggregate of the amount required does not exceed $500, and when in the opinion of the proper administrative officers such limitation of amount is not designed to evade purchase under formal contract or bond, and equally or more advantageous terms can thereby be secured."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to recur to page 52, for the purpose of offering the amendment which has been reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois will be considered as having offered the amendment which has been reported. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the paragraph which was read on page 81.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, in lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "similar in essential characteristics and additional to the battle ship."

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this amendment will probably lead to some extended discussion, though not for an unusual time; and I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that we have an understanding as to the time to be occupied. It has been suggested that it be an hour on a side. I am not sure that length of time will be required.

Mr. FOSS. I will state to the gentleman that I doubt very much if we could use that time up on our side of the question; but if it is agreeable to him, I will agree to that proposition of one hour on each side, and ask unanimous consent that that time be given.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that there may be debate of one hour on either side on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FOSS. And that the time be controlled, one hour by the gentleman from Ohio and one hour by the chairman of the com-

The CHAIRMAN. And that the time be controlled one hour by the gentleman from Ohio and one hour by the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the committee. Is there objection?

Mr. WALDO. I have no objection, providing I may be given ten minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

Mr. FOSS. I do not know that I can give you ten minutes, but I will give you five. Mr. WALDO. Very we

Very well; I will take five.

Mr. HULL. Reserving the right to object, that would make it so that the whole time to be occupied could be occupied by one or two. It seems to me it would be much better to have it, if they desire it, so that the time could be allotted out. I do not want much time, but I should like to have some.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I think the gentleman is laboring under a false impression. There is no desire of anyone favoring the amendment to occupy all of the time.

Mr. HULL. I am not making any reflection upon the gentleman from Ohio or anyone. A gentleman addressing himself to this question could not have an extension of time without preventing others who want to address the House from having an opportunity to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to trespass upon the patience of the House by making any extended remarks. I should be merely repeating what has been said by others as well as myself if I occupied any considerable time. The object of this amendment is to make provision for no additional battle ship, but only for the one authorized at the last session of Congress. The paragraph to which the amendment is proposed authorizes two battle ships, the one included in the bill at the last session and the additional one provided for, or sought to be provided for, by this bill.

I may recapitulate briefly the grounds for favoring this amendment. That the inevitable tendency of advancing civilization is toward peace no one can deny. The most progressive peoples are more and more interested in the pursuits of industry and of science and in the rational enjoyment of life. It is not so easy for the nations of the earth to engage in war as formerly. Whenever conflicts occur the whole world is embroiled, currents of trade are interfered with, the orderly and peaceful development of nations is hampered, and so those countries not involved in threatening quarrels seek, indeed, insist, that other countries shall not take up the sword without great provocation. As another indication of this tendency, during one hundred years past more than 200 disputes, many of them of the most serious nature, have been settled by the peaceful means of arbitration. There is a growth of the sentiment for arbitration in every nation on earth, and those which are semi-civilized as well as those most enlightened have been willing that their controversies should be settled by the arbitrament of judges chosen from neutral peoples.

Then, again, the intolerable burden of maintaining large armies and navies, both by reason of its expense and because of the withdrawal of so many hundreds of thousands, millions even, of men from more congenial pursuits, must lead to a concert of action and a limitation of armaments. Why, according to some figures prepared for me by the Department of Labor, under the direction of Mr. Carroll D. Wright, the total expenditures in this country for the military and naval establishments in the years 1881 and 1882 were about $42,000,000, about twothirds being for the military establishment and the other onethird, or $14,000,000, for the naval establishment. In 1884 and 1885 the expenditure was even less. In 1887 it was again about $42,000,000. But now, after the lapse of twenty years, the total is approximately five times as much, or between $200,000,000 and $210,000,000, an increase inordinately out of proportion to that of other branches of the public service; and so I can not allow this occasion to pass without expressing my opposition to this ambitious and extravagant naval programme. some practical objections, however, which may be offered to these two battle ships. If I were to express my own personal opinion, it would be against either. No two experts familiar with the types of battle ships entirely agree on what that type should be. Some of very high authority favor boats of about 15,000 tons displacement—the old style. They point to the fact that even the Dreadnought, that terrible engine of destruction, has only two more 12-inch guns than the South Carolina, one of our battle ships now under construction. They claim greater service-ableness, as well as economy, for the smaller size, and allege that if the two ships proposed by this bill are constructed it will be necessary to replace those of the existing model with new and larger ships. On the other hand, there are those who would not stop with 20,000 tons, but favor 22,500, 25,000, and in conversation with a member of the Naval Committee a few days ago he hazarded the conjecture that the time would come when we would have battle ships of 50,000 tons displacement. Why this mad race for newer, heavier, and more experimental battle ships? Why this willingness that the ships of the past and of the present should be relegated to the scrap heap? The common sense of nations is not behind this policy. There is no form of construction in industry, in buildings, in any branch of enterprise, where there is the same disposition to embark in such doubtful experiments—experiments the result of which no one can tell. Thus, it would be well for us to pause, simply because of this difference of opinion in regard to naval construction and its efficiency. In addition to that, there are divers instruments of warfare in the way of submarines and other implements of destruction, which may make useless the most magnificent battle ship prepared to sail the seas.

In this bill there is an authorization for the expenditure of $3,000,000 for submarines. Again, what do we most need in our Navy? Not more battle ships, not more cruisers, not more submarines, but greater efficiency in those that we now have. Has not the construction of new ships gone far in advance of the thorough equipment and manning of those already in service? President Roosevelt, in his message a couple of years ago, pointed out that a battle ship imperfectly manned was worse than useless, and that if it went forth to battle it must merely be the victim of the attacks of the enemy, so that instead of helping the cause for which it sought to fight it would be a disadvantage. Every report here has called attention to the increasing difficulty in obtaining men sufficient to man our Navy. Every report of the Secretary of the Navy has called attention to the number of desertions. We have made provision for ships which will take five years, or until 1912, to complete. Instead of piling up more construction, would it not be well for us to pause and be sure that we can make available and powerful what we already have?

I think there would be little question but that this amendment would prevail if it were not for the unfortunate controversy or difference of opinion which has arisen with Japan. When the proposition for a large expansion of the Navy came up here in 1904 the vote in its favor was about two to one. At the last session of this Congress it was very much closer, and in a total vote of 240 there was only 30 majority in its favor, and on one test vote, indeed, there was a majority against it.

Are we to be frightened by the jingo talk of danger of contest with a friendly people? Japan has taken a new place among the nations of the earth, but a place which she can not maintain if she is seeking for conflict. Our traditional friendship with that Kingdom, our constant interest and aid in its development, the bonds of sympathy which have existed for fifty years, make it impossible that we should go to war one with the other. [Applause.] And when this sensational talk shall have subsided, as I am sure it will, we shall again look to Japan as one of the great circle of nations in which there is friendship for us and no thought of war.

Again, if you look at the report of the Naval Committee, it appears that our Navy is already about a half larger than that of Japan. Are our fears so intense that we must widen the gap? Indeed, when you compare the ships already built and add to them those which are building there will be a still greater difference, for the tonnage of our Navy will be 60 per cent larger than that of Japan.

Just a few words in conclusion. I have several times spoken of the duty, for such it may be called, resting upon this country to take the lead in all movements for peace. We can not afford to throw away our magnificent isolation, with its advantages, nor to have the opinion accepted that, with our form of government, which looks toward freedom and equality for each citizen, we are in the field for war and conflict in the same manner as the kingdoms and empires of the olden time or even those of the present day.

We have the respect of other nations. They look with admiration upon our growth, surprising in its increase of power and prosperity beyond all that is recorded in the history of progress. They depend upon us for supplies and many things essential both for peace and war. No nation on the globe is threatening us; no nation on the globe will think lightly of engaging in war with us. Mr. Webster, in referring to the wide dominion and military power of Great Britain, said:

Whose morning drumbeat, following the sun in its course and keeping pace with the hours, encircles the globe with one continuous unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.

Yet in England to-day King, prime minister, Parliament, and the great majority of her people are ready and anxious to stand with us in a movement for limitation of armaments. [Applause.] She does not exult in military glory, as in the day when Mr. Webster uttered this sentiment. To us belongs a higher mission. Our influence should encircle the globe with more benignant notes than martial strains. Wherever it may go, it should be with healing streams of commerce and of friendly intercourse, with the message of peace and good will, with the declaration that after all greatness does not consist so much in the strength of government as in the happiness and the opportunity of each individual—an object far preferable, far more to be desired than the triumphs of war or the empty glories of imperial dominion. [Loud applause.]

glories of imperial dominion. [Loud applause.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the question of what shall be our policy in relation to the increase of the Navy is one of the most serious problems that confronts the Government. We all agree that the Navy should be large enough to protect and maintain the prestige of the Government and to promote the natural and proper tendencies of the people, taking into consideration our relations with the civilized powers, our attitude toward the political development of the Western Hemisphere particularly, and the possibility of our being involved in war. But this statement of the question is general and somewhat speculative, and whether there ought to be any substantial increase of the present Navy or whether it should be maintained at the existing standard is one of judgment, to be determined upon most serious reflection. All of the maritime nations of the earth are rapidly increasing their naval power. At this time they seem to be vying with each other in the construction of large battle ships. The Dreadnought, recently built by Great Britain, was the king of war ships a year or so ago, but now Japan has a larger one, and Germany is contemplating the construction of one still larger. Where this contest will end is a question that time only can determine. There seems to be a contest of financial strength among the great powers of the

A strenuous and worthy effort is being made to bring The Hague Peace Tribunal into prominence and to concentrate the peace sentiment of the world toward promoting it as a great international settlement court. The Hague Tribunal is a permanent institution, and in the course of the years it will doubtless be looked to to furnish an adjustment of all international controversies, and while I am an ardent supporter of that great institution I doubt if anything in the near future can be done by treaty or convention toward limiting the military or naval armament of the world's powers. The whole question is one of sense of security, and when universal public opinion reigns omnipotent throughout the earth and becomes sufficiently beneficent to compel all governments to submit their differences to the arbitrament of reason, so that an intelligent world can see and feel that there is no need for the maintenance of great and burdensome naval and military establishments, there will be a reduction of armament, and not until then.

On the 11th day of January last President Roosevelt said upon the question of limiting the size of battle ships:

upon the question of limiting the size of battle ships:

But the strength of the Navy rests primarily upon its battle ships, and in building these battle ships it is imperatively necessary, from the standpoint alike of efficiency and economy, that they should be the very best of their kind. In my judgment we are not to be excused if we build any battle ship inferior to those now being built by other nations. I should be glad if a limitation could be put by international agreement to the size of battle ships hereafter to be built. I have found, however, that it will undoubtedly be impracticable to secure any such agreement in the near future. In the first-class navies generally these big battle ships have already been built or are now building. We can not afford to fall behind, and we shall fall behind if we fail to build first-class battle ships ourselves.

This Government during the last ton years has become a con-

This Government during the last ten years has become a conspicuous, if not a commanding, factor among the world's powers.

Its interests are involved in all of the great political and commercial movements of the earth, and in view of its present relations it is its imperative duty to construct and maintain such a navy as will enable it not only to hold, but to advance its position among the world's powers.

Until recently I had the belief that our Navy was large enough, but our assumption of the government of the Philippine Archipelago, devolving upon us responsibilities of a grave character, has very materially modified my opinion. That archipelago is 5,000 miles from the mainland—the seat of our invincible resources—and if we should ever become involved in war with a maritime power the theater of action would inevitably be in that vicinity. It would be impracticable, if not impossible, for us to transport any considerable land force and maintain it at such a distance from the continent, and the only security we have is in building and maintaining a navy of sufficient size and strength to enable us to properly defend our interests in that far-away region. The archipelago is a constant source of weakness; it is the sword of Damocles over the head of this Government. [Applause.]

The situation is of our own making, and we must meet it, whatever the cost may be. While I am not in favor of a navy the maintenance of which would be unduly burdensome upon the people of the country, I believe it to be the part of wisdom to establish such a naval armament as will protect us against imposition and attack and as will afford sufficient strength to the Government in its administration of the archipelago that there will be no temptation to foreign powers to enter into a controversy with a view of embarrassing or humiliating this Government. Were it not for the Philippine Archipelago, in my judgment, the Navy we already have would be abundantly sufficient for all of our reasonable needs, but we have the archipelago and are responsible for it, and we must provide ourselves to meet every emergency that arises. I can see no time, in the remote future even, when we may be relieved of our cares in that quarter of the globe, and they must always be considered in shaping our permanent policies.

I am in favor of the provision contained in the bill for the construction of the two additional battle ships and the smaller craft that it provides for.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with the most intense interest, as I always do listen, to the remarks of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. Burton]. In some matters of great public policy I consider him one of the great authorities in this country, but in other matters I know my colleague will I say that I sometimes yield to the opinion of higher authority, especially if the judgment of that higher authority happens to accord with my own. [Applause and laughter.] I differ, I regret to say, with my colleague upon this question. I believe that this question is not, "Shall we increase the Navy?" but "Shall we maintain it?" "Shall we keep the Navy in its present state of efficiency, or shall we allow it to recede?" In my judgment, if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is adopted, we will be in the attitude of announcing to the nations of the world that we have taken a backward If we do not follow the example of the great nations in building 20,000-ton battle ships, we shall be distinctly diminishing our authority as a world power. I have no ambition that Columbia should compete with Britannia in ruling the waves, nor have I any ambition any more than has the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crumpacker] for greater territorial aggrandizement, but I do insist that Columbia shall at least be allowed to patrol the waves in the defense of our merchant marine, and that we shall be in a position to protect our territorial possessions so long as we desire to keep them. [Applause.] I agree with my colleague that there is no probability of war with any other nation for years to come. I do not believe that there is any possibility of war in the near future, but I believe that we should be in a state of preparedness for it to-morrow. In my opinion, the way to avoid war to-morrow is to be prepared for it to-day. [Applause.] Is this the time to think of cutting down our Navy? We are engaged in the greatest engineering work ever attempted by any nation. We are engaged in what, in my opinion, is the greatest philanthropic work that was ever attempted by any nation. We are now, more than at any other time, endeavoring, in competition with all great nations, to open up the markets of the East for American-made Where would we be, what could we accomplish, in all great works if we did not have an efficient Navy? big battle ship as a fighting force has come to stay. The overwhelming weight of naval authority tells us that its equivalent as a fighting force can not be reproduced in smaller ships for anything like the money. What is good enough for other nations, in my opinion, is none too good for us. I therefore hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment of my colleague will not prevail. [Applause.]

WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, the determination of a naval policy should be based on the necessity for a navy and the possibility of being brought into contact with other countries. If there is no such possibility we are extremely foolish to expend the large amounts of money which are now being appropriated for our Navy. It could be better devoted to other purposes. But if there is any possibility of our having trouble with other nations, we might as well face that proposition and consider just exactly what our policy should be. We are seeing and are going to continue to see great industrial and military development in the East, and we should consider whether we are able to defend our commerce, our insular possessions, and our Pacific coast against every eastern country or probable combination of them. We are not in a satisfactory position in our relation with oriental countries, for we do not treat them as we treat the most-favored nation, but rather as we treat the leastfavored nation. It is undoubtedly true that our treatment of China, with the single exception of excluding cooly labor, has been more rational and fairer than the treatment which been accorded China by any other first-class power, but the fact remains that even though this be true, we do not consider questions which arise with China on the same plane that we do similar questions with other countries. We may naturally expect sooner or later that they will resent such treatment, and as for Japan, we are now in the midst of a decidedly live and irritating question which may at any time cause serious trouble. It is folly to attempt to delude ourselves with the idea that this is not serious. We are trying to build up a large trade with these eastern countries, and at the same time we announce to them that we are not going to give them the same privileges which we give European countries. The people of a large section of our country are opposed to the admission of Japanese labor, and this very morning we have read in the papers that a delegation representing these people are urging their position to the President. Japan has proved that it is a great military power, and the people of Japan and the Japanese Government may naturally be sensitive relative to any proposition which is going to militate against the Japanese people.

I am not for one moment considering the merits or demerits of this live question whether we should or should not limit Japanese labor; but if we are not going to do it, if we are not going to treat the Japanese as we treat the Hun and the Pole, and, in fact, every other people of Europe, then we may expect that Japan will resent it. They may not resent it with force now, but it is our duty to assume that they will later, and to prepare for just that possibility. As between the Japanese navy and our Navy to-day I believe we are prepared; but Japan is continuing to build. It has outlined a building policy. It has already one ship of the Dreadnought class, and it has recently given a contract for another; and if we do not maintain our present relative position we are simply flying in the face of Providence by neglecting to perform a duty which must be apparent to almost anyone, even to a professional peacemaker. If we do not perform that duty we shall deserve, and very likely have to face, a national humiliation greater than this country has ever felt.

Again, we know that we are in active competition with the great eastern nations for the trade of the world, and I hope very shortly to be in active competition with them for the world's Financial disagreements produce about nine-tenths commerce. of the differences between men, and in future commercial troubles will produce nine-tenths of the differences between civilized nations. That being the case, it is our business to consider whether we are in position to maintain our commercial rights, to protect our trade and our commerce against the great nations of Europe. If we are in that position, let us maintain it. If we are not in such a position, we should be up and doing without delay. I believe we are relatively in a good position, but every European nation of the first rank is increasing its navy. of them have definite building policies. I wish they would stop. I have no doubt a great majority of the Members of this House feel as I do. But until they do stop, or show some indication that they have reached the limit of their developing policy in the way of armament, we can not afford to follow any other course than to do as they are doing. If we do stop, we shall endanger the peace. If we keep on building, we shall, in all probability, keep the peace. And it is infinitely better, and cheaper for that matter, to prepare for war and not fight, than to go unprepared and be obliged to fight, and probably be humiliated as a result of the war.

I believe the Spanish war would have been impossible if Spain had comprehended our naval strength, and it would have been wiser, and even cheaper, for us to have maintained a navy twice as strong as was ours before 1898 rather than to have fought the war and brought on ourselves the expenses and troubles which our eastern possessions have brought us and will continue to bring us until we, in some honorable manner, manage to get rid of them. Let me state a little more definitely just what our class is as a naval power to-day. It has been the policy of England for many years to maintain a navy at least as strong as the navies of her two leading European competitors. England is in just about that position to-day. European nations which are her close competitors in naval strength are Germany and France, and treating relative strength on the basis of the battle ship, which is the only proper basis, the statement which I have just made about England's strength is practically true. We have recently completed and put in commission, or will very soon complete and put in commission, a large number of ships of the first class, if we consider a 16,000-ton battle ship the first class, and that has been true up to the building of the Dreadnought and the Satsuma. But nations are about to take another step in advance in battle ships. England will this year lay down three Dreadnoughts, while, as I have stated, Japan has already ordered another ship of the Satsuma class. France has just ordered six ships, which, while not quite as strong as the Dreadnought, are, in fact, distinctly new and a higher class than any which she now has in commission. These ships will be completed in 1911, and it is understood to be the policy of France to lay down two ships of this class each year, though this number may be increased, judging by what France has done in the immediate past. Germany is the only great power which has an absolutely definite policy, which will be used until 1920 without any variation; and if the premise which I have made relative to France is carried out, and England carries out the policy which has obtained in the immediate past, and we do not build one battle ship a year of the modern type—that is to say, the Dreadnought type—instead of being second, as we will be in 1908, in 1912 we will be third, Germany having passed us; and in fact we will be a doubtful third, for France has a much larger proportion of auxiliaries than have we. If the same policy is carried on for four years longer, from 1912 to 1916, in the year 1916 not only Germany but France will be far ahead of us in naval strength, and Japan will be so close to us that even our Pacific problem will be an extremely serious one.

It is idle to carry on estimates of what the strength of naval powers will be for a longer period than six or eight years. But if my premise is true, that we should do what our competitors are doing to be able to protect our mainland, our possessions, and our commerce against all probable comers, we should continue a policy which will keep us in the same relative position we are in to-day—that is to say, the second naval power in the world. To do that we have got to not only build one battle ship a year, with the auxiliaries which will naturally go to make up the fleet, but we must do more. We must built at least three ships in two years, and I believe two ships every year. It will be noticed that I have taken the battle ship as the unit. That is the only unit which can properly be taken, for the battle ship is not only our offensive naval weapon-practically the only one-but it is also our first line of defense. It is true that we have built armored cruisers and protected cruisers, and other nations are building the same classes of vessels. year Japan and France are laying down new armored cruisers, but my own judgment is that it is better to build fast battle ships of the latest and highest type rather than armored cruisers, for, as a battle unit, they are infinitely superior, their only inferiority being for scout duty and as commerce destroyers, for either of which purpose we should either build practically unarmored vessels or build up a merchant marine from which we could take the fastest and best ships in the world, as our competitors are able to do to-day. In considering our defense after the first line, or the battle-ship line, has been destroyed we have, of course, two or three lines which would be effective—the coast-defense vessel, the torpedo boat, the submarine, the mine, and, lastly, our coastwise fortifications. But the battle ship is what we must primarily depend upon for military purposes, and we are not in advance but behind the times in this respect. In fact, our naval policy instead of being radical is very conservative. We had comparatively few tor-pedo boats before the Spanish war and we had to improvise them when that war came on. Other navies are trying experimental problems, like the use of oil in place of coal. A distinguished admiral of our Navy has recently advocated the taking of the anthracite coal mines of this country to be used in future for naval purposes. England, from which country we have received, and may to-day receive, the best hints as to an intelligent naval policy, is burning oil on many of her men-of-war.

She is building large oil tanks on the Texas coast and is contracting for a supply of oil to be kept on hand at all times.

In the maneuvers of the British fleet last summer it was stated that one squadron outmaneuvered and outsteamed the other, not because it was superior intrinsically, but because it used oil as a fuel. The up-to-date policy which we have taken as a world power necessitates the location of coaling stations or fuel stations away from our own coasts, and it must be apparent to anybody that oil fuel would be an advantage over coal. because we can not hope to adequately defend all of these stations. If we do not defend them, our coal supply may fall into the hands of the enemy. As a last resort one man could protect our oil supply by simply tapping the tanks and letting it run away, thus preventing its falling into the hands of the enemy.

Many steamship companies have taken up and are adopting the turbine, and we should be experimenting with them for our men-of-war. While it may be true that the turbine introduces new questions as to relative space, etc., it insures such increase in speed that we certainly should place turbine engines on one of our new men-of-war if for no other purpose than for experimental purposes. One of the reasons why the torpedo boat is not an offensive weapon away from our own coasts is on account of its small steaming radius. To overcome this we should be considering the adoption of the secondary torpedo boat, which means the placing of a torpedo boat on a battle ship, to be launched on the probability of meeting the enemy, and in that way to be used as an offensive weapon without any regard to location of the battle. There are many other suggestions which we should consider, which we could take up without being considered radical; but, in any case, we shall be little short of retroactive if we do not-not only build battle ships of the size and speed of those which are being built by our competitors, but which also include many, if not all, of the special features which those competitors carry. Undoubtedly the Naval Committee has carefully and earnestly considered the question of the relation of speed to battery power, etc.

When experts, as they do, differ on such subjects as the relation of speed to battery power, the advisability of adding a secondary battery to the primary battery or dispensing with the secondary battery; on the relative value of a few large ships to a larger number of smaller ones costing the same amount; in fact, on many other questions of considerable moment, the average layman may very naturally hesitate to discuss or pass on such questions; but it is the business of Congress to determine the value of the various arguments, to adopt a policy and prepare to carry it out. And therefore, in making the recommendations which it has made for the building policy for the ensuing year, wish to assume that the Naval Committee has considered all of these questions, have agreed on a policy, and, without discussing the limitations in building under that policy, it accords with my judgment; and especially does the decision regarding battery seem wise. This is the greatest question, after having determined the size of a battle ship, which we have to consider-whether it shall be made up of a few large guns or a lesser number of large guns and a powerful secondary battery. this question experts disagree and advance arguments which at least entitle them to consideration. But the Dreadnought has but one battery, and that is made up of 12-inch guns, and while every battle ship could carry torpedo guns-that is, guns which may be used against torpedo boats—I believe the weight of argument is in favor of a single primary battery, so arranged that it can be used in not only broadside fire, but in fore and aft fire as well; and to my mind the arrangement of the proposed ship which we are discussing gives the greatest possible advantage, and at the same time does not prevent the development of a high speed. In this ship the battery will be so arranged that with its ten 12-inch guns six of them may be used to fire ahead, eight of them in broadside, and four astern.

Ten years ago such a disposition of battery, or in fact the installment of a single type of large guns in place of several types of smaller guns, would have been, in my judgment, ineffective, but during the last few years we have made marvelous advances in our target practice. We not only fire 12-inch guns now very nearly if not five times as rapidly as we did ten years ago, but also with practically the same accuracy which we were able to obtain from guns of a smaller caliber. And under the present system of fire control-which, briefly, means locating each shot which is fired from every gun, notifying the gun pointer of that particular gun in what way his shot was not effective, enabling him to correct his error in the next shotconcentration of fire and accuracy of fire is very quickly obtained, provided the rapidity is not so great that an observer is unable to determine whether a shot is fired by a large or small gun. Of course, if he becomes mixed in his observations to such an extent that he can not determine which gun fired the shot which he has observed, his observations are not only ineffective, but are worse than nothing; and as fire control is of vital importance, I believe that, in itself, should be one of the larger elements determining the kind of battery which should be used on our battle ships.

The results of the conflicts between Russian and Japanese ships show that the destruction caused by the 12-inch gun, or any gun of large caliber, was proportionately very much greater than that caused by 8-inch guns or guns of a smaller caliber.

There is another reason which should be considered for adopting the big battle ship. The best ship, like the best machine, is, in the end, the cheapest. A battle ship of the size and cost which we are considering, having only a primary battery, does not require as many men as the battle ships which we have just completed, although the latter are four or five thousand tons smaller. Therefore, the annual cost of maintaining the battle ship, which is between five and six hundred thousand dollars, will be proportionately smaller.

If we were to spend $40,000,000 to build four of these large battle ships, the same amount of money would probably build about seven battle ships of the smaller type. If the judgment of experts is reliable, the four battle ships, having 2 or 3 knots higher speed than the smaller ones and immeasurably greater destructive gun power, would easily defeat the seven smaller ships, assuming that they were handled with the same skill. Now, as I have said, it will not cost as much to man the larger ship as the smaller one and there will be an additional saving annually of the cost of manning three small ships, which would not be less than one and one-half millions of dollars each year. It would cost very much less to dock the four large ships than to dock the seven small ones. In fact, the cost of docking a large and a small battle ship is relatively the same. Therefore, from the standpoint of economy, it would seem for every reason that we should adopt the Dreadnought or larger type rather than continue to build ships of the size which we are now building. If my conclusions are in any degree reasonable, we can not afford to continue any other policy than to follow the example of our possible antagonists. they stop building, we should do the same thing, and we should use every endeavor to bring about an agreement which will decrease rather than increase the annual expenditures made for military purposes. But until our possible antagonists do stop building, we can not, in my judgment, with any discre-tion, fail to follow their example; and the appropriation which is asked for this year by the Naval Committee not only does not exceed what other countries are doing, but it proposes less than we should do. If this House wishes to assume the responsibility of putting its judgment against what is recom-mended by the experts of the world, our own naval experts, the recommendation of our Navy Department, and the Naval Committee of this House, it will vote against this building policy. But I believe by so doing it will take a position which is directly contrary to reason and sound judgment, and I hope such opinion will not prevail.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I know of no bill which is sent in here by any committee that commands so much attention or such general interest as that which comes from the Com-The development of our Navy is so mittee on Naval Affairs. interwoven with our foreign policy, is so tied up with international politics, that it is profoundly interesting to every man who sees beyond his own front yard. Since I have had the honor to be a Member of this House I have always taken a profound interest in the development of the Navy. I was reckoned, and I think truly so, a friend of the development of the Navy, and I am now a friend of the development of the Navy, and I am now a friend of the Navy to the extent of wanting every ship and every gun and every man that may be essential to the protection of our sovereignty, our honor, and our dignity. Beyond that, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it

So far as I have been able to do it I have followed the debate on this particular bill with a great deal of interest. far as I was able to do so I listened with unusual interest to the address of the leading democratic member of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I have not yet had the privilege of seeing that address in print, and therefore I can only speak of it as I remember it from having partly heard it.

And it may be said of my distinguished friend and colleague. than whom there is in this House no man whom I honor and love more, that he is the "mildest-mannered Member that ever scuttled ship or cut a throat," and it is difficult to follow him in debate, because when he utters these ferocious and warlike words it is done in such cooing, dovelike, dulcet tones that it is hard to tell what he really is saying; but I do remember that he gave me the impression that he had followed the work of all the navies of the world almost from the dawn of history down to the close of the war between Spain and the United States. He gave me the distinct impression that the pass of Thermopylæ was kept by the navy. I also came away from his discussion of the question strongly of the opinion that Horatius at the bridge was merely a sailor who had been detailed for special duty, and that the Swiss Republic owes its erection, its development, and the maintenance of its liberties entirely to the Swiss navy. He also conveyed to me the impression that Generals Scott and Taylor fought and won the battles of Palo Alto, of Monterey, of Molino del Rey, and Cha-pultepec solely by the fact that the navy was present and actually cooperating.

But, Mr. Chairman, while I was not prepared to challenge any statement that the gentleman had made so far, in the development of his ideas I was pained and shocked to learn from him that the result of the Spanish war was due entirely to the great achievements of the American Navy. Why, sir, we have all been taught in recent years that the result of that war was entirely attributable to the success of the charge up San Juan Hill, and now comes this distinguished member of this Committee on Naval Affairs and says that the credit of the termination of that war lies exclusively with the American Navy. It is shameful to have our idols overthrown in this way.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that arbitration offers, as I had the privilege of saying a few days ago, the most honorable, the most reasonable, and the least expensive method of maintaining the peace of the world. I believe that the proposition seriously debated by the governments of Europe to-day, looking to the disarmament of the great military forces, offers an avenue of hope and of peace which we should not hesitate to cultivate, because we occupy the best and most commanding position from which to inculcate the doctrines of peace and of disarmament. The splendid isolation spoken of by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] offers to us a measure of security which enables us not to follow the examples which these gentlemen who have just spoken desire us to follow of other great nations, but to set an example which they will follow. I admit, sir, if we do not expand our existing Navy it will be equivalent, under the present conditions, to a relative reduction at least, and so long as the other great powers of the world go on with their development I would not favor any actual important reduction. I am inclined to believe, from information that I have received, that they are not disposed to go on with this expansion if they re-ceive any reasonable hope of escaping it. So long, however, as they do go on with the development of their great naval programme, I shall not favor an unreasonable reduction of the Navy of the United States.

Within the last twenty-four hours I have received a letter from an eminent man who tells me he has information from high official and reliable sources at London that the British Government will go to the next Hague tribunal with a distinct, clear-cut proposition for the reduction of the military arm of all the governments there represented.

Mr. Chairman, in this morning's Washington Post I find an article which I shall ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR CLOUD PASSES OVER-HONDURAS AND NICARAGUA WILL ARBITRATE THEIR DIFFERENCES.

There is to be peace and not war in Central America. Dispatches have been received at the State Department from President Zalaya, of Nicaragua, and from President Bonilla, of Honduras, which are of such a character that the State Department feels that peace is assured, and the matter of arbitrating the differences between Honduras and Nicaragua now seems to be one merely of arranging the details.

Central America came very near being the scene of another war, and only the efforts of Secretary Root and President Diaz, of Mexico, prevented actual hostilities. Mexico was asked to assist and it was decided to call for the aid of Guatemala, Costa Rica, and Salvador, These countries quickly expressed their willingness to cooperate in the interests of peace.

Notes were sent by all of the peace-loving governments to those of Nicaragua and Honduras. They urged that the belligerents refrain from hostilities and submit their differences to arbitration. The pressure was too great to bear, and the answers which have been received to the representations made are most satisfactory.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, that simple little notice tells of an almost epoch-making incident in the history of the world. Two of these nations in Central America, too much given to the making of war, have consented, at the suggestion of our own Secretary of State and the eminent man who heads the Government of our sister Republic of Mexico, to submit their differences to arbitration, and probably for the first time, certainly on the first most important occasion, two of these Governments have stacked their arms and have consented to go to the court of reason rather than to the field of battle to settle their differences.

It gratifies me a great deal, sir, to see in connection with this notice the name-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes further to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It gratifies me to see in connection with this incident the name of the distinguished man who is President of the Republic of Mexico. About forty years ago, when he was a colonel in the Mexican army of independence, a disciple and follower of the great constitutional President of the Republic, Juarez, Don Porfirio Diaz made his entrance upon the stage of political and governmental action in the Republic of Mexico.

His country at that time was a barren waste commercially. It was given over to revolution, to riot, and to despotism. Fortunately for him, fortunately rather for his country, this great man—and considered in connection with his environment, possibly in connection with any environment in which he might happen to be placed, he is one of the greatest men of this world—came to occupy high position. Fortunately for the people of that country, General Diaz came to the head of the Mexican Government. What was commercial waste and political right has given place to propagative and to firm and orderly ical riot has given place to prosperity and to firm and orderly government. [Loud applause.]

A brave soldier, a great patriot, and a statesman of the first rank, President Diaz is one of the world's most imposing figures. All lovers of international peace will rejoice to find him in this important rôle of peacemaker, where he seems destined to earn honor as great and more enduring than any he acquired on the field of battle.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Foster of Vermont having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bill of the following title:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Ala-

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio, because I be-lieve that the aspiration of the people of our country now, as well as of the nations of the world, is for peace and not for war. I believe that the best interests of our people at home is to cultivate the art of peace and not become embroiled with foreign alliances that may bring us in danger of war at any time. I believe to-day that we have a Navy that is sufficient to defend us against that of any power that may attack us. There is no danger of an attack from Great Britain, because the British possessions that lie to our north are a hostage for peace with this country, and if they exceed us in the number of battle ships that they have upon the water, we are occupying an advanced position so far as our land forces are concerned on the North American Continent. I do not believe it is necessary for us to build offensive instruments of war. The battle ship is an instrument of offense, not of defense. I believe that all that is necessary for our nation at the present time to build to keep up with the nations of the world is defensive weapons, weapons that will protect our great coast line against attacks should any war be precipitated at an unforeseen moment. I do not believe that the policy of the Administration, the policy of the Naval Committee of this House, has been toward the adoption of the improved methods of defense, but that practically all the appropriations that have been asked for have been for offensive weapons that will not be necessary, in all probability, should we get into war, because we have no commerce to protect, and would not be worth as much to us as matters of defense at home as those that they are neglecting to build to-days

Now, gentlemen who have spoken in favor of more battle ships and greater tonnage in battle ships have pointed to the action of the great English Admiralty as to what they are doing for the purpose of building battle ships and weapons of offense; but they have neglected to say anything in reference to what the British Government is doing toward building weapons of defense in case of war.

To show what the British Government is doing toward the building of defensive weapons I send to the Clerk's desk an article from the Scientific American of April 14, 1906, that states what they are doing in that direction more fully than I could state it, and I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Organization of the Submarines flotilla of the British fleet.

It is anticipated in the forthcoming programme of the British navy for the ensuing year that the appropriations in regard to the construction and disposition of the fleet of submarines now constituting an important branch of the navy will be a prominent feature. The various and continuous experiments that have been conducted by the Admiralty with the Vickers-Maxim-Holland type of boat of varying displacements have resulted in the evolution of an efficient craft, replete with all the improvements and modifications resulting from the prolonged investigations. Authentic information regarding these latter vessels is somewhat difficult to obtain, but that the majority of the defects inherent in the earlier types of boats have been surmounted is apparent from the important arrangements concerning the organization of these vessels that are now being carried out. The displacement of the submarine has been continuously increased until the most modern craft are upward of 300 tons, and this increase in size has been attended with various important improvements in speed, radius of action, both afloat and submerged, and the electric and gasoline engines for propulsion under these respective conditions of traveling. The dimensions of the accumulators and the gasoline tanks have been considerably augmented, thereby effectively rendering the boat more independent of frequent replenishment, the latest type of vessel carrying sufficient liquid fuel for traveling 1,300 miles on the surface.

More important, however, is the prominent part which the submarine is to fulfill in the future defense of the country. The military system of fixed submarine mines at the entrance of rivers and harbors has been taken over in its entirety by the naval department, and in the greater number of cases has been completely abandoned in favor of a more elaborate defensive scheme by submarine boats. Furthermore, the submarine vessel is to constitute a separa THE ORGANIZATION OF THE SUBMARINE FLOTILLA OF THE BRITISH FLEET.

It is intended by the Admiralty to organize six submarine-boat bases round the English coasts. Three of these are disposed upon the south coast at Fortsmouth, Devonport, and Dover, respectively, while the remaining three bases will be distributed along the eastern shores on the North Sea, which is the more exposed to attack from the European continent. Portsmouth, owing to the contiguity of the great naval dockyard, will constitute the principal base; but at the same time each station will be so appointed that it will be in a position to be independent of the paramount base, and be able to cope with any emergencies that may arise, such as the refitting, repair after accidents, and replenishing of supplies.

At Portsmouth the base will be quite isolated and independent of the dockyard itself. The situation selected for the station, and upon which the necessary arrangements have been carried to a very advanced stage, is completely isolated by water from all communication with the shore, thereby enabling absolute privacy to be maintained. A small dockyard is being constructed, and is being equipped with all the latest electrical and other power appliances for dealing with the work, together with numerous tanks for storing gasoline. A special type of floating dock is now approaching completion at the works of Vickers, Sons & Maxim, for dealing with submarine craft exclusively. Similar arrangements and facilities are being carried out at Plymouth, the station in this case being also isolated by water, and at the same time guarding the entrance to the important ockyard at Devonport. At Dover, where the naval harbor is being pushed forward with all possible speed, the situation will comprise a floating workshop and dock near the harbor's entrance. This station will prove an important one in the strategical defensive scheme of the Admiralty, since it guards the Stratist of Dover and thus commands the only means of communication between the English Channel and the North Sea.

Each base is to be provided with a fast depo marine breaking down. This vessel will have a torpeous a tender.

A tender.

Owing to the fact that the machinery of a submarine vessel requires frequent overhauling, the exact number of these craft which is to be stationed at each point in actual service, and the extent of the reserves, is not yet finally decided. It is anticipated, however, that each base will be equipped with six active boats, together with a sufficient supply of reserve craft to enable the above minimum number to be available for service at a moment's notice. In view, however, of the satisfaction and success of the latest types of submarines which have been constructed, it has been decided to push ahead with the construction of this class of fighting unit with all possible speed, while the various bases are to be completed and equipped during the present year.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentle-

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no one in this House or in the country in my desire for peace for this country and for universal peace. But we have not yet reached that stage of civilization in this world where we can have peace unless we can command it. The proposition of Germany and France for disarmament at this time, and particularly the like request of England, reminds me of a proposition that was made by Henry IV of France when he had succeeded in conquering pretty nearly all Europe and had more army than any other country. He then thought it would be an excellent thing to provide that no country should have any more army than it had at that present time. England at this time, having control of the seas and more navy, I think, than any other two nations, would proba-bly like to limit armament after she has concluded building three large battle ships either in process of construction or authorized. We have under way the Panama Canal, which we must protect, and we further propose at this session to largely increase our merchant marine, if any aid that we can give will do this. Certainly at this time we ought not to delay the increase of our Navy, or, even worse than that, to make our Navy smaller, for the latter will be the result of failing to build enough ships yearly to keep our Navy at the present strength and efficiency.

We have so far been able to protect South America from foreign aggression, not because we love peace, but because we were able to command it. It is only a year since we were able to bring about peace between Japan and Russia. I think we can all imagine how little attention would have been paid to us or to the President of the United States if we had not at that time had a great Navy. Some one here on the floor has referred to the fact that peace is about to be declared between the Central American republics practically on account of the intervention of the United States. I believe that the Central American republics would care about as little for the intervention of the United States as Russia and Japan or Germany and England would if we had no Navy. If we desire that our country shall have any voice in the universal peace of this world, we must keep our Navy at least up to its present efficiency. That tends directly for peace for ourselves and for the whole world.

We must keep our Navy at least at the present efficiency to protect the merchant ships we have and the additional ones that we hope for. We must keep our Navy at its present efficiency to defend the coast of this country on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, and we must keep our Navy at its present efficiency if we desire to enforce the Monroe doctrine. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Naval Affairs has recommended to this House a continuation of the naval programme which has been followed by this Government for over twenty years. The recommendation this year is only in line with the action of the American nation since the inception of the new Navy over twenty years ago. The Naval Committee recommend to this House the authorization of one battle ship this year of the first class. An amendment has been offered by learned and eloquent gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] to strike that out of this bill.

I have listened with great pleasure to the different speeches in favor of universal peace which have been made by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio and others in this committee, and I wish that their dreams might come true. I will not yield to any man in the desire for universal peace. I was myself a member of the Brussels interparliamentary union, having that great object in view, and I trust that some day there will come the realization of the poet's dream of the parliament of man and the federation of the world. But, Mr. Chairman, the millennium has not come, and it is yet, I fear, a long way off. You can not repeal the laws of human nature, and these laws obtain in the affairs of nations as well. What are the recommendations of these men who know the most about this subject? The President of the United States, who was Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who was a colonel in the Army, and who has taken a keen interest in these matters, states to this committee:

Unless we can provide at the rate of a battle ship a year, our Navy will go backward.

What does the Secretary of the Navy say on this subject in his annual report this year?

He says:

I recommend, therefore, that as soon as may be practicable, at this session, Congress authorize the construction of a sister ship to the one already authorized, and of which the plans are now submitted.

What is the action of the Naval Committee, composed of seventeen Members of this House, many of them experts from long service, in this matter of naval affairs? Why, the practically unanimous sense of the committee, without regard to political division, was for the building of a sister ship to the one authorized last year.

A vote for this amendment is a vote for retrogression, is a vote for a step backward, is a vote to give notice to the world at large that we are abandoning our naval programme, that we are giving up the plan which we have followed for over twenty years. The President of the United States further says:

I believe in developing and completing an adequate number of submarines, torpedo-boat destroyers, and various auxiliary vessels.

The recommendation under the caption "Increase of the Navy" this year is merely in line with the action of this Government in inaugurating and building up what is now known as the "new Navy." Why, some of the ships, the names of which have become household words because of the prowess and daring of the men on their decks in the Spanish war, are almost obsolete. The Massachusetts, Oregon, and Indiana were authorized seventeen years ago. The Iowa was authorized fifteen years ago, the Illinois and Alabama were authorized eleven years ago, and naval experts inform us that the ordinary life of a battle ship is only about twenty years.

As to the size of battle ships, I believe we should build those of the largest type. Our possible enemies in any naval conflict are building large, swift, and all-big-gun ships. If, therefore, we accept Captain Mahan's advice we will certainly sacrifice numerous advantages of fleet compactness and flexibility: also the superior effect of heavy gun fire and our ability to concentrate that fire. We may realize twenty years hence the loss of these great advantages, when our possible enemies have fleets of big ships while we continue those of our present type.

Ten ships of 20,000 tons displacement, with a speed of 20 knots and a broadside fire of eight 12-inch guns-that is, one at the forward, one on each beam well forward, and two aft on the center line—would make a fleet worth more in actual battle than twenty ships of the 16,000 tons displacement with only two to four of the 12-inch guns. That is to say, the ten-fleet ship could concentrate and hurl more iron at a possible crisis in an engagement with greater effect than a long-drawn-out fleet of smaller vessels could possibly be able to accomplish.

It is pointed out by Lieutenant-Commander Sims that the men on the fleet of large vessels are behind heavier armor and are less liable to be put out of the fight. If, as he points out, the length of a large ship is 500 feet and the small one 400 feet, and the interval between the centers is, respectively, 450 and 400 yards, in column of vessels the long fleet of small vessels would be nearly 4 miles long, the shorter fleet of vessels only about half that length. Therefore, the short fleet of large vessels would have a broadside fire of 38 guns per mile and the long fleet of small vessels only 21 guns per mile.

If, then, concentration of gun fire is important and effective, as all tacticians admit, there is no argument that can overcome the advisability and the necessity of building the larger vessels.

Let us then adhere to our present programme to build up, maintain, and keep pace with the other great nations of the earth. May we bear in mind the scriptural injunction: "Let not him who hath put his hand to the plow look back." [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, how much time has been consumed on each side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has thirtyfour minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio twentytwo minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from

New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I have the honor to represent in part on the floor of this House the greatest seaport city in the world, the city of Greater New York. I am now, always have been, and always expect to be a friend of the American Navy There is no page in all our illustrious history greater and grander than the glorious achievements of the American Navy.

There are no politics in the Navy or in continuing its effi-ciency. It is a nonpartisan question, and every true American, no matter what his opinion may be regarding the Army, is in favor of increasing our Navy until we have one of the strongest and one of the best navies in the world. To strike out of this bill this battle ship would be naval retrogression. It would be a step backward in our naval policy. The American Navy is growing. I want to see it continue to grow until we have a navy second to none in the world. It will be money well spent in the end, and it will be economy in the right direction. The American people, in my judgment, do not want to stop the growth of their Navy. [Applause.]

The American people take a just pride in their Navy. They have every reason to be proud of it, to be proud of its past, to be proud of it now, and to feel confident of its future. The Navy is one of America's greatest institutions—a bulwark of defense. a mighty engine of offense—and should be liberally supported by the Congress of the United States for all its wants by generous appropriations.

Every dollar spent on the Navy is just so much money expended for insurance. A better investment could not be made.

We must all stand by and for the Navy

The most unthinking individual in the country realizes how important it is for the Government to have a strong, a great, and a mighty Navy. We have a larger and more vulnerable seaboard than any other country in the world. We will soon, I seaboard than any other country in the world. We will soon, I believe, have a great merchant marine. We have great cities of immense wealth, of costly buildings, of commerce, and of property, the value of which is incalculable, all along our seacoasts. They must and should all be protected, and they can not be better protected, better safeguarded, than by a modern, a commensurate, a powerful, and an efficient navy. [Applause.]
I have never voted to cripple the Navy, and I hope I never shall. I am in favor of increasing the power, the strength, the tonnage, and the efficiency of the American Navy. I know how nervous the merchants in New York felt when a Spanish war vessel crossed the Atlantic and anchored in New York Bay just before war was declared against Spain. The people of my city are now, ever have been, and, in my judgment, ever will be, in favor of doing everything in their power to keep up the effi-ciency and continue the gradual increase of the Navy. The American Navy is growing. We ought to do nothing to stop that growth.

The great battles of the world to-day are fought on the high seas and not on land, and in the future they will continue to be fought on the high seas and not on the land. We have insular possessions which must be protected; we have the Panama Canal, which must be protected, and it is the duty of every patriotic American citizen who wants peace to have a navy sufficiently large to enforce peace whenever the question of war arises. If we did not have a navy like we have now, do you suppose we could occupy the position we do among the nations of the world and command the respect we do from every other

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of an additional battle ship, but if we are going to build an additional battle ship let us build one larger than the one already ordered; let us build the largest battle ship in the world and the fastest battle ship in the world. I send to the Clerk's desk and offer an amend-ment, by way of a substitute, to the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will not be in order until debate has closed.

Mr. SULZER. I ask to have it read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend as follows: After the word "constructed." in line 6, page 81, add: "In the New York navy-yard one first-class battle ship of 22,500 tons, with a speed not less than 23 knots an hour, to be called the 'Perry;' and strike out all after the word "constructed." in line 6, down to and including the word "characteristics," in line 8.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, is that an amendment offered If it is, I want to make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is read only for information.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of building this great battle ship in the New York Navy-Yard. It has been satisfactorily proven, I think, to every Member who has looked into the matter, that the Government can build these battle ships as quick and quicker than they can be built by private contract in private shipyards, and much cheaper, too, as the record will clearly demonstrate.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a report from the Navy Department, which I will now read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1907.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY:

All the great naval powers are now engaged in building, or in preparation for building, battle ships of 18,000 tons and upward, as follows: ENGLAND.

Has just completed the Dreadnought, and that vessel is now in full commission.

Has begun the construction of three new Dreadnoughts: The Bellerophon, Temeraire, and Superb.

Proposes to build further three additional Dreadnoughts on the programme of 1907-8.

All of the above have a speed of 21 knots or over.

Has, in addition to these, three armored vessels of the Invincible type, which are really fast battle ships (25 knots) with thinner armor but carrying eight 12-inch guns.

FRANCE. Has begun the building of three and is now to place contracts for ree other battle ships of Danton class (intended to be the equivalents English Dreadnought); six in all.

GERMANY.

Is preparing to begin, as soon as the building slips have been lengthened and strengthened, two battle slips (Ersatz-Bayern and Sachsen), and during the current year to begin two more (Ersatz-Baden and Würtemberg). These are to be the German equivalent for Baden and Würtemberg). These are to be the German Agricultus the Dreadnought.

Germany has heretofore been the advocate of the moderate or smaller displacements, but appears now convinced that the larger ships only are fit to meet the heavy ships of recent type. This is evidenced by the fact that she is spending large sums of money in lengthening building slips and proposes to expend some $50,000,000 in increasing the dimensions of the Kiel Canal in order to make it available for the new and larger battle ships.

Has launched the Satsuma (19.200 tons), and the Aki (a few hundred tons larger) will be launched during the current year. The latter is to have turbine machinery and will probably attain a speed of 20 knots.

Will probably begin this year a third large battle ship of improved type.

Is also building two armored cruisers which include in their armament four 12-inch guns.

RUSSIA.

Is to begin this year the construction of four battle ships of about 20,000 tons displacement, to be the equivalent of the English Dread-nought.

R. P. Rodgers, Captain, U. S. Navy, Chief Intelligence Officer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if all the great powers on earth are building these great battle ships it means something, and every thinking man in this House ought to know what it means. We can not be defenseless. I am in favor of peace, and I am a man of peace, and I am willing to fight for peace if necessary, and the only way for us to have peace is to have a great navy to command peace and to enforce peace whenever our dignity or our honor or our country is threatened. It is the best national insurance we can have, and every Member of this House, no matter whether he comes from an interior city or whether he comes from one of the great seacoast towns, ought to be in favor of maintaining the present efficiency of the Navy, and keep up that efficiency by building at least one new battle ship every That is the policy of the present Administration; it ought to be the policy of the Government, and it should be the policy of every patriotic citizen until the great powers of the world agree to disarmament, and then and not till then should we abandon the progressive policy of our naval establishment inaugurated many years ago under Democratic administration. [Applause.]

has expired.

[Mr. TAWNEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state at this time the cost of the maintenance of a first-class battle ship, according to the figures given us by the Department, amounted to $624,935. That was the cost of commissioning the Maine, including the pay of officers, repair of machinery, and equipage upon the Maine during the fiscal year 1906, and the battle ship Maine cost more than $5,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Mr. TAWNEY. What is included in that estimate of cost?

Mr. FOSS. I read it. Mr. TAWNEY. You have given the amount, Mr. FOSS. Repairs, hull, and machinery.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. And I call the attention of the chairman to the fact that the Maine is only a 12,000-ton ship.

Mr. TAWNEY. But it does not include the cost of navy yards and all other costs incidental to the maintenance and existence of a battle ship which the Navy Department a year ago stated would be practically in round numbers $1,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. It does not include the cost of buildings in the navy-yards or maintenance of the navy-yards, but it does in-clude the cost of maintenance of the battle ship, repairs to machinery, and equipage necessary during the fiscal year. Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa. Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Will my colleague permit me to state, before he takes his seat, that the battle ship Maine only had a tonnage of 12,300 tons?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I regard this as an exceedingly important question and one which I hope, when the vote is taken, will show that the Congress of the United States has not taken any backward step in the construction of a modern navy. The discussion of the bill seems to proceed on the theory that this bill authorizes two battle ships. That is not true. It authorizes one battle ship, and the gentleman from Minnesota, when he claims that it authorizes two, is hardly fair to the House. The last session of Congress authorized one, and fixed its type, and this bill only authorizes one additional of the same We all sympathize with the gentleman from Ohio in his hope for universal peace. It strikes a responsive chord in the breasts of us all; but, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio must realize that until the time comes when, by agreement of all the great nations, we can all disarm at once, it is exceedingly impolitic, unwise, and unsafe for one nation to start on that line. [Applause.] The gentleman from Ohio refers to the splendid isolation of this country. The gentleman seems to have forgotten the events of the last eight years, when our "splendid isolation," as he calls it, was left behind, and our flag now touches the interests of the world at so many points that we are no longer an isolated nation and never again will be. He refers to the low expenses of the Army and Navy before the Spanish war. That is true. Congress had gone on year after year crippling both arms of the service until we stood, in the estimation of the world, powerless before an enemy even of the character of Spain, and it proved the most expensive economy this nation has ever indulged in. If we had been developing our Navy and reorganized our Army, if we had prepared for war, we would not have had any war and none of the vexing questions that now trouble us. We can not go back to it any more than we can go back to the old sailing vessel of seventy-five years ago. The gentleman from Minnesota tries to frighten this House with the enormous expense of our de-He refers to percentages which I deny, even when we combine all the amounts which are spent for pensions and coast defenses and for the Army and Navy proper. The entire amount of the bills for the current fiscal year for the Army and Navy carry, in round numbers, $172,000,000.

We have, in addition to that, carried by the pension appropriation bill, in round numbers, heretofore $139,000,000. Does the gentleman object to the $139,000,000? He says that it is the greatest expense of any nation. That pension roll is the result of the greatest war of any nation, and to my mind it is a more effective method of inculcating patriotic sentiment in every hamlet of the country than can be brought about in any other way. It is true that we spend more than any other nation in proportion to the numerical strength of our Army and Navy, because we pay more to the enlisted strength of each arm than any other nation for service to the country. In our Army we pay as much as eight or nine times more than many of the nations of the world. I am not in favor of this additional battle ship because I am fearful of immediate war, but I am in favor of it because I believe it makes for perpetual peace. That is the reason. [Applause.]

were unprepared and when on this floor Members of Congress had stated that we were in no danger of a conflict and that we never could have another war. And while we as a nation do not expect war and it may not come to this country in the next fifty years, it may come to this country in the next five. It may not come from the east; it may come from the west; but if we are ready for it, if we are prepared for it, if we stand ready, not for aggression, but for defense, then we are more certain to avoid it than we are if we strip ourselves of the power of maintaining the rights of this country.

Mr. Chairman, one of the gentlemen in opposition to this measure said that we wanted more means of defense and that the battle ship was only a means of offense. This same bill provides a larger measure than any one that we have had before for means of defense. And I hope, Mr. Chairman, that when the vote is taken it will certify to the world that the United States of America, loving peace, is yet ready for war. [Ap-

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MEYER].

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, I favor the construction of one first-class battle ship similar in all essential characteristics and additional to the battle ship authorized in the last year-and, of course, the direction to proceed in the construction of the latter—thus giving us two of the strongest, swiftest, and most efficient vessels of war, so far known in naval military science.

The arguments presented by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton], in the speech we have just heard, are seductive, and present sentiments and aspirations worthy of his intellect and noble humanity.

Yet, unless human nature changes from all its tendencies during the ages, we can not expect to realize his ideals in the years to come. We may dream of universal peace—we may repose calmly in the beatific hope that the millenium has been reached—and that all the people of the earth have "beaten their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks," but our awakening will tell us that wars on our continent and with other nations have not ceased to exist.

Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the comments of my honorable friend from Texas, Mr. Slayden, upon my remarks uttered on the pending bill whilst in general debate. I thank him for his kind words, uttered, I conceive, in sincerity, although tinctured somewhat, I suspect, with friendly badinage.

I have been, as he infers, a student of history, and the instances of naval successes and their influence upon the destiny of the nations, as recited in my speech, can not be gainsaid. They are written in the annals of the world, and there they will stand forever. [Applause.]

It has been said that "History is philosophy teaching by examples," and I again urge that all history teaches us that an efficient navy is necessary for the safety of a nation.

Preparedness is essential, vital. There are many persons who, not stopping to note the lessons of history, imagine before war can come upon us there will be some preliminary warning and fair time given us in order to get ready.

History is full of contrary examples. Many of the bloodiest wars of modern times have sprung suddenly.

The Franco-Prussian war is fresh in our recollection, and later still, the conflict between Russia and Japan, precipitated without warning by the latter power. Every nation with an organized and powerful force, whether on land or on sea, is always on the alert to strike the first blow if war must come. It is a word and a blow, and very often the blow precedes the word.

And so we witness the painful endeavors of the nation thus taken at a disadvantage to catch up with its adversary in military preparation and supplies, but it is very hard to make up for lost time and deficient preparation in war. There is not a great soldier, living or dead, whose teaching does not confirm

In a recent message, Mr. Chairman, the President says:

We can not afford to fall behind. Unless we intend to go building up the fleet we should abandon every effort to keep the position we now hold, whether in the Pacific Ocean or in American waters generally. Our justification for upholding the Monroe doctrine and for digging the Panama Canal must rest primarily upon our willingness to build and maintain a first-class fighting fleet. Be it remembered, moreover, that such a fleet is by far the most potent guaranty of peace which this nation has or can ever have.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that never have we been so little prepared to defend ourselves in case of trouble from a strong power, notwithstanding our vast material resources

We have declared our firm intention to uphold the Monroe None of us believed we would have war two months before we had the war with Spain. It came upon the country when we invasion of our continent to the east and south of us by the Old World nations. We are building the Panama Canal, which we must forever defend. We have, by conquest and otherwise, acquired Asiatic possessions, and thus interfered with the affairs of the Old World; and have we not, by these and other causes, subjected ourselves to aggression and retaliations from these sources?

We should not, Mr. Chairman, permit ourselves to be deluded with utopian ideas about universal arbitration and general disarmament. As long as human nature exists such views may not be realized. No Hague conference or parliamentary agreements can accomplish these great and magical changes.

The time of the gentleman has expired. The CHAIRMAN. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more.

Mr. MEYER. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] in his remarks stated that during the last century-I believe I understood him correctly-there had been a hundred cases where arbitration had settled international difficulties. That, no doubt, is true; but I would also refer to the interesting fact that in the last two hundred years of 117 wars of more or less magnitude but 10 have been preceded by a declaration of war, and in the case of the 107 such declaration was dispensed with.

This does not include the most noticeable instance, the recent Japanese-Russian war. Therefore we can not assume that without preparation we may successfully resist any sudden attacks that may be made upon us without due notice. I gather this information, Mr. Chairman, from a very carefully prepared report made to the Fifty-second Congress by a gentleman from California discussing the militia bill of that day.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Was this information enumerated? Mr. MEYER. Yes; it was enumerated; and with the permission of the House, I will embrace it in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEYER. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I will say that this is neither a sectional nor political question. The time has gone by when the voice of faction or party spirit could cavil at a liberal policy of encouragement of this arm of our national defense. Therefore in any steps we may take in this direction we will respond to the ardent aspiration of the American people by providing adequate means to defend our rights in peace or in war. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask how much time has been consumed on either side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has sixteen minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Ohio has ten.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman from Ohio expect to consume the remainder of his time in one speech?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Only one, by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. FOSS. Then I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, the proposition involved in this amendment amounts to a refusal to construct a battle ship under the provisions of the bill relating to the maintenance of the Navy. The same result was practically achieved last year when the battle ship provided for in the naval appropriation bill was sidetracked for the alleged purpose of giving the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States an opportunity to examine the plans and details of the battle ship and approve them before the President should be permitted to enter into I confess to inefficiency in this matter. I have not been able to reach a conclusion whether that battle ship is planned on the most perfect lines the country or the world has produced. It was a most singular suggestion and could not have been projected for any other purpose than delay and ultimate defeat of the battle-ship proposition, and so we stood before the world halting and hesitating, for I presume that no intelligent reader of the proceedings of the first session of this Congress believed that in good faith this scheme of a battle ship was to be examined and approved or condemned by the Congress of the United States. If I should examine these plans for ten years, I would not have any more knowledge than I have now. I have not had an opportunity to examine them, and my experience does not go beyond the construction of one of the cheapest kind of flatboats on the Ohio River, and therefore the country will have to go without my judgment on the question of the propriety and type of this battle ship.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have reached a time in the year when it is a practical question whether we will stand by the Administration of the now dominant party in the United States or whether we will refuse to do so. The issue is very squarely made in this case and the views of the President were fully expressed in his message upon this subject sent to the Congress in December, 1906, which is as follows:

expressed in his message upon this subject sent to the Congress in December, 1906, which is as follows:

THE NAYY AND ARMY.

The United States Navy is the surest guarantor of peace which this country possesses. It is earnestly to be wished that we would profit by the teachings of history in this matter. A strong and wise people will study its own failures no less than its triumphs, for there is wisdom to be learned from the study of both, of the mistake as well as of the success. For this purpose nothing could be more instructive than a rational study of the war of 1812, as it is told, for instance, by Captain Mahan. There was only one way in which that war could have been avoided. If during the preceding twelve years a navy relatively as strong as that which this country now has had been built up, and an army provided relatively as good as that which the country now has, there never would have been the slightest necessity of fighting the war; and if the necessity had arisen the war would under such circumstances have ended with our speedy and overwhelming triumph. But our people during those twelve years refused to make any preparations whatever regarding either the Army or the Navy. They saved a million or two of dollars by so doing; and in mere money paid a hundredfold for each million they thus saved during the three years of war which followed—a war which brought untold suffering upon our people, which at one time threatened the gravest national disaster, and which, in spite of the necessity of waging it, resulted merely in what was in effect a drawn battle, while the balance of defeat and triumph was almost even.

Id no not ask that we continue to increase our Navy. I ask merely that it be maintained at its present strength; and this can be done only if we replace the obsolete and outworn ships by new and good ones, the equals of any affoat in any navy. To stop building ships for one year means that for that year the Navy goes back instead of forward. The old battle ship Texas, for instance, would now be Thus this pending question, arising upon the motion to amend made by my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. Burton], raises the direct issue with the President. It seeks to refuse the request and advice of the Administration, and to do this in such a way as to humiliate the President in the eyes of the I will not occupy that position.

The President of the United States is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and is responsible for the administration of both. If there is any one thing in which the President of the United States excels, it is in the care and devotion he has manifested in the upbuilding and perfecting of the Navy and the Army, and he has about him, or within reach at least, a corps of able assistants, and the foregoing is the opinion of the Administration upon the topic now under immediate discussion. So, Mr. Chairman, this provision in the bill is distinctly an Administration proposition, and opposition to it is distinctly opposition to the Administration and repudiation of the recommendation of the President of the United States. do not deny that Members of Congress ought to have some judgment of their own, and I do not complain if Members of the House of Representatives differ with the President upon matters of administration, but I am equally aware of the fact that very recently we have had in the United States a general election of Members of Congress, and in many cases involving the election of Senators, and the battle cry went up from one end of this country to the other, and strangely enough it was the cry of both sides of the great contest, "Stand by the the cry of both sides of the great contest, "Stand by the President," and strong appeals were made to Congressmen, candidates, to pledge themselves to aid the President in carrying out his plans of administration.

We are very fond of the President of the United States. He has been a wonderfully efficient and valuable leader of our great party. He has deserved and had the support of nearly great party. all the Republicans in Congress. He is entitled to it and will continue to have it. He has led the country forward. maintained the honor and dignity of our flag. W He has We stand higher and better for his leadership among the nations of the world, and for one I guard with a jealous eye his especial relation to the country as Commander in Chief of the Army and

But to return to the last election, clean down to the day of the election it was a fashionable thing in this country to arraign candidates for office and leaders of the Republican and Democratic parties for having been faithless to the requests of the President of the United States. [Laughter.] It was fashionable to say that this candidate or this prominent official and that one had failed to support the Administration, and the cry was made, "Let us send Roosevelt men to the House and to the Senate;" and, moreover, this cry was not confined to the Republican party. Everywhere in a close district the Demo-cratic candidate proclaimed that he was the better Roosevelt man; that he wanted to come to Congress to uphold the Administration of Roosevelt. Whole States were up in arms to punish some men and compliment others. Away out in the State of Ohio we even went so far as to raise the question whether we should put a sort of limitation upon the indorsement of certain gentlemen because, forsooth, on some questions they had not voted with the President or as he had suggested, and a fierce battle raged all over the State, and it was proposed to enthusiastically and without qualification indorse the President and to indorse others with a sort of limitation, a mild toning down, so as to express the condemnation of certain factional leaders therein, and our Democratic friends practically fell down and worshipped the coming glories of a Democratic Administration to be based upon the principles and leadership of Roosevelt.

Now we have reached the time when the Administration comes forward, and in the discharge of his duty the President of the United States, as head of the Administration, urges upon Congress a certain action here upon this naval appropriation bill. I for one will yield all my doubt and uncertainty, if I had any; I will even indorse that battle ship I did not have the chance to examine. I believe it is the greatest battle ship of the world. I do so because the Administration approves of it, and if I were to study it ten years I would not know anything more about it than I do now.

This world's peace performance is not without its features challenging our admiration, and yet as to its effectiveness there may possibly be some lingering doubt. Immediately following the adjournment of the first session of this Congress some of our friends went abroad. They were the leaders of the idea of the early and complete disarmament of the nations of the world. It is a subject of academic discussion and has the elements of beauty and oratory and poetry. It challenges our love for peace. It admits to the ear our hostility to war. These gentlemen made a very respectable appearance abroad. They were well dressed, well educated, genial, pleasant gentlemen. They made good speeches. They were men of fine education, men with oratorical gifts, and they found auxiliary reenforcements among some of the Americans whom they met in Europe, and they told the people of the world that they advocated immediate and unconditional disarmament. A response came to their suggestion very shortly. It took the shape of the planning and the beginning of the building of more battle ships and auxiliary ships, including great cruisers and all the other features of naval armament, by the great nations of Europe than was ever planned in the same length of time, two or three to one. That was the response to the disarming proposition that our friends advocated. None the less they are deserving of credit for the spirit that inspired their efforts.

I am as much opposed to war as any living man. I know quite as much about war as some of our friends who are now advocating this amendment, and I know something of the consequences. I know something of the horrors. I know something of the long line of perpetuation of horrors after the battles, and I undertake to say that I am quite as strongly an indorser of the proposition that the world should reach the solution of international problems by peaceful measures as these gentlemen are, but the most convincing advocate of peace is the nation that is prepared for war. [Applause.]

It was because of our achievement in the Spanish war that the voice of Roosevelt became potential in the settlement of the Russo-Japanese war. It was because behind him stood not alone the public sentiment of the country indorsing him, but because there stood behind him a splendid Navy and that we had exhibited the spirit that would raise tremendous armies, and our voice was potential. I shall follow the suggestion of the Administration in this as I have done in everything else that has been a question of administration and of party organization. I shall stand for the development of the American Navy. I believe that in the present conditions the scheme of this bill is none too great. I am not one of those who are trembling under the mere suggestion of war, but we have had wars and they have come unexpectedly and we have been unprepared. Let us take counsel of the history of the past and stand for a better condition in the future.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes, the balance of my time, to the gentleman from North Carolina

[Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN].

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, it has been said in this debate and, I believe, truly said that this is not a political or sectional question. There is not a man in this body who does not favor a large Navy, one that is sufficient for the uses of the United States. But I belong in the list of those who believe that we have a large Navy, that we have now a Navy that is equal to the needs of the Government. I do not mean by that that we should stop the construction of large ships hereafter, because I agree with the President that we ought to keep our Navy up to its present standard. But I desire to call the attention of Members of this House to these facts, to show them that we have a large Navy.

Mr. Chairman, we have to-day in the course of construction three times as many tons of battle ships as we had on the water when we declared war with Spain. We have to-day on the water and in course of construction seven times as much navy in battle-ship tonnage as we had when Dewey won the victory at Manila and Schley at Santiago. When our Navy that is now authorized is completed it will be seven times as strong as the Navy that demolished the navy of Spain.

A few years ago gentlemen frightened this body with the probabilities of war with Germany. Are there not many hearts here that then trembled as gentlemen predicted war with Germany? At that time the German programme was held up to us to induce us to enact immense provisions. We have now far outstripped Germany, and the then threatened probability of a German war is almost forgotten. But now, as this demand for an increased Navy comes up, they try to frighten this House again with probabilities of war with Japan. Who believes it? Is there one who wants no war that believes it? Is there a peaceable citizen, is there an unwarlike citizen, of this Republic who believes there is any probability of war with Japan? And suppose war should come with Japan? We have a Navy 60 per cent greater than hers. We have unlimited resources, we have the confidence of the world; and the proud record of Japan in war does not surpass the prouder record of the United States in war. [Applause.] Who fears Japan? There is not a single thoughtful American citizen who fears Japan in war. Why should we continue to build up this Navy with such immense strides from year to year? Why, Mr. Chairman, in 1901, during the last year of President McKinley's Administration, the most influential Member of this body declared on this floor that when the battle ships then authorized and in that bill carried were completed, he would think that we had a Navy sufficient for our needs. The beloved McKinley was killed and a more warlike character than that man of peace became President, and then the attitude of this House changed to a large extent upon the question of a great Navy. Since that day we have added eleven great battle ships and four armored cruisers to our Navy, counting those in the course of construction.

Some one has said this will be a step of retrogression if we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I deny it. Last year, while a battle ship was carried in the bill, when the amendment was put on requiring the Department to report plans to this body, that was a moral instruction to the Navy Department not to build that ship without further approval of Congress. And when we pass this bill, with the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio adopted, we will have instructed the Navy Department to proceed with the construction of that great

Another thing: This tonnage of battle ships is still an experiment. Nine years ago, when we declared war with Spain, the Oregon was the mightiest ship we had on the sea, and it was a 10,000-ton ship. Since that time we have increased the tonnage until now it is 20,000 tons. The evidence before the Naval Committee was that we can build a 30,000-ton ship or even a 50,000-ton ship just as practicable as a 20,000-ton ship. The only difference is that after you exceed the size of our dry docks they must be made larger, and after you exceed the depth of the harbors you must deepen them. It is largely a question of expense. And, Mr. Chalrman, when our present authorized Navy is completed, we will, in my judgment, never see a naval bill carrying less than $100,000,000 for its maintenance.

The question was asked a witness what effect, in his judgment, would authorization by our country of sixteen 30,000-ton ships have upon the nations of the world—if it would not have one of two effects, to prevent other nations of the world from trying to keep up with this great Republic of ours or to lead to an international agreement that would somewhat regulate the navies of the world, if not tend to disarmament. The opinion of the witness was that it might have one of those effects. I think it is as certain as anything within the range of human probability that within ten years from to-day the 20,000-ton battle ship will be comparatively out of date and be almost a relic of the past unless there is an international agreement. And, as has already been said, if we build two great ships we will need sixteen, because we shall have to have eight of them in the Atlantic and eight in the Pacific to constitute proper fleets for those seas.

I am in favor of this one battle ship, because I think Congress is practically committed to it by the appropriation bill of last year. Let us give the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States one of these great battle ships for his flagship, but do not undertake to build two now, which will be the beginning of a policy that will inevitably require that all of our ships hereafter be immense ships, costing in excess of $10,000,000 apieca.

If nothing were to be considered but ships, and you did not consider their necessity and the taxation of the people for them, there would be no limit to any man's desire for battle ships. But common sense and patriotism require that we should conform in the expenses to the interests of the people and the necessities of the country. If we are ever to stop the heavy burdens for war purposes upon the toiling masses of mankind not only in America, but throughout the world, some great nation must take the first step in behalf of peace. Some nation must begin the movement. As far as I am concerned, I am in favor of the greatest country in the world or in the world's history, with the greatest Christian influence of the age, taking the first step. am in favor of the United States, that has never known defeat, with confidence in her people, with confidence in her resources, with confidence in her strength and courage, which fear nothing less than the Divine—I am in favor of this Republic undertaking the path that is not merely a doctrinal declaration for peace, but a positive policy in the direction of peace. [Great applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had time to show by what great strides we are now building our Navy. We have to-day 40,000 tons more of battle ships in the course of construction, not completed, than any other nation in the world. Only one nation-Great Britain alone—has a navy that surpasses ours. has a greater tonnage than we have, but the French navy, in my judgment, is not as effective as our Navy, because their ships are not of the same high class. Our Navy far surpasses that of any other country. Some one has said that we have a greater coast line to defend than any other country in the world. I deny that. Great Britain has far more coast line than we. We have no fear of England. Brothers in language, brothers in race, brothers in ideas, brothers in religion; the 3,000-mile boundary line making Canada a perpetual hostage against hostilities from England; the great wheat fields and cattle pastures of the West, feeding Englishmen, and the broad cotton fields of the South, clothing them-all these conduce to peace and guarantee that England will never war with the United States unless the United States forces England to war. [Applause.] We have no fear of war with England nor of England in war, having whipped her in our teens; and I appeal to the membership of this House not to be stampeded by fears of British war. are all in favor of a great and strong Navy; how great and how strong depends upon the individual judgment of each Member as to what the probabilities of war are and as to what are the probabilities of a successful outcome if war comes. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to the recommendation of the committee upon this question I desire to read the provision in the bill:

I want to say that there is no difference of opinion to-day among our naval authorities as to the tonnage of this ship. Some men perhaps who are advocating peace, as is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron], may have their serious doubts. Some, who for instance may spend their time in studying theories and not the actualities, may have their serious doubts. Some gentlemen who are opposed to the onward building up of the American Navy may have their doubts; but I want to say to you that among the officers of the American Navy, the men who fight the ships upon the sea, there is no doubt or question as to this particular battle ship. The continuous for the particular battle ship. as to this particular battle ship. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawney] comes in here every year and tries to dump upon the naval appropriation bill an argument in favor of reducing our Navy. He usually furnishes a statement showing how we are increasing in appropriations and how all the Departments of the Government are increasing in the cost of maintenance. Why should he come in here every year and dump this upon the naval appropriation bill? There is not a bill that comes out of his committee, there is not a bill that comes from any other committee of this House this year that does not carry an increase of appropriations, except this bill which comes from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the appropriation that we ask for this year is $5,000,000 less than that which we asked for last year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the fortifications appro-

Mr. FIGERIAD. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be interrupted.
Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be interrupted.
The gentleman from Kentucky made a speech here to-day in which he stated that he had information of some kind that England was proposing to offer at the peace conference a proposition of the state of the peace conference appropriate of the peace of th sition of disarmament. We are to judge nations not by what we are told, or by what we read in the newspapers, but by how they act. Since the Interparliamentary Union met in London last year, England is building three more Dreadnoughts, and it is her declared policy to authorize several more. So I say to you here to-day we must measure nations and people as they act, day by day, not as, for instance, some prominent official in the Government may propose to do.

I forgot to state that while it has been said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burton] that our appropriations for the Navy have increased tremendously during the last twenty or thirty years, he forgot to say that our appropriations for every Department of the Government had increased by a large percentage. For rivers and harbors we passed a bill amounting to $83,000,000. What makes the tremendous increase in appropriations? the fact that the nation has grown, and we are proud of that fact; but let me say that in proportion to what our forefathers spent to maintain the Government a hundred years ago, we are expending less upon the Navy than did they.

To come back to the other proposition, I say to you that we must take humanity as it is. It is all well enough to dream of peace; it is all well enough to talk peace; it is all well enough to pray for peace; but the thing that our country must do is to be prepared in case of war. Pray for peace, yes, but in the meantime prepare for war. Some gentlemen, for instance, may have reached that stage of moral perfection where they could be translated to another realm where it is said the angels contend with hosannas and song, but as for the most of us, and for the peoples and nations to-day that inhabit the earth, we have not reached that stage of human perfection.

Indeed, upon this floor we often see manifestations of the fighting blood of our own people, and it is with difficulty we can sometimes restrain our own Members from getting at each other. There is fighting blood here, even in this great legislative body, which we often say in patriotism and intelligence is superior to that of any similar body on the face of the globe. Yet we are all for peace. Still there is the fighting spirit here. Is not that true of nations and peoples wherever you unto the people or nation which loses entirely its fighting spirit; woe unto that people and to that nation through whose veins does not flow the rich red blood of determination, or insistence on its rights, and of moral and physical courage. I know that wars are cruel; I know they are great evils. Yet we know that they come, and the great battles of history have only marked decisive steps in the development of the civilization of the world. Henry Ward Beecher, that great Christian preacher and philosopher, once said, likening the whole human race unto one yast body, that wars, after all, were only God's amputations of offending members. We are to-day under the control of a higher providence than our own. We move on, discharging our responsibilities in the heat and light of the day, but woe unto us as a nation and a people if we by our act to-day or any other day put ourselves in a position where we will be unprepared to carry out the responsibilities and obligations which are placed upon our shoulders.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota has said that we could shoot away all our ammunition in an hour and Yes. Let me say to the gentleman from Minnesota a half. that the battle of the sea of Japan was won in less time than that. It was fought and won in forty minutes. The gentle-man from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] has said we are building a navy seven times larger than the Navy which we had in the Spanish-American war. Yes. We did not have much of a navy in the Spanish-American war, and we wished at that time we had more; but we were fortunate in the Spanish-American war to have had no stronger foe against us than Spain.

s than Spain. [Applause.] Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. FOSS. No; thanks. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say to you here to-day that I believe that all our interests demand an upbuilding of the American Navy-our interests upon this hemisphere and upon the other-and I can not do better than to repeat those words of the President of the United States in his letter in which he says, "We can not afford to fall behind, and we shall fall behind if we fail to build first-class battle ships Unless we intend to go on and build up the fleet, we ourselves. should abandon our effort to keep the position we now hold by it in the Pacific Ocean or in American waters generally." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the appeared to have it.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to the amendment pending, and I desire to offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the amendment sent by the gentleman from New York to the Clerk's desk was not an amendment to the amendment, but an amendment to the paragraph itself, which he can offer later.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 122. Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] The CHAIRMAN. and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 114, noes 146. [Applause.]
So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend as follows: After the word "constructed," in line 6, page 81, add "in the New York Navy-Yard, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, one first-class battle ship of 22,500 tonnage and a speed of not less than 23 knots an hour, to be called the Perry," and strike out all after the word "constructed," in line 6, to and including the word "characteristics," in line 8.

Mr. MUDD. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. Against that the gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order.

Mr. MUDD. That it fixes the name and place of construction, and, it seems to me, it is a limitation upon the discretion of the Secretary. The law now provides how ships shall be named, and this a change of existing law.

Mr. SULZER. It is impossible for me to hear what the gentleman from Maryland says.

Mr. MUDD. I stated, Mr. Chairman, if my information is correct, the law now provides specifically in regard to the manner of naming ships, and this is a change of existing law in addition to limiting the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. SULZER. I leave it in the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. MUDD. But it changes the law as to the naming.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desired to be beauted.

sire to be heard?

Mr. SULZER. Just a word, Mr. Chairman, if it is the opinion of the Chair that this amendment offered by me changes existing law by reason of the fact that I have asked to have this battle ship called the "Perry," then I ask to strike out of the amendment the words, "to be named the Perry." Then, the amendment that I now offer is to the effect that this new battle ship shall be 22,500 tons burden and have a speed of not less than 23 knots an hour, also leaving the place of construction to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment as offered is subject to the point of order. Without going further into its provisions, it fixes the name of a battle ship, which is a change of the existing law, providing how battle ships shall be named, and that part being in violation of the rule, the whole amendment falls. The point of order is sustained.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sulzer] offers an amendment in different form, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add:
"In the New York Navy-Yard, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, one first-class battle ship of 22,500 tonnage and a speed of not less than 23 knots per hour, and strike out, after the word 'constructed,' in line 6, and to and including the word 'characteristic,' in line 8."

Mr. SULZER. Now, Mr. Chairman, as this amendment has been read by the Clerk, it seems to me that it is clearly in

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that anybody has made a point of order against it.

Mr. MUDD. As I understand it, the reference to the name has been stricken out?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; and I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to debate the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, in the act of July, 1902, two battle ships were authorized, one to be constructed by contract, the other to be constructed in a navy-yard. Those two ships have since been under construction. The one that was authorized to be constructed in a navy-yard is finished, but the one that was austructed in a navy-yard is finished, but the one that was authorized to be constructed by contract is not finished. The Connecticut, built at the New York Navy-Yard, was finished December 12, 1906. There has been considerable misinformation spread broadcast regarding these two ships. I have here a statement, dated the 1st of February, issued by the Navy Department, in which it purports to give the complete cost of the two ships. It appears, however, that the statement is only brought down to the 1st of January, 1907. The Connecticut, which was built at a payy-yard was finished completely cut, which was built at a navy-yard, was finished completely on the 12th of December, 1906, and left its wharf for the first time ready and equipped to fight. Of no other ship built in any country for a modern navy can the same statement be made. The Louisiana is to-day in a navy-yard, being completed by the Government instead of by the contractors.

Mr. SULZER. Private navy-yard?
Mr. FITZGERALD. In a Government yard at New York.
The Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair in his report for the year 1906 states that it was deemed advisable to accept the Louisiana from the contractors some time in April or June, because of delays in delivery. The boat was accepted, and the contractor was released from the obligation of installing the batteries with the battery accessories. The vessel was commissioned in June, 1906. Last fall it was selected for the purpose of conveying the President of the United States upon his memorable trip to Panama. It was accompanied by two smaller vessels, ostensibly because in case of accident to the Louisiana it would be advisable to have some other ship ready to permit him to continue his journey without delay or interruption.

The fact is, however, that although it was advertised that the President of the United States had set sail for Panama upon the latest and most modern battle ship of the Navy, the vessel did not have a single gun in serviceable condition. a turret gun nor one of its broadside guns could have been used in case of necessity. Since ascertaining these facts I have been inclined to believe that a secret fear on the part of the Navy Department that perhaps some of the enterprising South American republics needing a man of the capacity and characteristics of the President to regulate their affairs might possibly kidnap him was the real reason for selecting the two smaller vessels to accompany, and if need be, to protect the first-class battle ship.

Upon the 1st of January the difference in the cost between these two vessels-and I shall, with the permission of the committee, insert the exact figures in the RECORD-was three hundred and fifty-nine thousand and some odd dollars.

The difference in cost of the turret mounts is accounted for by the Bureau of Ordnance and stated to be "owing to the changes, alterations, experiments, and necessary slowness of manufacture as compared with material and designs which have already been manufactured and thoroughly tested out. The excess of $13,630 is not considered great."

E. B. Rogers,

Paymaster-General, U. S. Navy.

Navy Department.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, January 30, 1907.

Since the 1st of January the Louisiana, however, has been sent into the navy-yard to be completed. It was sent there early in January. Work will not be completed upon her until late in March, and my information is to the effect that it will cost the Government about $360,000 to complete the ship that was supposed to have been completed by the contractors last June. There has been, in my opinion, a deliberate attempt to mislead the country in regard to the condition of these ships.

I have before me the annual report of the Chief Constructor of the Navy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906. He gives a list of vessels under construction by contract. The Louisiana is not named in that list. In the report of the progress upon naval vessels under construction, issued June 11, 1906, the Navy Department stated that the Louisiana was 100 per cent completed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to close debate on this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is all the time I want.

Mr. FOSS. I wish to give notice that I will move to close debate when the gentleman gets through.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I only want five minutes, and this matter is important.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I want two or three minutes to explain briefly my amendment as it now stands, as several Members of the House do not seem to understand it in its present form.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the report issued in June it was stated that the vessel was 100 per cent completed, and in the report issued in July it was stated that it was 100 per cent completed except the installation of batteries and accessories, from which the contractor was relieved.

I have also the list of vessels under construction issued on the 10th of January, 1907, contained in the report of the chairman of the committee, furnished to him by the Navy Department, and although at that time the Louisiana had three months' work still to be done upon her, the name of the Louisiana is omitted from the vessels still under construction.

For the first time in the history of the Government these vessels were completed within contract time. The year before last, when the vessels that had been authorized were let under contract, the vessels let by contract after this competitive test had started were let at between two and three hundred thousand dollars in excess of the cost of the ship—the Louisiana built by contract under this competition.

During the last two years two additional ships were to be built. I asked for and obtained the consent of the Secretary of the Navy to permit the navy-yard to submit a bid in competition with the private builders, and the result of that competition from the Government yards was that the bids were more than $300,000 less than the bid for the Louisiana, and under the contracts which were let the Government will save upon the two battle ships over $700,000. If that is to be the result of this policy of building in Government yards, then I am more than confirmed in the belief I had in 1899, that it is a wise thing for a part of the vessels authorized for the Navy to be built in the Government yards.

It is a check upon the extortion of contractors. It enables, as the Department officials say, an accurate estimate of the cost of doing the work to be obtained. It permits a trained, skilled force of men to be retained continuously, so that they can be diverted from the new work to repair work as the occasions require; and the evidence is that during the four years that this ship-the Connecticut-was under construction the Department never hesitated to take the men from that ship in order to complete repairs upon the fleet under emergency orders. This being the case, Mr. Chairman, I trust that the policy that has been so wisely initiated and has resulted so beneficially to the Government will be continued.

Mr. CALDER. Is it not a fact that the Louisiana was the first ship built by contract in contract time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It was the first ship ever turned over to the Government, within contract time, but it has not been completed and will not be completed until after the adjournmen of Congress, although all the reports of the Department have indicated that it had been completed.

Mr. MUDD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes to explain this amendment to the House, because a number of Members have been to me and told me that they did not quite understand it.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate upon this paragraph and upon this proposition in ten minutes.

Mr. PRINCE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRINCE. Does the effect of that motion preclude any further amendments to this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all, as the Chair understands it.

It will only preclude debate.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, no; he said on this amendment.

Mr. FOSS. It is ten minutes on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that debate upon this pending amendment be closed in ten minutes. The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

I now ask for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for three

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I want to explain that all this amendment of mine does is this: Instead of a battle ship of 20,000 tons burden, as proposed by the Naval Committee, my amendment increases the tonnage to 22,500; and instead of making the speed not less than 21 knots an hour my amendment makes it not less than 23 knots an hour. That is practically all the amendment does. If the amendment is adopted, it will be the biggest battle ship yet authorized, but only for a short time, in my opinion.

The reason for this, I will explain, is that it will take at least one or two years to complete the plans and specifications for this new battle ship, and it will take one or two years more to complete the building of the ship, and by that time it will not be the largest battle ship in the world, or the second, or third, or fourth, or fifth largest battle ship in the world, because Japan, England, and France all have under contemplation at the present time designs for battle ships of over 22,500 tons, and with a speed of over 23 knots an hour. So that by the time this new battle ship is completed it will not be the largest war vessel in the world by any means. Let us give notice to the world to-day that if England and Japan and the other great powers of the earth are going to build these big battle ships we will and can continue to build them, too, so that we can and will always be able to protect American interests at home and abroad, and this policy, and only by this policy, can disarrament be brought about and universal peace established among the nations of the earth. [Loud applause.]

Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a Mr. WALDO. question?

Mr. FOSS.

Mr. WALDO. Does not the bill as it is now proposed by the committee permit the building of this battle ship at one of the navy-yards, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy? Mr. FOSS. It does.

Mr. WALDO. Without regard as to whether bids are asked for or not?

Mr. FOSS. It is entirely within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to build this battle ship in the New York Navy-Yard or any other navy-yard or to build it by contract, and it is so provided in the language of the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say one word in reference to the relative cost of the Connecticut and Louisiana. We have a document here known as "House Document 662," sent to the House of Representatives by the Secretary of the Navy, giving a statement of the expenditures on the battle ships Connecticut and Louisiana, and that is the best authority that we have upon the subject. I want to state that in answer to what the gentleman has said. What he has found out, or what he thinks he has found out, is another question; but this is what the Navy Department says, and the cost of the Connecticut exceeded that of the Louisiana by $360,000 in round numbers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That was up to the 1st of January of this year?

Mr. FOSS. The completed ships.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the Louisiana is not complete. The gentleman is not aware of the facts.

Mr. FOSS. This is a full statement as to the relative cost of the two ships, furnished by the Chief Constructor to the Secretary of the Navy and sent here to Congress. Now, so far as the Connecticut and Louisiana are concerned, the Chief Constructor has said, in his hearing, that they were both given fair play; that one was not held up in favor of the other; that in this competitive trial of construction, so to speak, everything was done impartially. I want that statement to go into the Record, Mr. Chairman, and that is all I have to say about this proposition. I call for a vote.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. MAYNARD. To offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the proposed amendment the words "in the navy-yard" and insert in lieu thereof "in one of the navy-yards of the United States Government."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand that amendment. I should like to have it reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Which amendment?

Mr. SULZER. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SULZER. I will accept that amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sulzer].

The question being taken, the amendment to the amendment

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the words "in his discretion."

I make a point of order against that, ERALD. You can not make a point of order Mr. FITZGERALD. against a motion to strike out, under the rules of this House.

Mr. MUDD. The gentleman is probably correct on that, but if the words. "in his discretion" are stricken out, then the amendment itself will be so changed that it will be a new proposition.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SULZER. If the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] should be carried, would the amendment offered by me then be subject to a point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is too late to make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that if a point of order had been originally made against the amendment of the gentleman from New York it would have been ruled out of order, but is unable to see, however, that the amendment sug-gested by the other gentleman from New York changes it in that regard and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. I call for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sulzer].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 81, line 7, after the word "ship," insert "at a cost of not ore than a battle ship."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for that.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "battle ship," in line 7, on page 81, insert "to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $6,000,000."

Mr. FOSS. That is the language of last year's bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Phince].
Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I accept so far as I may the substitute. My purpose in offering it was to fix the cost, so that we would not have a battle ship and under the guise of similarity make it cost $10,000,000 or thereabouts.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his amendment?

Mr. PRINCE. I will withdraw it.
The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "act," in line 14, page 81: "Provided, That before the construction of these vessels shall be begun a test shall be made with the service 12-inch projectile fired against a 12-inch Kruppized armor plate at a range of 5,000 yards to ascertain whether such projectile fired with service pressure will penetrate such armor plate."

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that, or I will reserve it.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I do not think a point of order lies, but I will not discuss that, as I want to get at the merits of the question. We have just authorized the construction of two battle ships. Now, a battle ship is not dangerous unless it has on it dangerous projectiles. In the last three years it has been determined that the torpedo zone has doubled. In other words, no battle ship will fight an enemy within a distance of less than 5,000 yards, because the torpedo will destroy at 4,000 yards. that is the case and scientific men are to be believed, the 12-inch guns you are going to put on these battle ships will not harm or penetrate 12-inch armor on a ship of the enemy at a distance of 5,000 yards.

The Naval Institute, in 1903, said:

A new torpedo range of 2,000 yards is likely to make the range limit of guns 3,000 yards, a distance at which very little penetration may be hoped for even with normal impact secured.

That was in 1903. Since that time the torpedo range has increased to 4,000 yards, which makes at present the fighting range 5,000 yards. I challenge the gentlemen on the other side to show one instance where a 12-inch projectile, fired from a 12-inch gun, has ever penetrated 12-inch armor at a distance of 5,000 yards. It was not done in the war with Japan. In the naval battle on the Sea of Japan two vessels were struck, one 42 times and the other 100 times, and not a single penetration was registered. So that it seems to me we ought to take a little care as to the class of guns we put upon these ships. Why is it the Navy Department has never made a successful test in this matter? Wise men have declared that the 12-inch gun will not penetrate at 5,000 yards. Why do they not settle it by making an actual 5,000-yard-range test? It can be done with a very little extra cost. They put at present the gun within 100 yards of the armor plate, and because it shoots through that piece of armor by a system of calculation they conclude that it will penetrate at a distance of 5,000 yards. They forget that the impact is direct when they fire at close range, whereas when you shoot 5,000 yards the missile has no direct impact, but the point strikes downward instead of straight; and that is why scientific men tell us that no armor plate can be penetrated at that range. If it should be determined by this simple test that a 12-inch missile will not penetrate modern 12-inch armor, then it will be seen that all the guns to be placed on these two new vessels just authorized will be innocuous to an enemy at the 5,000-yard range now enforced by the torpedo range, and this would work a revolution in our gun construction. After a 12-inch gun is fired from 60 to 100 times the rifling becomes so eroded as to make the gun worthless, and in less than two hours' fighting, during which time no harm can be done to the armored enemy if the necessary 5000-yard range is observed, the vessel carrying such guns must sail away to be reequipped with new

Let us have the Navy Department make this 5,000-yard test and report to this Congress the actual results, which will settle this matter once for all.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. The gentleman's amendment provides only for test?

Mr. WEBB. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. It seems to me that is a wise provision, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. WEBB. That is all I wish to say on the amendment at present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MUDD. I do. I do not wish to discuss the merits of the proposition at all. The point of order is that it is purely legislation and in no sense a limitation upon anything in that paragraph. There is no expenditure of money there upon which a limitation might be made, and the amendment is not germane to the authorization of the ship.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. This is not nything new. It is providing that existing law for tests shall anything new. be carried out in a certain way, and is a limitation on this appropriation. I think such amendments have always been ruled in order.

Mr. MUDD. There is no appropriation there.

Mr. WEBB. Certainly there is; the appropriation is made by the section I propose to amend.

Mr. SULZER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but the limitation on the appropriation is upon the $6,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that in its present form the amendment would constitute legislation upon an appropriation bill and is in violation of the rule. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. WEBB. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WEBB. Would the Chair object to suggesting what form of amendment would not be in violation of these multifarious House rules and that would be in order? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it hardly within its province to do so. The Chair can pass upon amendments only as they are offered and points of order made against them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two torpedo-boat destroyers, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $850,000 each.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for that the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

"Two torpedo-boat destroyers, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $800,000 each: Provided, That the cost of the three torpedo-boat destroyers provided for in the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, exclusive of armament, shall not exceed $800,000 each."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make this explanation to the committee: Last year we provided for three torpedoboat destroyers to cost, exclusive of armament, $750,000. This year we provide for two, to cost $850,000 each. The constructor is of the opinion that these five—that is, the three authorized last year and the two authorized in this bill-ought to be of the same size, and accordingly recommends this provision, which he has sent to me, providing that the cost of each, exclusive of armament, shall be $800,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. That is a reduction over the amount authorized in this bill. Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the Department contemplate increasing the size of the vessels authorized last year? Is that why the cost is increased?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know; I could not state positively.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that for this reason—
Mr. FOSS. Possibly a little, because the appropriation asked for is $800,000 instead of $750,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the Department asked the gentleman's committee to increase the size of the colliers and increase the appropriation, it did not state that the extra cost was due to the increased size, but stated it was due to the fact that they were built in navy-yards. Is this increased cost due to the fact that they are to be built by contract?

Mr. FOSS. No; I don't know that it is. I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

And the contract for the construction of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all of said vessels the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of any proposals for the same; the plans, drawings, specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts shall be observed and followed, and, subject to the provisions of this act, all said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, and in all their parts shall be of domestic manufacture; and the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture, and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy; and not more than one of the vessels provided for in this act shall be built by one contracting party: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate, and shall build any of the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, bidding for the construction of any of said vessels have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding, the effect, object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment,

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To follow in line 11, page 82, after the word "Navy:"
"And of the vessels provided for in this act, and the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, not more than one battle ship and one torpedo-boat destroyer, or two torpedo-boat destroyers, shall be built by one contracting party."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to explain to the committee the reason for this. In the bill of last year we provided that not more than one-

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOSS.

Mr. ROBERTS. Does not the gentleman want to strike out the language after the word "Navy," in lines 11, 12, and 13, and substitute that language for it?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. My motion is to strike out the words "and not more than one of the vessels provided for in this act shall be built by one contracting party" and substitute the provision which I have sent to the Clerk's desk and which has just been read. Now, the effect of that is this: For instance, as it now reads in the bill if a contractor offers the lowest bid for a torpedo-boat destroyer and secures that contract he would not This permits be able to secure a contract for a battle ship. every contractor who is successful to secure contracts to the number at least of one battle ship and one torpedo-boat destroyer or two torpedo-boat destroyers. The Constructor of the Navy sent me this provision and said that he believed that this would be for the best interests of the Government.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 81, line 21, after the word "delivery," insert the following: "Provided, That any bid for the construction of any of said vessels upon the Pacific coast shall have a differential of 4 per cent in its favor, which shall be considered by the Secretary of the Navy in awarding contracts for the construction of said vessel."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Against that the gentleman from New York makes the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will reserve the point of order. Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I will explain. This amendment is exactly identical with the amendment adopted in the bill of last year. Its purpose is not to secure any more or new rights or privileges than were given in the amendment of last year. I am advised that the reason why the committee did not in-corporate it in this bill was because they went upon the theory that the battle ship provided for last year was authorized in the bill passed at the last session. In the minds of some of us there is a doubt whether that is so, and in order to remove that doubt we ask the House to incorporate this amendment. It is exactly the same as last year, word for word. Now, so far as the point of order is concerned, I do not see it is subject to the

for the following reasons: This amendment was put on by the House last year, because it was believed that on account of the disaster at San Francisco a differential that has heretofore been given to the Pacific coast should be given, but when this 4 per cent differential was given some years ago I took occasion to place in the Record the bids which were submitted for ships under the authorizations. The bids of the contractors on the Pacific coast were 4 per cent to a penny in excess of the bids submitted by the contractors on the Atlantic coast, and the indications of the combination were so clear that it seemed to everyone that it was time to stop. When the differential was removed the Pacific coast contractors underbid all others. No more conclusive proof was needed that the differential was unnecessary. If the gentleman desires I will look up the record and place the bids in it again for the information of the House.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, on the Pacific coast we have just about completed the construction of one battle ship, and perhaps a few figures upon that particular vessel will throw some light upon the amendment now before the committee. The difference in freight as paid by the con-tractor on the material used in the construction of the Nebraska between what it would have cost him to have constructed it in any yard upon the Atlantic coast was $165,000. The differential amounted to only $150,000. There is another point which I want to call to the attention of the committee, and that is it costs about $75,000 to take a vessel from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, so that the differential would only amount to about 2 per cent. I therefore trust that the House will vote this amendment, because we do not have to-day upon the Pacific coast a single battle ship that is fit for use. We only have three battle ships upon the Pacific, and one of them is not completed, and the other two are in dry docks to be repaired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman permit me? That is the fault of the Administration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is the fault of the Administration, but I voted a few moments ago for the increase to the Navy

I am in favor of the policy of building up a powerful Navy. am in favor of this nation having a Navy as great as that of any other country. I am in favor of this bill for the general good of the whole country, but as a representative of the Pa-cific coast I am unable to understand of what benefit our Navy is to my coast under the present policy pursued by the Navy Department. I am entirely at a loss to account for the policy of the Department in relation to the Pacific Ocean. no first-class naval vessels on the Pacific, and yet on the Pacific is where our next contest will almost certainly come, excuse of the Department for not sending any but inferior vessels to the Pacific is that they have only sufficient vessels to make one squadron, so therefore they must keep it on the Atlantic, where, in time of war, it would be utterly useless, but entirely safe. The only reason that I can see for keeping the squadron on the Atlantic instead of the Pacific is so that the officers can show their bravery, their courage, and efficiency in their strenuous social functions of our eastern cities. If there is any other excuse for it, it has never yet been made public. Neither do I believe that any justification can be shown for keeping most of the few vessels that are on the Pacific over in the Orient, exposing the men to the diseases and the debilitating conditions of a tropical climate and spending millions of money for repairs in the shipyards of other nations. It is the opinion of all naval men that I have ever consulted upon the proposition, and I have talked with many of them, that for the purpose of defending our oriental possessions a battle ship is just as well placed—in fact, is better placed—at Puget Sound than if placed at Manila. No naval expert, in fact, denies this proposition. If our fleet was on Puget Sound and any European squadron would attempt to strike our Philippine possessions, it would have to travel more than 5,000 miles further to reach the Philippines than would our squadron. Or, in other words, our fleet could go from Puget Sound to the Philippines, take ten days to coal, reach Manila well provided with fuel to fight a long engagement, and be there at least one month ahead of any European fleet.

If war were declared or threatened, our Asiatic fleet would immediately be hurried home. No other nation, except Japan, keeps a battle-ship squadron in the Orient. Japan's squadron is so immeasurably superior to ours that the only thing ours could possibly do, in case of a conflict with Japan, would be to attempt to escape and reach home. We would not dare make an attack until our squadron from the Atlantic could be brought to the Pacific. But this Asiatic squadron of ours, however, if kept at home, would prove a strong defense for the ports on the Pacific. One of the naval experts of this country, and now connected with the Navy upon this subject, has made the following pertinent statement:

A question which comes at once before any man who studies this matter is this: In case of a war with a foreign power, what would be done with our Asiatic fleet? Judging from facts, which any citizen has at his command, it is safe to say that no Administration could afford to ignore the clamor which would instantly be made to bring our battle ships home from China and to assign them to the protection of our own coasts. Without inquiring as to the correctness of this popular demand, the student is at once led to another query. "Granted its force, whether correct or not, would it not be more seemly to put our battle ships at this moment where they must inevitably go when war breaks out, and thus appear to do to-day willingly and of deliberate purpose that which if done later would seem to be done under the stress of foreign dicution?"

This statement is especially pertinent at this time.

There are other reasons of very great weight why our Pacific squadron should be kept at home.

It would keep our men in a healthy climate and in better surroundings in every respect.

It would keep our officers in touch with their own country.

It would give opportunities for fleet drill on the unrivaled waters for this purpose on Puget Sound.

It would increase and extend the knowledge of our commanding officers of our own coast, and this in itself, in the opinion of naval men, is of predominating importance.

It would put an end to the spending of vast sums of money for repairs in oriental yards.

In view of all the circumstances and conditions, I have been unable to see any reason why our money should be spent in foreign countries or why our men and ships should be exposed to the perils of oriental waters. I know that my opinion upon this proposition is fully concurred in by at least two admirals in our Navy. The facts and the reasons and the conclusions that I have stated I know are conceded to be correct by many, if not all, naval authorities. Why this policy, this way, of the Navy Department is continued, like the ways of the Lord, is past finding out. I will insert in the Record a statement that I have just received from the Navy Department, showing the distribution of the vessels on the Pacific, the amount spent in foreign yards for the last five years, and how absolutely no protection is furnished by the Navy to the Pacific coast of this country. This statement shows that the policy of the naval board on the Pacific is astonishing, indefensible, and almost criminally inex-

The letter and statement are as follows:

Washington, February 11, 1937.

Sir: Replying to your letter of the 7th instant, requesting to be furnished with information as to the amount of money that has been expended by the Navy Department for the repair of naval ships in Hongkong and other foreign yards on the Pacific for the last five years, stating the amount for each year separately; the number of first-class battle ships now in the Navy and how many of them are on the Pacific; also the number and character of the naval vessels of all kinds now on the Pacific and where the same are located, I have the honor to inclose herewith, for your information, statements which have been prepared by the Bureaus of Supplies and Accounts and Navigation, which answer the inquiries contained in your letter.

Very respectfully,

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to suggest that this provision is the same provision that was inserted last session, and not new legislation, but a limitation upon the power of the Secretary under this act. I do not think it is subject to a point of order. And I would say further, in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that the Government is entirely protected against any such combination as he suggests, as in the bill is a provision giving the Secretary of the Navy power to build any or all these ships in any navyyard if for the interests of the Government.

I desire further to say that this provision is not objected to by the members of the Naval Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from California is not in the nature of a limitation. It is legislation. and the Chair would have no hesitation in sustaining the point of order but for the fact that the paragraph to which the amendment is offered is itself out of order. It would have been so held had a point been made against it. The amendment appears to be germane to the paragraph. It has often been ruled that a paragraph that is itself out of order, having been by unanimous consent permitted to remain in the bill, may be perfected by any germane amendment. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HAYES. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 44, noes 45.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California, Mr. HAYES, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. FITZGERALD, will take their places as tellers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge act as teller.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the impression that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] voted with the gentleman from California, and that the gentleman from New York antagonized the amendment.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 66, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 23, page 82, after the word "vessel," the following: "Provided further. That in securing the armor of the best quality for the two battle ships mentioned in the paragraph herein, under the head of 'Increase of the Navy,' the Secretary of the Navy shall not contract to pay greater prices per ton than the prices contracted to be paid for the battle ships South Carolina and Michigan."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to state that the purpose of this amendment is to limit the price to be paid for the armor plate for these ships to the price that the Government contracted in its last contracts to pay for the armor plate for the battle ships South Carolina and Michigan.

The Government has made these contracts at $346 a ton. If the House will remember, a few years ago we paid $545 a ton. Then later, after efforts for an armor-plate factory, we had a reduction to $445 a ton; then a new contracting concern appeared on the field and offered bids for armor. The new contracting concern bid about $47 a ton less than the two old concerns—the Carnegie people and the Bethlehem people—who had up to that time been bidding the same prices. The Secretary of the Navy did not give the new concern the entire contract, but gave it—the Midvale people—only one-third of the contract at $398 a ton, and gave two-thirds of the contract to the old armor-plate manufacturers at the higher price of $445. Now, the next time there were bids for armor plate, and this was in last July, as I recall, the old concerns bid $375 a ton, which was less than the former bid of the new concern. But the new concern went lower than that, for they-the Midvale people-bid $346 a ton, which was $30 less than the two old concerns. Now, Mr. Chairman, one would think that the new concern would have gotten the entire contract. But, oh no! The old concerns then asked to have a share in it at the lowest bid, and the Secretary of the Navy gave the new bid-der—the Midvale people—only one-half of the contract, at $346 for the highest class of armor, and divided the remaining half between the Carnegie people and the Bethlehem people at the same price. Thus we have this price fixed by competition. The Midvale people bid $346, and the other two concerns were anxious to get half the contract at that price. What policy did the Secretary of the Navy practically announce in the award of these bids?

It seems to me-and I think it was an indication to these armor-plate factories hereafter-that the lowest bid may not get the whole contract hereafter, but that the contract will be divided, if all bidders so desire. If I am jusified in making that inevitable inference, then the tendency of that policy of the Navy Department will be to prevent low bidding. The intent of this amendment is to promote low bidding, and at the same time to limit our paying higher prices than the last contract. With this amendment the Midvale people and the Carnegie people and the Bethlehem people will be on the same footing, and with this understanding before them that the Government will not pay more than they were glad to get the last contract at. If we do not put this limitation upon it I fear they will not give as low prices again. With this explanation I hope the gentleman who made the point of order will not insist upon it, but let the House vote directly upon the amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will bear with me on the point of order one moment, following the very clear statement of the Chair when the last point of order was raised, the Chairman should hold that this is germane to the proposition in this bill in the last paragraph read, on which no point was made. In it there are provisions for the building and securing of material for the ships. This is an amendment to such provisions, is germane, and not subject to the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word upon this question. In the first place, I will call for a decision on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is the provision in reference to a new battle ship has been held not to be subject to a point of order. Now, there may be, and are, as I understand, possibly, provisions in this paragraph as read which are subject to a point of order. Clearly the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina is new legislation, and if presented as an original proposition is subject to the point of order as new legislation. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman is not germane to anything in the paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. It is germane to what is in the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. No; it is not germane to anything in the paragraph. It is not seeking in any way to perfect anything in the paragraph. It is an entirely new proposition, and while it is germane to the question of building a battle ship, the original proposition of building a battle ship is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. It would have been.

Mr. MANN. No; if it were understood that the original proposition of building a battle ship is subject to the point of order, then there are many men in this Chamber who would regret that they did not make the point of order, and I am one of those. The mere proposition to build a battle ship is not subject to the point of order. Those provisions in the paragraph which are subject to the point of order are not sought to be amended by this amendment, and it seems to me that it would be a strained ruling to hold that a new proposition, entirely different from anything in the paragraph, not seeking to perfect anything in the paragraph, shall be omitted from the rule merely because the original proposition contains another item which is subject to the point of order.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this paragraph to which the amendment is offered provides specially at the outstart for the construction of the vessels, exclusive of armor and armament, and that there is another paragraph in the bill that provides the armor. So clearly this amendment is not germane to this paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to that, of course I admit that an amendment similar to this might be germane to an armor-plate appropriation. The last paragraph read does not pretend to do anything except to give instructions to the Navy Department in reference to the very ships in this bill authorized. Now, when this paragraph undertakes to provide for the construction of these ships and for securing their material, and so forth, then it seems to me, that being the object of the paragraph, any provision that is germane to the construction and securing of material for these ships is also in order.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, just a further word on the point of order. This paragraph is one that makes a contract for the construction of said vessels. In order to make a contract to construct we have a right, as a part of the terms of the contract, to limit, in behalf of the people, what we will pay under that contract for the purchase of the armor. It seems to me, in view of that fact, that the amendment does not fall under the objection of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair observes that in the paragraph immediately preceding this the cost is stated "exclusive of The Chair will ask the chairman of the Naval Committee whether this paragraph under consideration, providing for the contract for the construction of vessels, is intended to include the armor, or whether that is excluded?

Mr. FOSS. It does not. It says "exclusive of armor and armament," and relates to the hull and machinery.

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the phrase "steel material," occurring in line 7, page 82, relates to armor?

Mr. FOSS. All I can say is that the only provision under the increase of the Navy carried in the bill relating to armor and armament is the provision on page 83, lines 15, 16, and 17.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the appropriation on account of contracts already made. In this particular paragraph it is required that all of the material be of domestic manufacture, and the act of August 3, 1886, to which reference is made herein, is an act under which several vessels were authorized, and by its terms all of the material, hull, machinery, and equipment are required to be of domestic manufacture. The armor is a are required to be of domestic manufacture. part of the vessel. The provision in the previous paragraph fixing a limit of cost merely refers to the cost of hull and ma-This paragraph authorizes contracts for the construction of the entire vessel.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I understood the Chair to inquire what was included in this provision for the battle ship, and I think the chairman of the Naval Committee [Mr. Foss] must have misunderstood the question. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, when a battle ship is authorized as it is done here, we authorize the hull, the machinery, and the armor. We have heretofore in legislation and we have in this bill put a limit of cost on the hull and machinery. We never have put a limit of cost heretofore on the armor. Now, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. William W. Kitchin] seeks by his amendment to put a limit of cost on the armor. The contract for the armor must be let when the contract for the hull is let in order that the armor may be delivered to the shipyard and put upon the hull at the right time. Otherwise you would delay the construction of the ship to an unreasonable time, and, as a matter of fact, the reason most often given for the delay in building ships is that the people furnishing the armor do not keep their contracts and furnish the armor on time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have here the act of August 3, 1886, to which reference is made in this paragraph. Section 4 provides:

That the armor used in constructing said armored vessels and for completing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, provided contracts for furnishing the same in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties. Such armor shall be accepted only after passing such tests as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy and inserted in the contracts.

This reference to this act clearly shows that the armor is included in this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The preceding paragraphs, under the head of "Increase of the Navy," authorize the construction of a battle ship and certain other vessels. It is true that the cost is limited to a certain amount exclusive of armor, but the paragraph authorizes the entire vessel. Now, the paragraph under discussion and to which the amendment is offered says "and the contract for the construction of said vessels"—without any limitation as to the armor or armament and without excluding the same-shall be let so and It then provides general legislation for the construction of said vessels, how the contracts for their construction shall be awarded, etc., and requires that they "in all their parts shall be of domestic manufacture." It seems to the Chair to cover all parts of the vessel. This is made even more clear by the provision in the paragraph that their construction shall be in accordance with the act of 1886, which specifically includes armor and provides for testing it. The paragraph itself, to which the amendment is offered, contains many provisions changing existing law, and must have been ruled out had a point of order been made against it; but having been permitted to remain in the bill, no point having been made against it, its perfection by any germane amendment is in order. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina is germane, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to state to the members of the committee that the Secretary in his report this year gives his reasons why he made the contract for the armor plate as he did. He says:

In urging this conclusion I was influenced partly by the fact that the Midvale Company was a little behind in its deliveries under pre-vious contracts, but mainly by the probability that if no work was given to the old companies, since the Government was their only customer and they would soon complete their deliveries under the contract, after going out they would transform their plants for the production of armor plate and devote them to other productions for which there is a commercial demand, thus reducing the facilities for production of an article essential to the national defense and leaving the Government no source of supply except the Midvale Company. The conditions of the Department were accepted by all three companies and the contract was thus divided, the contract being on the whole the most favorable one of this character ever made by the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. William W. Kitchin) there were—ayes 88, noes 124.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the provision in the naval appropriation act approved June 29, 1906, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to contract for submarine boats after certain tests to be completed by March 29, 1907, is hereby amended, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, so as to extend the test period until May 29, 1907; and the limit of cost provided for in the authorization aforesaid is hereby increased to $3,000,000, and the sum of $1,000,000, which includes the half million dollars heretofore appropriated, is hereby appropriated, and to remain available until expended.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what submarines, if any, we now have in use?

Mr. FOSS. We have about a dozen submarines now, eight already constructed and some in process of construction.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is this an additional appropriation of $3,000,000 or is it an addition of $2,000,000?

Mr. FOSS. Last year we made an appropriation of $500,000, with an authorization of a million dollars, for the purchase of submarine boats after tests had been made by the Secretary of the Navy of the different boats submitted to see which was the best. Now we increase that appropriation of last year by $500,000, making in all, the appropriation of last year and this, a million dollars. An increase of authorization after tests is made of from $1,000,000 to $3,000,000—that is to say, an increase of $2,000,000 in authorization,

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Can the gentleman state about what amount has already been expended for submarines prior to this

Mr. FOSS. A submarine boat costs about $170,000. We have already built and have in process of construction twelve. Eight are already built and four are building, making a total of twelve, so that we have expended for submarines a good deal over a million dollars.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is not this a very unusual increase, pointing toward a different policy almost?

Mr. FOSS. Well, I do not know. Perhaps I can not answer that as well as some other members of the committee. Personally I am not in favor of submarines, but the majority of the committee is in favor of it, and I should prefer that the gentleman from Ohio would interrogate some other member of the committee.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one further question, whether this has the approval of the Navy Department; whether this is in accordance with the recommendation of the Navy Department?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, the Navy Department made no recommendation as to submarines this year except to extend the time for tests under the provision of the bill of last year.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. It seems to me that this is quite unusual.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected. Mr. McNARY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. My reason for doing this is the fact that four years ago I offered an amendment to the naval appropriation bill providing for an increase of torpedo boats, torpedo-boat destroyers, and submarines. It was opposed by the committee at that time on the ground that these boats were not useful and not dangerous to the enemy, though they had proved their usefulness at about that time in the Japanese attack on the Russian fleet at Port Arthur. I have in my hand the official report of Vice-Admiral Fournier, of the French navy, showing the admirable achievements of the submarines in the French maneuvers, and also his article in Le Continent on torpedo boats and submarines. This document contains probably the most valuable information as regards submarine boats that has ever been written, proving their utility and efficiency. In view of its great interest and of its immense importance, I hope that every Member of this House will have an opportunity to read it, because I believe it will convince all who do so that the submarine boat, as the Admiral says, is one of the most important, if not the most important, adjuncts of any fleet. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to include this in the RECORD as a part of my remarks for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks for the purpose stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

The documents referred to are as follows:

Vice-Admiral Fournier, of the French navy, who was in command of the combined Mediterranean and Channel feets during the French naval maneuvers last summer (1906), has made an official report on the same, in which he points out the remarkable achievement of the submarines, and has also contributed to Le Continent an appreciation of the submarine boat, based on his intimate knowledge and experience with these craft in the maneuvers and in general service. Admiral Fournier, besides being commander in chief, is inspector-general, member of the superior council of the navy, and permanent inspector-general of stations for torpedo boats and submarines. The following is taken from his article in Le Continent:

"The great naval powers are now building battle ships of 20,000 tons, costing $10,000,000. To oppose these larger torpedoes will be necessary; but we all know that the dimensions of the torpedoes will increase their tonnage the torpedoes will increase their explosive force.

necessary; but we all know that the dimensions of the torpedoes will increase with the dimensions of the hostile ship—that is, as the ships increase their tonnage the torpedoes will increase their explosive force.

"The damage caused by this weapon is terrible. A large hole is blown into the ship, no matter how strong it be, through which the water rushes in, and immediately the ship heels over. Even a small inclination of 10 to 12 degrees renders the battle ship incapable of serving its guns, and all this may be done by a single torpedo. This being the case, you may well ask, why commission these enormous ships, costing $10,000,000, when a single torpedo may either destroy them or put them out of action?

"I, however, must not be understood as saying that we do not need the heavy fighting ships; they form a useful part of a battle fleet, since it is desirable to have an attacking force to throw the enemy into disorder, and thus give opportunity for the smaller vessels to perform their functions. Nevertheless, a flotilia of submarine and torpedo boats would be sufficient to destroy a large battle fleet, for these units, which are only a fortieth or fittleth as large as battle ships and which may be constructed at a moderate cost in from a year to eighteen months, each carry six or even eight torpedoes, any one of which may sink a ship. What fleet could resist such a power?

"Moreover, a submarine has nothing to fear for itself, since it escapes all danger by diving. The principal difference between the battle ship and submarine lies in the fact that the latter has nothing to fear from the battle ship, while the battle ship has everything to fear from the battle ship, while the battle ship has everything to fear from the battle ship, while the battle ship has everything to fear from the battle ship, while the lattle ship has everything to fear from the battle ship, while the battle ship has everything to fear from the battle ship, while the lattle ship has everything to fear from the submarines, I would much pre

ADMIRAL FOURNIER'S OFFICIAL REPORT ON THE FRENCH NAVAL MANEUVERS OF 1906.

Admiral Fournier gives ample reasons for the faith which is in him with regard to the efficiency and value of submarines not only for the local defenses of harbors and coast, but for offensive work in the narrow seas. The maneuvers included attacks under war conditions by the combined battle ship and cruiser fleet on Algiers, Bizerta, and Marsellie, which was defended in the daytime by submarines and at night by surface torpedo boats. The operations at Algiers and Marsellie took the form of bombardments, and at Bizerta of an attempt to land troops.

On the first two operations Admiral Fournier reports as follows:

"In the first place, following the chronological order, the attempted bombardment of Algiers by the fleet demonstrated the fact that a small flotilla of submarines covering the waters and commanded by the guns was sufficient to render the attack abortive, and even to force the commander of the fleet to abandon the attempt on account of the excessive risks run by his ships. The superiority of the mobile defense of a port by submarines over a fixed defense by batteries, even when the latter are strong enough to repulse the enemy, was demonstrated, for the submarine can prevent damages by the enemy's guns which the coast artillery can not do, since they are only able to repulse the fleet after an engagement more or less prolonged.

"In other words, among all the methods of harbor defense, the submarine alone is able to prevent merely by the moral effect of its presence any attempt at bombardment or the landing of troops, and, in consequence, the damages and disastrous consequences which would result therefrom.

"In all that concerns the second operation—that is, landing of troops on the coast near Bizerta—the maneuvers of July 21 demon-result therefrom.

"In all that concerns the second operation—that is, landing of troops on the coast near Bizerta—the maneuvers of July 21 demonstrated the importance of the losses which a flotilla of submarines could inflict during the day upon the enemy's ships attempting to land troops, and to hold station afterwards for the purpose of supplying the troops and covering them with their guns."

After reporting upon the successful use of the ordinary torpedo boats for night attacks in the operations off Bizerta and Toulon, the admiral says:

says:

"As to the attacks of the submarines, which took place off Bizerta and Marsellle during the 13th, 17th, and 31st of July and the 2d of August, their success was still more astonishing.

"On the first two days the average number of successful attacks for each submarine was two and one-half, and on the third day the average was three times for each boat. By 'successful attack' is meant to approach without being seen to a point well within torpedo range of the approach without being seen to a point well within torpedo range of the enemy."

Speaking of the improvement in the tactical handling of the submarines which has taken place, the report goes on to say:

"On account of the lack of public knowledge in France, as well as abroad, with regard to the progress accomplished in the last two years in the tactical use of our submarines, the figures I have given will cause much surprise. This surprise will apply also to naval circles, which are even less well informed and which are almost unbelievably ignorant of the progress made, and which still retain the erroneous impression, gathered from our first maneuvers, that the attack of the submarine is always revealed by the presence of its periscope in sufficient time to enable the enemy to defeat the attack which it is menaced by a maneuver either defeasive or offensive.

"One of these maneuvers consists in running away as rapidly as possible from the submarine when discovered and before the latter is within torpedo range of the ship. The other, on the contrary, consists in running directly toward the submarine in an attempt to prevent the effective firing of the torpedo by forcing the boat to divequickly in order to avoid a collision of which it might be the victim.

"But of these two maneuvers, the first one only is prudent and safe, assuming, of course, that it is possible under the conditions that I am defining. As to the other, well as it may look in a tactical study, its efficacy is very doubtful when the first is impossible, and it may well end disastrously. Those who speak of it deliberately as a possible maneuver might well hesitate to apply it at the critical moment in time of battle. It can not be put into effect without exposing the ship attempting it to the danger of being torpedoed, since, on account of the relative positions and courses, she may be able to reach her adversary soon enough. Practically, in such a case the submarine, before being obliged to dive in order to avoid collision, can fire a torpedo wh the ver within torped distance unobserved is solely a matter of practice and professional judgment, so that the relative number of successful attacks under similar circumstances is a measure of the efficiency of the officers in charge.

Commenting upon the use of the smaller types of defensive submarines in preventing bombardmenis, etc., in bad weather, the Admiral points out that both sides suffer about equally, and then goes on to point out a constant advantage possessed by a mobile harbor defense composed of submarines by day and torpedo boats by night, "which lies in the fact that the ships of a naval force engaged in a bombardment or in the landing of troops always find themselves more exposed to the attacks of these small vessels than is the case when the ships are isolated on the high seas with entire liberty of movement. That is to say, so far as daylight attacks by submarines are concerned, ships occupied in landing troops are obliged to be stationary, thus presenting targets to the submarines much easier to strike than when under way, and, moreover, they are unable to execute any maneuvers, either offensive or defensive, to protect themselves. In the case of a bombardment ships are obliged, when batteries are present, to follow regular routes at fixed distances and at uniform and moderate speeds in order to insure accurate shooting at different targets, and this fact greatly facilitates the attack of the submarines, which is rendered still more easy by the fact that under these circumstances the battle ships can get no protection from their escort of torpedo-boat destroyers, which, owing to the artillery fire, can not interpose themselves between the shore and the ships, whereas the submarines, being invulnerable to choosing the most a cassio for predoces are carried and accordance of the objective and of returning to the attack upon one or the other of the objective and of returning to the attack upon one or the other of the ships until all their torpedoes are exhausted.

"All of this furnishes the m cusses at some length the enormous possibilities of the use of this type as an offensive weapon, terming it, in fact, "the most redoubtable arm." Concluding this portion of his report, he says:

"The conditions for the success of such a submarine attack will evidently not exist in every encounter in war times, but in the regions most frequented by the battle-ship fleet or the enemy, where the submarines may serve continuously, each submarine will certainly find sooner or later (provoking it, if necessary, by an ambuscade) a favorable occasion for disabling or destroying several important ships of the enemy's fleet, and this, of course, according to the measure of their number and activity. This prospect should give us pause, particularly if we remember that the submarine of large tonnage, of which the military rôle will become so important and even decisive in naval war, costs only about one twenty-fifth the price of a single modern battle ship."

As an example of the usefulness of such a flotilla of independent submarines, the admiral, speaking of the case of the sea defense of Tunis, says:

marines, the admiral, speaking of the case of the sea defense of Tunis, says:

"As is now manifest after the success of the attack of the submarines in the recent maneuvers off Bizerta, fortified by the even more brilliant results off Marseille, a flotilla of this character having the necessary effective radius of action would most certainly render it impossible or disastrous for the enemy's fleet to attempt a landing of an army corps on the south coast, or, better still, in the Gulf of Tunis, where it could take in reverse the capital, our arsenal Sedi-Abdallah, and the formidable batteries on the sea front of Bizerta."

The admiral urges upon his Government the necessity of hurrying forward as much as possible the construction of flotillas of independent submarines.

forward as much as possible the construction of flotillas of Independent submarines.

At the close of the maneuvers in his order of the day Admiral Fournier states:

"The operations of coast warfare which have been carried out by the fleet before Algiers, Bizerte, Toulon, and Marseille have shown incontestably that the chief arm of defense of ports is the torpedo in all its forms, but especially when used by torpedo boats at night and by submarines by day. The following figures show what ravages the torpedo boats and submarines have made in the ranks of a fleet which took part in these operations:

"The fleet had put out of action five vessels before Bizerte, five before Toulon, sixteen before Marseille during the morning of July 31, twenty-five before Marseille during August 2, without counting those which would have been torpedoed before Algiers, where the submarines were not present during the manuevers of July 6. It can not, therefore, be too emphatically insisted upon that the protection of the coast of France in the future will be by a numerous fleet of torpedo boats and submarines covering the ports and the points on the shore most accessible to attack by an enemy. Such a fleet will have even greater effect than shore batteries. At sea the arm to win must incontestably be the vessel of large displacement, but torpedo boats and submarines can destroy a victorious fleet wishing to take advantage of its success by finally attacking the enemy's ports. From this point of view the coast operations of our fleet have profitably taught us lessons which carry us beyond the point where they were left by the English navy in its brilliant mobilization maneuvers on the high seas last month."

In his final conclusion the Admiral declares that in the future no battle fleet will be able to attain its full efficiency, defensive and offensive, and above all as a preventive of all possible aggression unless there be associated in its composition submarines with the heavy fighting ships.

ing ships.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized, $9,000,000.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Add after "dollars," in line 17, page 83:

"Provided, That before said money shall be expended, in order to determine the least thickness of armor plate necessary to defeat penetration of armor-plercing shell at a minimum fighting range of 5,000 yards, a test shall be made at the earliest practicable date by the Ordnance Department of the Navy with the service 12-inch gun, employing service powder charges and projectiles, against a target composed of a 10-inch Kruppized armor plate, rigidily backed and located, at an actual distance from the gun of 5,000 yards, and the results of such test reported to Congress."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The paragraph itself, to which the amendment is offered, is a plain, straight appropriation of money. It does not change existing law. The amendment is new legislation, changing existing law, and violates the rule upon that subject. This is not the case of a germane amendment to a paragraph, itself out of order.

Mr. WEBB. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of said money shall be expended until a test shall be made to ascertain whether said plate can be penetrated by a 12-inch service gun at a distance of 5,000 yards from the gun.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken. The amendment amounts to a direction to the Secretary of the Navy to make a certain test not required by existing law.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I beg the Chair's pardon. This no direction to the Secretary of the Navy to do anything.

is a limitation on this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph appropriates some money, and the amendment implies that the Secretary of the Navy must do certain things before he gets the money. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, then I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended for any armor plate that has not been subjected to a test showing said plate can not be penetrated by a 12-inch service gun at a distance of 5,000 yards from such gun.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I contend that that is a distinct limitation, and it has been ruled that such a limitation is in

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly legislation.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on this.

Mr. DALZELL. It is clearly legislation. It is not a limitation on the appropriation. It is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], interrupting the gentleman from Pennsylvania, a question. The Chair observes that in this paragraph it states that the armor appropriated for is for vessels "author-The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois whether that is for vessels heretofore authorized and already contracted for, and whether this armor is included in the contract?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I will say there is no test for vessels already authorized, including the vessel authorized in last year's act.

Mr. WEBB. In answer to that I will say that no appropriation has yet been made of any of this $9,000,000. This is a limitation upon this individual appropriation in this bill, and, I do not care where the money goes, this amendment is a limitation upon this individual appropriation, for there was no contract made by Congress last year to appropriate this $9,000,000, because we did not know at that time how much it was going to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois specifically whether this item of $9,000,000 is appropriated for armor already authorized and contracted for?

Mr. FOSS. This appropriation is for the armor of vessels already authorized. I could not state positively whether the contract for the armor of the ship authorized last year has been made, but the contract for all armor up to that ship authorized by the act of last year has been made, and of this appropriation $1,192,000 is toward the purchase of armor for the ship authorized by last year's act.

Mr. WEBB. I will ask the gentleman the question-

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of specific information that the armor appropriated for in this paragraph is under contract, and that this amendment would change existing law or a contract made under existing law, the Chair thinks the amendment is in the nature of a limitation upon the appropriation, and overrules the point of order. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. WEBB. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 102.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24925, the naval appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report the same with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote upon that proposition which appropriates $100,000 for a brass and iron foundry here at the Washington Navy-Yard.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any other

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. SULZER. The gentleman not having given notice that he would demand a separate vote-

The SPEAKER. It does not require a notice. If there is no further separate vote demanded upon any other amendment, the vote will be taken in gross upon the remaining amendments

The remaining amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote was demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 33, after the word "dollars," in line 15, insert: "For an addition to brass and iron foundry, $100,000."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-question was taken; and the Chair announced the " noes " seemed to have it.

Mr. MUDD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WATSON rose.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Speaker, I demand

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 109, nays 161, answering "present" 11, not voting 97, as follows:

VALDEZ, MARSHALL PASS AND NORTHERN RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 8283) to extend the time for the completion of the Valdez, Marshall Pass and Northern Railroad, and for other purposes, a similar House bill being upon the House Calendar.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 8283) to extend the time for the completion of the Valdez, Marshall Pass and Northern Railroad, and for other purposes.

First. Said company shall have three years from the passage of this act within which to complete the first 20 miles of its railroad, by way of Keystone Canyon, Marshall Pass to Copper River, and from thence to Tanana River, and six years from the date of the passage of this act within which to complete said railroad to the Tanana River, all to be within such rights as it possesses and not in any way affecting or contravening any vested rights of any other company or person or the rights of the Government, provided said company carry out the requirements of law.

Third. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a point of

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a point of order. I make the point of order that this bill is not in order, because it affects the revenue of the Government and it affects It exempts a road in Alaska from taxation and therefore affects the revenues of the Government.

The SPEAKER. As a question of fact, will some member from the Committee on Territories, or the gentleman himself, inform the Chair as to whether this license tax goes to Alaska or to the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not say that, but I raise the point of order because I wish an explanation to be made in reference to the bill. I am willing that the gentleman shall ask unanimous consent, and, if he can get it, explain the bill. I will not object; but it is an important bill, and I want an opportunity to hear an explanation.

Mr. BRICK. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that these revenues go to the Alaskan government for their expenditures there, but I am not absolutely certain of that. I can make an explanation of the bill. As it stands now, as well as I understand-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let it all go over without prejudice. It is getting late.

The SPEAKER. With the point of order pending?

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. If the House should adjourn, would it not go over with the point of order pending until to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think not. question is whether it can be taken from the Speaker's table and come before the House. It is not in the nature of unfinished business. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama and to the gentleman from Indiana that this matter, with or without information, can probably be settled in a minute or two.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the bill is an important one.

Mr. BRICK. I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he will find an explanation can be made in one or two minutes

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it is twenty minutes after 5 o'clock, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill and the point of order and all of it go over without prejudice to be considered to-morrow.

NOTICES OF MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I give notice that one week from to-day, on Saturday, the 23d, if agreeable to the Senate, I will ask that the business of the Senate may be suspended that fitting tribute may be paid to the memory of my late colleague, Senator Russell A. Alger.

Mr. CULLOM. In accordance with an understanding I will ask that on the same day, immediately after the close of the ceremonies with reference to the late Senator Alger, I shall submit resolutions commemorative of the life, character, and public services of the late Mr. Hrrr, a Member of the House from the State of Illinois.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to give notice that on Saturday the 23d, after the conclusion of the ceremonies in regard to the late Mr. Hitt. I shall ask the Senate to take up resolutions commemorative of the late Rockwood Hoar, formerly a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Massachusetts.

wish to ask the Senator what hour he indicated?

to the late Mr. HITT. I shall follow those.

Mr. BACON. I did not know of the number of notices, but the session is growing so short and I find so very little margin for the selection of days, I give notice that on the same day I will ask the Senate to take up resolutions relative to the death of the late Representative Lester, of my State. In view of the number of notices I shall endeavor to have the addresses not too numerous to be heard on that day. I suppose that subsequent to this time it is the intention of the Senator from Massachusetts to ask that some particular hour be fixed.

Mr. LODGE. No; it was thought best not to fix the hour to begin the eulogies, but to have them follow each other.

Mr. HALE. At 12 o'clock. I do that for this reason: The Senate has agreed that on and after Monday it will meet at 11, but if several very important committees can have Monday or Tuesday and not be brought here so early they will mature their business. So I believe that we shall forward the general business more by meeting Monday at 12 o'clock and allow the committees to complete their work.

o'clock on Monday next. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent to the present consideration of the bill.

bill at the close of the routine business I give notice that after this measure is disposed of I shall ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the in-

objection to its present consideration?

Mr. KEAN. I understood that the amount in the bill was reduced to something like $20,000 instead of $64,000. I do not see the Senator who has had it in charge present.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HALE rose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I rose to ask the Chair to enforce the order that was made yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the agreement made yesterday, debate is now in order upon the report of the conferees on the immigration bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (8, 4403) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' approved March 3, 1903."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have always since I have been a member of the Senate, whenever an opportunity offered, acted with the representatives of the Pacific coast upon questions affecting Oriental immigration and settlement in this country, because while the social and industrial conditions created by the presence in our midst of these unassimilable peoples create a situation of national interest and concern, their concentration in the States of the Pacific coast makes the Chinese and Japanese problem more distinctly a Pacific coast problem, just as the concentration of the negro in the South makes the negro problem more particularly a Southern problem.

The people of the South feel that, being more familiar with the negro character and the conditions out of which the negro problem arises than the people of the balance of the country, they understand better what kind of legislation is necessary and proper to meet these conditions.

For the same reasons the people of the South feel that as the people of the Pacific coast are more familiar with the Oriental character and the conditions out of which our Chinese and Japanese problem arises they understand that problem better than the balance of the country and know better what kind and character of legislation is necessary to meet that situation.

As the people of the South demand the right to settle the negro question in its local aspects, and as they insist that in its national aspects their interest and counsel should to a large extent control, so they think the people of the Pacific coast should be allowed to deal with the Japanese problem in its local aspects as they think best, and that in its national aspects their interest and counsel should control, as long as the action they propose is proper and within constitutional limitations.

In many ways in public speech and by private assurances Representatives upon this floor and in the other branch of Congress from the Pacific coast have shown their appreciation of these sentiments of the South toward them in respect to their race problem, and that they entertain a like sentiment toward the South with respect to its race problem.

For these reasons I should deeply regret to have to cast a vote affecting these questions which would tend to create friction or to alienate the feeling of mutual sympathy between these sections upon these questions, and I will not do it except under a strong sense of duty and compulsion.

It is unfortunate, Mr. President, that the bill as amended and framed by the conferees should couple a provision concerning Japanese immigration satisfactory to the Senators from the Pacific coast with a provision affecting the methods by which the South is endeavoring to supply its need for more labor in a way unsatisfactory to some Southern Senators at least.

This question of exclusion of Japanese laborers by legislation or treaty is in itself a great question—I might say now an acute if not an overshadowing question—and I think it would have been far better for the Administration and Congress to have dealt with it as a separate question. But it has been determined otherwise, and the two questions have been joined in one measure which is presented to us in such a form that we can not separate them. In a way we can not vote against one and accept the other, but we must accept or reject both.

If I believed, as does the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] and as does the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] that the proposed amendments would, if adopted, handicap or embarrass the South in its efforts to secure foreign immigration through State promotion and aid, I would vote against concurrence in the report, as much as I would regret to oppose a measure which Senators from the West think offers their section protection against an influx of cheap Japanese coolie labor.

Mr. President, in these conditions I have decided to vote for the bill as amended by the conferees because, after careful study of it, I have reached the conclusion that the changes it makes in existing law will not embarrass or injuriously affect the South in its efforts to solve its labor problem through means of the so-called South Carolina method of State promotion.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] have not overstated or exaggerated the labor situation and demands of the South. This is especially true of those Southern States in which manufacturing has been in recent years introduced and developed as rapidly and as extensively as it has been in States like North Carolina, Georgia, and South Carolina; States which twenty-five years ago were almost purely agricultural communities and which to-day count their mills and factories by the hundreds. Surely they have not overstated these demands so far as my State is concerned. I believe I am within the bounds of moderation when I say that in North Carolina we could profitably use in the lines of agriculture probably sixty thousand and in our mills and factories probably twelve or fifteen thousand more laborers than we now have.

As a result of this labor scarcity hundreds of thousands of acres of land which would yield profitable crops are uncultivated and between one-fifth and one-fourth of the cotton spindles in the State are idle.

Unless we can get this labor from elsewhere, either in this country or abroad, it means curtailment in our present activities and a halt in that wonderful development and progress, along both agricultural and manufacturing lines, which has contributed so much to the wealth and prosperity of the country at large and changed the balance of world trade in our favor.

We have tried to get this labor from other parts of our own country, because we have felt and thought it would be better, if possible, that it should be drawn from other parts of the United States, where the people are more in harmony with the native population than foreigners would be, but we have failed. It is not my purpose to go into the reasons for that failure, but simply to state the fact. In these conditions we have been compelled to look abroad for this additional labor.

While the volume of foreign immigration to this country dur-

While the volume of foreign immigration to this country during recent years has been enormous, scarcely any of it has gone to the South. If unsolicited and allowed to follow its own trend but little of it is likely to go there for a long time to come, especially if measures are not taken to correct false and erroneous notions of the social and labor conditions there which have been disseminated abroad by adverse interest.

Something in the direction of inducing and directing immigrants toward the South can be accomplished through State agencies for that purpose located at Ellis Island and at other places of alien debarkation in this country. The immigration bill as it passed the Senate contained the substance of a bill which I introduced two years ago providing for the maintenance by the States at Ellis Island of bureaus for this purpose. The House struck this provision out of the bill, but I am glad to see that the conferees have restored it. These agencies will help to some extent to solve the labor problem of the South, and to relieve the congestion incident to the settlement of a large per cent of our present immigration in the great cities and centers of population, but as the destination of the great mass immigrants, especially the better class of them, is determined before they leave the other side, no great measure of relief from the labor conditions we have in the South is probable or even possible from this source.

If the South must supply its labor needs through foreign immigration, and, as I have said before, it seems reasonably certain that it must, the only way in which it can supply it from this source, and at the same time get a fairly acceptable class of immigrants, is by reaching the immigrant before he leaves his foreign home. This, of course, can be done only through solicitation of representatives or agents either of individuals, corporations, or the State.

Under our contract-labor laws an individual or a corporation is not permitted to solicit or aid foreign immigration unless the immigrant be a skilled laborer and "like labor unemployed can not be found in this country." Under these laws there is an exemption in favor of the States from this prohibition against individuals and corporations by which a State may, through its agents located abroad, not only solicit but induce and assist

Some of the cotton-mill men of North Carolina have recently had rather an unpleasant experience with the Department of Justice growing out of an attempt on their part to take advantage of the exception with reference to skilled labor which I have mentioned.

These cotton-mill men, unable to find sufficient skilled labor in this country to operate their plants, and being advised that they might import this labor from abroad under the section in our Federal labor laws to which I have just referred, and which provides "that skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind, unemployed, can not be found in this country," imported a number of mill operatives from England. They did not intend to violate the law, and they did not think they were violating They are among the best men of my State and the law. They are among the best men of my State and would not knowingly violate the law. They were advised, and thought the proviso quoted meant they might import "skilled labor" if "available" labor of like kind unemployed could not be found in this country, and they claimed there was no skilled labor of like kind unemployed in this country reasonably "available" to them.

For this they have been indicted in the Federal courts "for importing labor under contract" and suits for penalties under the statute amounting to more than a hundred thousand dollars have been brought against them by the Government upon the contention of the Department of Justice that this proviso does not warrant the importation of skilled laborers under contract if laborers of like kind unemployed can be found anywhere in this country and which could be employed at the scale of wages which obtains in that section of the country where they could be found, notwithstanding it may be an entirely different scale from that obtaining in the section where they are wanted.

Under this strict, and I feel compelled to say rather hard, construction of the language of the proviso, all chance of securing skilled laborers for our factories under the initiative of the mill owners has probably been destroyed unless the courts shall overrule the construction placed by the Department of Justice upon the proviso to the statute to which I have referred.

I regret that the cotton-mill men of my State have gotten into is trouble. They are all good men. We have none better in this trouble. They are all good men. We have note that the State. They are law-abiding citizens, and did not intend to violate the law, if they have done so, and I hope the Government, as the facts in the case are more fully disclosed and understood, will become convinced that if the law violated it was a technical and not an intentional violation.

But while I feel this way about this matter, Mr. President, I can not but believe that our contract-labor laws are wise and that, except in cases of great emergency, it is better that immigration to this country should be either voluntary, and then that it should be restricted by such exclusions as may be necessary to safeguard our citizenship and protect American labor, or under State control to the end that only such classes of immigrants may be solicited and aided to come as the State's agents abroad, uninfluenced by any considerations except that of public good, may know or believe would make good and acceptable citizens.

The success of the South Carolina scheme through promotion commissioner of immigration offers to the South what I regard as a safe and practical plan to supply from abroad its labor while safeguarding it against the dangers of unrestricted immigration. This decision has raised high hopes in the South. I believe it furnishes the long-sought means of relief from a situation which has been growing more emergent every day.

I would not support the amendments proposed by the conferees if, in my opinion, they would change the present law so as to interfere with the rights of the States under the law to promote foreign immigration by solicitation and inducement through its properly constituted officials and agents abroad. I am going to vote for the bill as amended by the conferees because I am convinced it makes no such changes in respect to this right of the States as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] fear, and because, as I said before, I am anxious to aid the people of the Pacific coast in their effort to protect themselves against an influx of cheap and undesirable oriental labor.

Now, Mr. President, let up examine and analyze for a minute the so-called South Carolina plan, the decision of the Department of Commerce and Labor with regard to it, and the effect of the proposed amendments upon that plan, that we may see whether I am right in my conclusions and contentions.

As I understand it, the ruling of the Secretary in the South Carolina case, based upon the legal opinion of Mr. Earl, the solicitor of that Department, holds that under the exemption in favor of the States, it is competent for a State to send its agent to a foreign country; it is competent for that agent, in the name of the State, to advertise the inducements and the advantages of his State. He may set out climatic conditions; he may set out health conditions; he may state soil conditions; he may set forth the resources and industries of the State; he may set forth the wage scale and the demand for labor, and he may advertise any other inducement, such as free houses and fuel, or short hours of labor, etc., which his State may and does hold out to settlers. He may go further than that, under this ruling; he may, acting for the State, prepay the transportation charges of the immigrant to this country. He may go even further still. He may give the immigrant an assurance which is, in my opinion, almost, if not quite in effect, a contract that he shall have employment at a fixed scale of wages and a guarantee that, if he is not given such employment, or if he shall find any of the essential representations made to him untrue, or even if he is dissatisfied, he shall be returned to the country from which he has come at the expense of the State.

It appears from the opinion of the Solicitor of the Treasury in this case that the money to defray practically all the expenses incurred by the commissioner of immigration of South Carolina in securing and bringing over these immigrants was furnished by certain individuals and manufacturing corporations of that State, and that most of the immigrants upon their arrival were employed by these contributors.

The admission to this country of the immigrants brought over under these circumstances is a recognition by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor of the right of the State under existing law to receive these contributions from individuals and corporations, and with them pay expenses of immigrants so long as it is not shown that there was a contract giving the contributors to this fund preferential consideration in the distribution and employment of such alien laborers as might be induced to come.

Now, Mr. President, if the amendments proposed by the conferees are adopted, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor will have to modify to some extent his ruling as I have stated it; but I do not think that the modification will embarrass the States of the South in their efforts through State agency to secure needed immigration from abroad.

In what respects, Mr. President, would the opinion have to be changed? Giving full force and effect to the amendments proposed, there will still be left to the State the right to appoint an agent, to send that agent to any foreign country, with full power to advertise any and all inducements and advantages the State has in truth and in fact to offer to the settler. He may set forth labor conditions; he may set forth the scale of wages; he may give a positive assurance to the immigrant that if he comes he will find employment, and find that employment at a fixed and certain wage. He can go further; he can, using State funds for that purpose, pay his transportation expenses. He can likewise pay his transportation back to the country from which he came, if he is dissatisfied with the conditions as he finds them, or if he shall find that he can not secure employby State agency and the ruling of the Department of Commerce and Labor sustaining the right of the State to induce foreign ised and guaranteed. The only thing that the agent may immigration along the lines pursued by the South Carolina not do, Mr. President, that he can now do is to enter into a contract with the immigrant before his debarkation for services to be performed in this country at a fixed rate of wage, and the bureau of immigration of the State can not receive from individuals or corporations contributions to defray the expenses of solicitation and importation when those con-tributions have "a string tied to them," or when they are received upon an understanding of any kind or nature whatever, whether expressed, implied, or otherwise, that the contributor is to have a preference in the distribution of such immigrants as may thereby be induced to come.

Mr. President, there are serious objections to the importation to this country of alien contract labor under individual or corporation initiative, and these objections obtain with equal force against individuals or corporations using the State as their agent to do the same thing. The right to solicit and aid foreign immigration, while denied individuals and corporations, given to the States upon grounds of wise public policy which would be manifestly defeated if the individual or the corporation is allowed to do through a State agent what the law will not permit him or it to do directly. The objections therefore which obtain against contract labor directly induced by individual or corporation initiative in a large measure obtain where the individual or corporation supplies the money and means to the State, because under these conditions he or it will likely be the beneficiary of whatever success may attend the State's efforts.

For these reasons the law ought not, in my judgment, permit the State to receive from individuals or corporations money to be used in connection with promoting immigration under the exemption allowed to the State with any understanding or-expectation on the part of the contributors to such fund that they will enjoy or be given any preference or advantage in the distribution of aliens who might thus be brought to the State over other citizens.

Of course, there could be no sort of objection to contributions to this fund by anyone who contributes solely because of his desire as a citizen to aid in supplying a public demand in this regard, neither reserving nor demanding for himself any greater consideration in the distribution and employment laborers as may be induced to come than is accorded to other citizens of the State.

In recent years the subject of foreign immigration has been much discussed in North Carolina, and this discussion has disclosed more or less prejudice among the people against the importation of foreigners. That prejudice is based, not upon any hostility to foreigners as such, but upon an apprehension that if once the doors were opened objectionable and dangerous elements might and probably would be brought into the State and the standard of its citizenship thereby lowered. Mr. President, that prejudice has to some extent been overcome, but there is still a strong feeling among the people of North Carolina against foreign immigration except upon conditions which will guarantee the selection of those classes they desire and the ex-Clusion of those they do not desire.

They believe that if this matter of immigration is left to individual and corporate initiative, following a rule of human nature, the individual or corporation will seek that class of labor which is cheapest. They know that cheap labor does not generally mean good labor or give promise of a high standard of citizenship, and our people are more concerned about preserving the high standard of their citizenship than in supplying their labor demand.

When it was suggested to the people of my State that, under the method of State encouragement and State stimulation, these dangers could be avoided, and that the State, through its agents in foreign countries, would invite and assist to come only such foreigners as would make good citizens, that opposition largely I am advised that the legislature of my State which is now in session will enact before it adjourns legislation looking to the promotion of foreign immigration under State control and guidance along the lines followed by South Carolina and covered by the ruling of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I hope and believe, however, that the amount appropriated for this purpose will be amply sufficient to cover all reasonable expenses. It was the inadequaey of the South Carolina appropriation that made it necessary for the commissioner of immigration of that State to accept contributions from private

The South Carolina legislature only appropriated $2,000, as I understand it, to defray the whole expenses of its bureau of immigration in prosecuting the work of promoting and assisting immigrants to that State. Of course, $2,000 was utterly insufficient, and it was necessary to get the money from elsewhere. It is not shown nor do I mean to charge that these contributions were received with any unlawful or prohibited understanding or agreement; but I do believe and I do say that such a practice tends to defeat the very object of the law, which, while allowing States to promote foreign immigration, denies that right to the private citizen, and I do believe and I do say that it tends to defeat our laws against the importation of foreign contract labor.

If I thought, as I said in the beginning, that the changes proposed would so modify and change the present law upon this subject and the decision which has been rendered thereon as to embarrass any Southern State in carrying out its schemes get additional labor from abroad, I would vote against the bill. But, as I have said, I am satisfied that nothing of that kind will happen. I am satisfied that the only effect of these amendments will be to prevent an actual contract between the State and the intended immigrants and to prevent corporations from intervening and by making contributions to the State immigration funds become the beneficiary of the State success to the exclusion of the other citizens of the State.

Mr. President, I do not, as I have said before, apprehend any embarrassment to the States of the South growing out of the amendments under discussion, but I do not think there is any present necessity for this legislation. The object sought in making these changes in the law is not to provide against an actual or demonstrated evil or abuse, but against a possible abuse and a contingent evil. It would have been just as well to wait until there was an actual abuse by the States in their efforts to promote immigration. So far as the facts show there has been no abuse up to the present time. There may be none. This scheme, Mr. President, of promoting immigration through State agency has just been initiated. But one State has acted upon it—the State of South Carolina. There has been brought over up to this time but one shipload; I think about five hundred persons in all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Two shiploads.

Mr. SIMMONS. Two shiploads of five hundred each, probably.

Mr. TILLMAN. Six hundred and fifty in all.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says six hundred and fifty in Nobody up to this time has charged, certainly it has not been shown, that there has been any abuse of the authority of the State in this regard, so far as our contract-labor laws are concerned in the action of that State.

Other States in the South, encouraged by the success of South Carolina, seeing the opportunities that are offered by that method, are getting ready to take advantage of the ruling in that case. If in the process of development, as the States one after another adopt this plan and begin to operate under it, abuses shall arise, it will be time enough to resort to legislation. If abuses shall arise, growing out of contributions from corporations and individuals, resulting at least in an obligation which is likely to be recognized and give the contributor to those funds an advantage in the distribution of the immigrants they could probably be effectively dealt with by departmental regulations.

In fact, Mr. President, I am advised that the Commissioner Immigration has this matter in mind, and that he has warned the authorities of South Carolina that there must be no agreement between State authorities and contributors to immigration fund providing for a preference, nor must there be actual preferential treatment in distribution. I am also informed that the Department would, if an unlawful understanding or preference of this kind should be disclosed, hold itself authorized under existing law in deporting immigrants brought in under such conditions.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize my opposition and that of the people of my State to unrestricted immigration. opposed and the people of my State are opposed to the importation of foreign contract labor under individual or corporate initiative, largely because that would let down the bars to indiscriminate immigration. To stop and prevent the present unrestricted and indiscriminate influx into this country of aliens I offered the educational-test amendment to the pending measure, which the Senate adopted, but which the House struck I am sorry the conferees on the part of the Senate, after standing out for months for its restoration to the bill, should, under the stress of circumstances, have felt impelled to leave it out. I am glad to know that the commission of nine (for which the bill provides) to investigate the whole subject of immigration will give special consideration to the feasibility of applying this test.

Every consideration of public policy and equitable treatment of American labor requires that some effective restraint should be placed upon the ignorant hordes that are to-day pouring in upon us from nearly every quarter of the globe. In my opinion State selection, under conditions which will guarantee perfect independence and freedom in selecting the good and passing by the undesirable, is the most effective scheme of accomplishing

The people of my State would rather, in my judgment, struggle along with the hard labor conditions they have there to-day than to open the doors of that State to unrestricted immigration. They are especially opposed to the introduction into that State of immigrants from southern and eastern Europe, and I am advised that no immigration bill can likely pass our legislature which does not expressly provide that State agents abroad shall not solicit and induce to come to the State any except persons of Celtic, Scandinavian, or Anglo-Saxon origin and extraction.

The South must have more labor, and it is willing to get it abroad since it can not get it elsewhere, but it wants those who are to come selected with a view to safeguarding its citizenship from further race and class problems. This State method of stimulating immigration obviates the difficulty which has confronted us heretofore. It secures, by the process of juexclusion, the dicious and discriminating preferences and kind and class of immigrants we want and excludes in a measure those not wanted. We would get a class of people who would come to us, not as the Italians of southern Europe, not as the Huns and the Poles come, with the purpose of re turning just as soon as they can make a little money; not as the Chinaman or the Japanese come, with the purpose of going back as soon as he has exploited our labor markets; but with a fixed purpose when they come of staying; with a fixed purpose of making this country their home; with the purpose of adopting our customs and our habits, of learning our language, of assimilating with our people, of intermarrying with them and becoming a part of a homogeneous whole; with a purpose of making themselves true and loyal citizens of our country, ready to defend its flag, and able to comprehend and understand the genius of its free institutions.

That is the kind of labor and immigrants we want. If you let down the bars, if you permit corporations to go and bring in immigrants as they may desire, either directly or through a State agent, by furnishing to the State its immigration fund, that can not be accomplished, and the immigration we are likely to get in the South will largely be of a kind that we do not want, that will not help us, that will become an element of discord and disturbance, further complicating the social and labor problems which now, unfortunately, vex and distract us.

For that reason, Mr. President, so far as I personally am concerned, I am satisfied with this report, because I think it leaves to the States all the power in this regard that is needed, and all that the State has to do is to take up the burden itself and not ask somebody to bear it under an agreement or contract that they shall have an advantage. As it does this, it accomplishes that purpose which I say our people have of safeguarding this influx of immigration against the admission of that element that we think would be dangerous to our society and to our civilization.

UNION STATION, WASHINGTON, D. C.

During the delivery of Mr. Simmons's speech,

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me to make a motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly. Mr. KEAN. I ask that the vote by which the bill (H. R. 9329) to amend an act approved February 28, 1903, entitled "An act to provide for a union station in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," was passed be reconsidered.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey asks that the vote by which the bill named by him was passed Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I give notice that hereafter whenever a Senator is taken off his feet by the interposition of matter

Mr. SIMMONS. I had no objection to it, Mr. President. That is all right.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not all right.

Mr. SIMMONS. I knew it was in violation of the rules, but I did not care anything about it.

Mr. KEAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But other Senators are interested, as well as the Senator from North Carolina. The Senate is interested.

After the conclusion of Mr. Simmons's speech,

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 24991) making appropria-tions for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with amendments.

I should like consent that 200 additional copies of the bill be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that 200 copies of the bill, in addition to the usual number, be printed for the use of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. I give notice that I will endeavor to secure the consideration of the bill as soon as the agricultural appropriation bill is disposed of.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 4403) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,' approved March 3, 1903."

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I do not like this clause in the conference report:

Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

In the first place, I do not think that provision has any place properly in this bill. It has never been considered by either branch of Congress. So far as I can learn, that provision was prepared by the Secretary of State under the direction of the President of the United States and put into this bill six gentlemen, three conferees on the part of the House and three on the part of the Senate. I do not think the President of the United States ought to be allowed to legislate directly in regard to any subject, much less one of such vast importance as this. I am aware of the fact that you can not exclude it on a point of order, and that in order to defeat it the entire conference report must be rejected, and therefore it is necessary, if anyone objects to a particular clause, to give his reasons, and if there are enough objections by individual Senators to sufficient clauses the conference report will be sent back and another one brought to the Senate.

What does this clause mean, Mr. President? the Japanese coolies and laborers are to be excluded, that will not be satisfactory to the Japanese Government. If it does not mean that they are to be excluded, in my judgment, it will not be satisfactory to the Pacific coast. A temporary exigency of a political nature has arisen which seems to demand some legislation for the present. I can not, as the representative of one of the States of the Pacific slope, give my consent to this legislation. If it is satisfactory to the Senators from California, well and good for them. Under a certain condition, it is provided that the President of the United States may refuse to allow Japanese to come into the United States, the condition being where they are coming in to the detriment of labor conditions in the United States. That is not the only question involved in regard to Japanese cooly immigration. Every representative from the Pacific coast knows that there are objections to Japanese coolies besides their competition with our labor. There is on the Pacific coast more objection to Japanese coolies than to Chinese coolies. We do not need either Japanese or Chinese labor on the Pacific coast. If you could land them at Charles-ton, or New Orleans, or New York, or Boston, we would be better satisfied. We on the Pacific coast can get along better without them than with them. Wherever a Japanese cooly or a Chinese cooly comes in competition with our labor anywhere, our white laborers quit. They will not compete with it. They will not put themselves on an equality with it, not because they fear it, but there are moral questions involved which are not cured by this amendment.

Every representative from the Pacific coast knows that we do not need this labor. Every one of us can illustrate in our own State. I will take the great Coeur d'Alene mining camp, in Idaho, the greatest almost in the world, to illustrate that we do not need oriental labor. Fifteen thousand laborers are employed there. There are eight or ten large towns within a radius of 50 miles. It is the greatest lead-producing camp in the world. Twenty-five years ago, when it was started, the miners said, "No Chinaman shall come into this camp," and from that day to this no Chinaman has gone there. no trouble about labor. There is no trouble about waiters. There is no trouble about laundrymen. White men and white girls perform all the labor satisfactorily, and it is so in other parts of the West and in regard to labor for all our industries. But you let a half a dozen Chinamen go into that camp and you will get no white labor to compete with them in any employ-

The Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] yesterday offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill S. 4403 be instructed to present to the conferees an amendment providing for the exclusion of Japanese laborers and coolies from the United States and their Territories and insular possessions and the District of Columbia, to be effective January 1, 1908.

That is what the Pacific coast wants, if I understand the condition, and they would prefer to wait until they can convince the balance of the country, as they did in regard to the Chinese, that this legislation is necessary in order to maintain our civilization on the coast. If they can not convince them, then, of course, this legislation will fail. They do not want this make-shift. It has no business here; it is not properly here; and, as I say, it is brought in to bridge over a temporary difficulty and one which ought not to have arisen.

It seems to me that the Senate ought to agree with me that San Francisco, under the laws of California, should regulate her own schools, and that the President of the United States ought not to have entered into that controversy, and that you ought not by this legislation here to pass on a question which is already deeply agitating the Pacific coast. It ought to be left out until you can take it up properly and settle it finally. The Pacific coast representatives, I aver here, within one week after this passes, will be demanding the exclusion of Japanese coolies and laborers, not solely because they compete with our labor, but for other reasons which I will not go into detail in open session. But the reasons are there, and they are urged more against the Japanese than they were against the

I have nothing to offer in opposition to the civilization of the Japanese. I am not so certain but taking it altogether it is the equal, if not the superior, of ours. I am not attacking their civilization. But it is not our civilization. I have spent some time in Japan, many months, and have studied these people, and I yield to no one in my admiration for them. Their wealth is They have miles and miles of little shops equally distributed. in their cities, the families living in the shops, the members of the families manufacturing one particular article. they have gone into larger manufacturing. But in no country in the world at the present day, in my judgment, is wealth so evenly distributed as in Japan. The devotion of the children to their parents is most beautiful and touching, and the tenderness of the parents to the children is almost sublime. They have magnificent schools, commencing with the kindergarten and going to the highest education.

There are a great many commendable things about the Japanese, but there is a racial difference between them and us which can not be bridged over. I have known many persons who have lived with them for many years, and I have yet to find one who has ever made an intimate friend of one of them. Their hearts and consciences do not touch ours. We can not assimilate. It is impossible. And we of the Pacific coast who come in contact with the Orientals understand it better than you do. is legislation which ought not to be brought in here and fastened on us by six men in an immigration bill.

There are 45,000,000 Japanese in a territory the size of Montana. About one-twelfth of that area is agricultural. They have not as much agricultural land in all the Empire of Japan as there is in one of our large counties. There are 45,000,000 They are seeking some place to go. We do not want them. It will be much more difficult for us to legislate to keep them out if this clause goes through. not to legislate, very well. If the balance of the country do not agree with us and the evil is not sufficient so that they will aid us in what we believe ought to be done to preserve our civilization, we will accept that. But we do not want to be estopped through this legislation, which gives a power to the President and says he may exclude and for reasons which do not touch the main question at all, which govern us in our opposition.

I wish to say also that under this bill Japanese can go to Hawati, to the Philippine Islands, and our other possessions. There is no adequate restriction upon them. It is rather an encouragement to them to go to those islands, because, as I said, they are seeking places to go with their great population and limited agricultural country.

There has been a bill pending for two or three yearspassed the House twice-to give us free trade with the Philippine Islands. That means free trade in sugar and tobacco. The contention of those of us who oppose that bill has been, among others, that the Japanese market is close at hand, and if they could not get Filipino labor they could get Japanese labor to compete with our labor here, and our great corporations would go there and erect sugar factories. Under this law we invite the Japanese to go to the Philippine Islands and labor for these corporations for 15 or 20 or 25 cents a day, and they would establish other manufacturing plants in addition to sugar plants.

I think we ought to guard the Filipino as much as we guard our own people against this class of labor. We can compete with them here much better than the Filipino. It is difficult to get the Filipino to labor at all, and he would be utterly swamped, as the Hawaiians have been, if you send to that country the Japanese and the Chinese.

It does not make so much difference as far as Hawaii is concerned. There are only a handful of Americans there, five or six thousand, and some forty or fifty thousand Hawaiians. The Hawaiians will not labor anyway. They are very similar The Hawaiians will not labor anyway. They are very similar to our American negro. They love to lie in the sun, play their guitars, and sing, and loaf and fish, and take life easily, and in that tropical climate they can do this. They do not care to labor, and they do not care that the Japanese and Chinese have utterly and absolutely supplanted them, and there is nothing in the Hawaiian Islands to speak of except the sugar plantations. So I would have no particular objection to their getting their labor from Japan and China.

But it not just and fair to the Filipino to give this invitation to the Japanese to go there. Every Senator knows that in due course of time, probably at the next session, Congress will pass a free-trade bill with the Filipinos, and manufacturing plants will be established down there, and they will get their labor from Japan.

I could not allow this bill to pass without stating, as one of the representatives of the Pacific coast, that I think it would be more manly to meet this question fairly-to exclude the Japanese coolies and laborers or allow them to come in-and not by this subterfuge, to meet a pressing political exigency in San Francisco, fasten this legislation on the country.

I shall be constrained, feeling as I do in regard to it, to vote against the conference report; and if it is beaten, I hope the conferees will bring in the resolution offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson].

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not design to occupy the time of the Senate much longer. There is a matter, however, to which, in justice to myself and to others, I should allude.

Otherwise, we might be very much misunderstood.

It has been published in the papers that the action taken on yesterday by those of us who are opposed to the adoption of this report in consenting to a vote being taken to-day was done under a threat. It was published in the most conspicuous manner in the papers of this city, and I presume telegraphed all over the United States, to the effect that the Senators who are onposing this report had been induced to abandon any further opposition to it and to consent to a vote by a threat on the part of the President of the United States that if we did not do so there would be an extra session called, and furthermore giving a very sensational statement that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] had sent a dispatch to one of his colleagues on this floor to the effect that if this opposition were not abandoned the river and harbor bill should be so amended as to cut out all the appropriations which were made for Southern States.

Now, Mr. President, of course no Senator on this floor-Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

Mr. BACON. Please let me finish the sentence. on this floor who has any knowledge of the Senator from Rhode Island would for a moment credit the truth of that statement, and I should say nothing about it if it were limited in its consideration to members of the Senate. But it has gone out to the world, and not to deny the motive attributed to those of us who are opposing the adoption of this report, but in putting it upon a higher ground, I simply want to say that so far from that being the case, without ever having had any communication to me to such an effect by any of the colleagues of the Senator, I knew it was a falsehood when I saw it; and I only state it in order that the public may know that so far from considering it necessary to deny that we were influenced in that way we recognized it as untrue when it was first brought to our atten-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. BACON. I will, if the Senator desires to interrupt me Although I have not quite completed what I have at this point. at this point. Although I have not quite completed what I have to say, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should not have noticed the ridiculous statement referred to by the Senator from Georgia if it had not been alluded to here. It is entirely the creation of the reporter's imagination.

Mr. BACON. I am quite sure of that.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is not a particle of truth in it as a whole or in any of its parts.

I have done the Senator the justice to say that Mr. BACON. I am satisfied it is absolutely false, and I only alluded to it because it has doubtless gone to the country at large, and it was necessary that this statement should be made.

I desire to say further, Mr. President, that the course given by those of us who are opposing this report in agreeing that the vote should be taken to-day was not even at the invitation of Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber. The request was made by a Senator on this side of the Chamber, and after consultation with those of us who had been active in opposition to the measure.

wish to say very frankly that one reason why no further resistance in the way of debate was determined upon was that some Senators on this side of the Chamber had assurances which they deemed to be reliable and satisfactory to them that the Department of Commerce and Labor, which had made the ruling heretofore upon the existing law which was satisfactory to the people of their immediate section, had upon an examination of the proposed law expressed the opinion that it in no wise changed the law. While I did not agree with that construction, at the same time I was not disposed to take issue with the Department, if it sees proper so to rule. a very great misfortune, Mr. President, to the people of my section if a contrary rule should be made.

I think it proper to say, furthermore, that the action of those of us who have opposed this report has been somewhat misunderstood. Senators will remember that on the first day there was resentment on the part of myself and others because of the effort which was made to require us to vote upon a report of some thirty or forty pages which we had just had placed in our hands, and which we had not even had time to read. But it will be remembered that the assurance was given by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and concurred in by me that the only demand we made was that we should have that opportunity, and that when we did have that opportunity what we proposed to do was simply to discuss it fully. terday, it will be remembered, when I resumed the floor I put a number of papers in without reading them, to be published in the RECORD, which would have been read if my purpose had been, as is intimated, simply to consume time. Our purpose has been simply to place this matter fully before the country and to discuss the important interests which are involved, in order that they may be understood.

So far as I am concerned, I have as fully as I have desired placed that matter before the Senate and before the country. The Senator from South Carolina has done the same thing. We believe that the attention of the Senate and of the country has been interested, at least, if not arrested, by the magnitude of the interests which are involved and the presentation of that magnitude. Whatever may be the outcome of this question, we believe the country will be appreciative of the fact that we in the South are in a condition where we are entitled to consideration at the hands of the Federal Government in the removal of restrictions which will enable us to get not undesirable immigrants, but desirable immigrants, and which will enable us to get them not by objectionable contract negotiations, but by methods which will enable us to introduce into the country the best class of immigrants who shall come here, unbound by any contracts, and free to make contracts when they get here such as it may be to their interest to make.

Mr. President, there is another matter that I do not desire to go into at length, but still I think it proper that I should allude The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who I regret is not now in his seat, spoke of the fact that he had 500,000 workmen in his State who are opposed to a contractlabor law

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Georgia suspend? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Table Calendar No. 26, Senate resolution 214, by Mr. CARTER.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, that is not singular or peculiar to the State of Massachusetts. That is a general sentiment throughout the country. There is a general sentiment in oppo-sition to the abuse of the importation of immigrants. There is a strong sentiment to that effect in my own State, which I of course most profoundly respect and which I do not wish to violate. I repeat there is in my State, as well as in all other States, a just opposition to the introduction of immigrants whose presence in our country is not desirable, and the great advantage in the plan which we may call hereafter, I presume, the South Carolina plan is that which results in the introduction of those who are desirable.

But I wish to say, Mr. President, that it is not simply the presence of the laborers to whom the operation of the law as it now exists is undesirable, and I say that that is especially true in the State represented by the Senator from Massachusetts. The fact can not be concealed that there is a serious and growing jealousy on the part of the manufacturers in the State of Massachusetts against the growing and increasing manufacturing in-There is great jealousy over the growing terests in the South. and increasing manufacturing interests of the South, and every disposition to interfere with the further development of that manufacturing interest.

Mr. President, no surer method can be adopted to arrest the development and growth of the manufacturing interests of the South than to say that the South shall not have a proper class of immigrants with which that development can be made. Because of conditions, to which I have already alluded, the negro population are not available for the purpose of being utilized in the cotton mills; and the white population, the native population, which is alone available, has already been drawn on to the full extent and limit of its capacity. Therefore, if other labor can not be introduced the development of the cotton industry must cease. Furthermore, as conditions now show that which has already been inaugurated must in part remain without being fully utilized. As stated by the report of the Department of Commerce and Labor and as stated to-day by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons], it is a fact estimated reliably that there are to-day 20 per cent of the spindles of the South idle.

Mr. President, I said that there was a jealousy and a disposition to repress development of this growing industry in the South on the part of those engaged in the same industries in Massachusetts, and I want to present to the Senate a marked evidence of that fact.

I may not discuss what occurs in another House, but I am at liberty to read to the Senate the records of the other House so far as relates to the introduction of bills. It is a fact that a Representative from the State of Massachusetts has during four Congresses, beginning with the Fifty-sixth Congress, introduced a joint resolution looking to the amendment of the Constitution of the United States, in order that there may be neutralized the advantages which the South has in the manufacture of cotton by reason of climatic and other conditions. That joint resolution was introduced in the Fifty-sixth Congress, Fiftyseventh Congress, Fifty-eighth Congress, and Fifty-ninth Congress, all of them practically identical, if not absolutely identical. I will read only one—the one that was introduced in the Fifty-ninth Congress. It was introduced December 4, 1905, and is in these words:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Consti-tution of the United States relating to uniform hours of labor.

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to uniform hours of labor.

Whereas under State regulation there now exists and must always exist great diversity in the hours of labor in manufacturing establishments, as fixed by law or custom in the several States of the United States, the present variation in the working week being from fifty-eight hours to seventy-two hours; and

Whereas this variation in the length of the legal working week creates conditions of discrimination as between the citizens of the several States of the Union, which operates to the disadvantage of both labor and capital in many localities, resulting in unequal earnings for a given amount of capital and unequal wages for a given amount of labor, which unequal conditions are contrary to the fundamental theory of the Constitution of the United States, which contemplates equal rights and uniform privileges to all citizens of the United States, irrespective of the particular State in which they may happen to dwell; and

Whereas this lack of uniformity in the hours of labor is the outcome of State legislation, and is beyond the power of the States, acting through their legislatures, to make uniform, by reason of the decision of the supreme courts of several States to the effect that all laws regulating hours of labor are unconstitutional in those States; and

Whereas unequal and partial restrictions disturb the equilibrium of industry and are serious obstacles to national progress: Therefore Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States do recommend to the several States of the Union the adoption of the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to wit:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"The Congress shall have power to establish uniform hours of labor in manufactories throughout the United States."

Mr. President, if I were disposed to consume the time of the Senate I could read several other bills which have been introduced in Congress by Senators or Representatives looking to the same end-the national control of the manufacturing industries of the South-in order, as specified in this resolution, that unequal conditions of advantage and opportunity may be equalized by Federal legislation.

Mr. President, it does seem to me that if there was ever any section of any country in the world against which such a resolution should not be attempted to be leveled, not only as found in the proposed amendment to the Constitution which I have read, but as found in the particular bill now before the Senate, it is the South, because no people have ever dealt so heroically with the most deplorable conditions, and dealt with them successfully, as has the South. So far from there being any disposition to repress them in this regard, so far from any disposition to throw any impediment in their way, there ought to be every disposition and every effort to bid them godspeed and to give them all the aid which can possibly be given them.

I have said, Mr. President, that opportunities at the South by reason of the peculiar conditions are restricted in the matter of development. I want to show the contrast between the States of the South and the State from which the Senator from Massa-While we can not use the negro population, chusetts comes. constituting probably an average of nearly 40 per cent in the cotton States of the total population, and while the white population has been drawn on to the limit of exhaustion, it is not only true that the State of Massachusetts has this unlimited tide of immigration which flows on the northern borders every year from Europe, but, if I am correctly informed, the State of Massachusetts draws from Canada its mill operatives to the extent of from two-thirds to three-fourths—opportunities which are shut to us because of the difference in locality.

Mr. President, I want to bring to the attention of the Senate in this connection something which will, I am sure, challenge attention as to the wonderful work which has been done by the Southern States in their rehabilitation after absolute desolation. I am going to read an article which I clipped from the New York Sun of September 19 last. It is very short:

MATERIAL PROCESS IN THE SOUTH.

The Business Magazine, of Knoxville, Tenn., prints some figures which give a good idea of the great material progress of the South in the past few years. The following is a condensation and continuation: Individual bank deposits.

National banks		$201, 605, 167 150, 440, 319 17, 369, 650 5, 306, 131 322, 081	$372, 383, 409 369, 652, 112 6, 052, 503 13, 643, 521 5, 590, 629
Total	221, 685, 019	375, 043, 348	767, 322, 174

Increase 1905 over 1896 $153, 358, 269 545, 637, 155

These figures show an average increase of $60,626,349 a year during the nine years.

The percentage of increase in deposits in the banks and trust companies of the South between 1896 and 1905 is, according to the reports of the Comptroller of the Currency, 246 per cent. This is the largest percentage of increase in the time named of any section of the United States, not even excepting the Western States.

In one year, 1905, southern financial institutions added nearly as much to their deposits as they did in four years a decade ago.

The capital invested in manufacturing in seven Southern States—Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Texas—was $117,000,000 twenty years ago: now, according to the census of manufactures, 1905, it is $803,000,000, an increase of $686,000,000. The yearly manufacturing product of these seven States in 1880 was $221,000,000; in 1905 it was $948,000,000, an increase of $727,000,000.

In the same seven States the increase in value of farm

In the same seven States the increase in value of farm property between 1880 and 1900 was $2,053,000,000, or more than $100,000,000 a year. For poultry and eggs alone those farms get $45,000,000 a year. Their animal products bring $250,000,000, and the total product, $900,000,000 a year, exceeds that of any other section of the United States except the North Central division, composed of the upper Mississippi Valley States from the Ohio to the Dakotas.

These seven Southern States, with Mississippi added, now raise nearly 500,000,000 bushels of corn each year; they have more than 18,000,000 head of cattle, and produce more than 200,000,000 pounds of rice each year.

year. Only 44 per cent of the southern farms now derive their principal income from cotton. Still, cotton production has steadily increased from 7,000,000 bales, worth $300,000,000, about twenty years ago, to 13,000,000 bales last year, worth $628,000,000. The home-grown cotton demand of the mills of the United States is now about 4,000,000 bales a year. The census of 1900 shows that in twenty years the improved acreage of twelve Southern States increased from 78,082,484 acres to 107,573,679.

The output of manufactures of the Southern States south of the Potomac and the Ohfo, without West Virginia, was $450,000,000 greater in 1900 than in 1890 and $150,000,000 greater in 1905 than in 1900.

Mr. President, I shall ask leave to insert in full, with the permission of the Senate, an article from the Manufacturers' Record of January 10, 1907, headed "Remarkable Exhibit of Southern Prosperity."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MULKEY in the chair). In the absence of objection, permission will be granted.
The article referred to is as follows:

[From Manufacturers' Record, January 10, 1907.] REMARKABLE EXHIBIT OF SOUTHERN PROSPERITY

REMARKABLE EXHIBIT OF SOUTHERN PROSPERITY.

In 1860, when the United States had a population of 31,443,000, the wealth of the country was reckoned to be $16,159,000,000, of which the South possessed $6,332,000,000. Within five years the South's wealth had been reduced to quite $4,000,000. With a population of between 25,000,000 and 26,000,000, or 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 less than the country's population in 1860, the South's wealth is now in the neighborhood of $19,390,000,000, a sum greater by more than $3,000,000,000 than the wealth of the United States forty-seven years ago. Much of the increase in this wealth has been made in the past six years, and its stages are indicated in the accompanying table comparing the assessed valuations of property in the fourteen Southern States in 1900, 1905, and 1906, the figures of one of the States being estimated, it is believed, conservatively.

The increase in assessed valuation between 1900 and 1905 was from $5,266,594,044 to $6,680,439,421, or by $1,413,845,377, or 26.9 per cent, an average of 5.3 per year. The increase during the past year was to $7,756,919,209, or by $1,076,479,788, equal to 16.1 per cent. This increase is to be accounted for partly by the bringing within range of assessment in some States property that had not previously been included in assessable property, and, consequently, probably not in estimates of true wealth, and partly by such facts, as in Mississippi, that the realty assessment was made in 1906 for the first time since 1902. The increase in assessed values between 1890 and 1900 was $155,668,807. The increase between 1900 and 1906 was $2,409,325,165, or more than three times as great. But it will be recalled that the earlier ten-year period was synchronous with one of the most notable periods in American history of low prices for cotton and of consequent retardation of southern energies, while the past year was still materially affected by the prosperity which began for the cotton growers about the turn of the century. The cotton crop of 1899–1900, with its seed, brought about $362,000,000 for 9,922,000 bales. It is too early to give the value of the 1906–7 crop, but with the seed the crop may bring $675,000,000 or over.

The bettering of the cotton situation was quickly followed by an enhancement of the value of farming lands, adding to the wealth of the South at the rate of $500,000,000 or $600,000,000 annually during the past three or four years. Then, too, increasing attention given to other crops than cotton in application of the lessons of the lean years—the crop-lien years—at the end of the nineteenth century had brought the South into a position of greater strength as to general crops, enabling it to have a greater interest, though not its full potential interest. In the enhanced prices of farm products; in fact, the value of eight of its crops in 1906 was nearly equal the value of its cotton. These crops were a

$54,899,200, or 29 per cent, and the value of the crop in the whole country from $445,538,870 to $592,539,671, or 33 per cent. The comparison of the South with the whole country is quite favorable to the South in view of the fact that in a great portion of that section it has never been necessary to provide for indoor feeding during the winter, and of the additional fact that cotton-seed products and other things than hay are being used for feedstuffs in constantly increasing quantities

The larger part of the sweet potato crop of the country is raised in the South, but that is not preventing that section from gradually increasing its production of Irish potatoes. While its crop advanced between 1900 and 1906 from 16,940,410 bushels to 24,331,545 bushels, or 43 per cent, and the crop of the country from 210,226,897 bushels to 308,038,382 bushels, or 46 per cent, the value of the South's crop increased from $10,254,497 to $17,199,329, or more than 67 per cent, and the crop of the whole country from $90,811,167 to $157,547,392, or 73 per cent.

The increased values of the South's crops of corn, hay, and potatoes in the six years aggregate $175,651,106, or more than 60 per cent, while the value of the cotton crop increased by probably $313,000,000, or 86 per cent. The aggregate value in 1906 of the nine crops in the South which have been mentioned here was $1,285,000,000. To that should be added $159,000,000 for poultry products, $136,000,000 for darry products, $110,000,000 for fruits and vegetables, $160,000,000 for live-stock products, $40,000,000 for swear and its products, $18,000,000 for sweet potatoes, and $16,000,000 for miscellaneous products, $18,000,000 for sweet potatoes, and $16,000,000 for miscellaneous products, $18,000,000 for sweet potatoes, and $16,000,000 for products consumed, would bring the total up to quite $2,000,000,000.

Consideration of increasing wealth in the South must add to the $2,000,000,000 worth of farm products $2,225,000,000 worth of manufactured products, and $260,000,000 worth of mineral products. Such annual productivity, now aggregating about $4,485,000,000, accounts for an increase of nearly $50,000,000 in the capital of national banks in the South in six years, and an annual increase of $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 in the deposits in national, State, savings, and private banks and loan and trust companies in that section, and the general progress has an expression in and is immediately contributed to by rall-road construction, every mile of new track stretching toward great lumber tracts or toward deposits of coal, iron ore, and other minerals, or bringing closer to markets virgin agricultural sections, being just that much power added to productivity. In 1906, as shown by the accompanying table, 3,055 miles were added to the South's mileage, 26.7 percent of the total addition since 1900, and bringing the total to 64,035 miles. That is more than double the railroad mileage of the whole country in 1860, and within less than 30,000 of the total mileage of the country in 1880. Texas alone has 3,600-miles more railroad than the whole country had in 1850, and during the past year it led in the increase in the South with $10 miles, the State nearest to it in new construction having been Louisiana, with 472 miles. Arkansas ranked third in new mileage, the promise of an enormous advance in the farther South, but it is almost equally significant to note 162 new mileage in Virginia, 192 in North Carolina, and 216 in West Virginia, telling of mineral and timber developments in those States.

Summarizing farm activities, embracing the raising of practically every crop grown in the country, in addition to crops exclusively southern, manufacturing energies with 262 of the 339 separate industries of the country represented in the South, mineral production in which the South is to become more and more dominant, especially as to coal and petroleum and iron ore, lumbering operations in which the cut of the South is about 40 per cent of the total in the country, railroad building, foreign commerce, etc., a magnificent display of progress is made.

In six years, with an increase in the population of about 2,400,000, or something more than 10 per cent, the South has increased the value of its farm products by $728,000,000, or 57 per cent, and the value of its manufactures $761,000,000, or 52 per cent. It has added 3,493,000 spindles to its cotton-mill outfit, an increase of 55 per cent, and its mills used in 1906 about 2,375,000 bales of American cotton, or 48 per cent more than in 1900. In the six years the South's annual pig-iron production has increased by $96,000 tons, or 34 per cent; its coal production by 34,202,000 tons, or 69 per cent; the value of exports at its ports $177,000,000, or 38 per cent, though it furnishes more merchandise for export than it handles through its own ports, and in that time its railroad mileage has increased by $1,441, or nearly 22 per cent, and the assessed value of its property by $2,490,000,000, or nearly 48 per cent.

the assessed value of its property by $2,490,000,000, or nearly 48 per cent.

With all this money-making going on, it is not surprising that the South is spending millions of money for improvements of many kinds. Counties are building better roads, better bridges, and better school-houses. Municipalities are erecting modern public buildings, installing waterworks and sewerage systems, and using up-to-date methods and materials in improving streets. Railroad operations are double tracking their old lines and extending new ones, are building handsome passenger stations, increasing terminal facilities, and adding to rolling stock. Individuals are devoting their earnings to improving their homes in town or country, or in building new ones, in enlarging barns, in buying stock, farm implements and machinery, in installing fencing, and in adding to the machinery for manufacturing. These investments are likely to increase during the coming year and to keep pace with the increasing earning capacity of the South. They are some of the manifestations of a prosperity that is adding every day of the year about $7,280,000 to the wealth of the South, and which has brought that wealth close to $20,000,000,000.

Mr. President, I do not desire to further take

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not desire to further take the time of the Senate. I want to say simply that in the presentation of this matter I have been animated solely by the desire to preserve to the enjoyment of our people the benefits of the existing law. We have not sought in any manner and

I have not asked in any manner that there shall be any change as to contract labor; and I do not desire that there shall be any change as to contract labor, especially if we can have the advantage of the law as it now stands. These words were put here for a purpose. They are meaningless and the language was futile unless they have an enlarging influence upon the law as it now exists. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] yesterday defended the change on the ground that the Massachusetts procedure was one which would be destructive of the contract-labor law, the conclusion to be drawn being unavoidable, that he desired this change in the law in order that there might hereafter be no opportunity for South Carolina or any other State to induce immigrants to come under the present law, and to shut the door against us of the South.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator quoted from the Washington Post of this morning in reference to the "big stick" White House making the threat of an executive session, and the "big stick" in New York telephoning to Senator Crane orders about the river and harbor bill, and the little appropriations which South Carolina and Georgia have in that bill.

Mr. KEAN. "Little appropriations!

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, there is mighty little for South Carolina; Georgia may have a whole ham of the beef, but we get a very small part in South Carolina this year.

In that same article I noticed that the Cabinet met at some time yesterday and discussed the conference report which we now have under consideration; and it was said that they had reached the conclusion that the changes to be made in the immigration law by the proposed legislation which we are discussing do not affect the decision of Secretary Straus. the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe], who is well informed as to what occurs at the White House, and on occasion telephones [laughter], could enlighten us as to whether the Cabinet did meet on yesterday and decide that question or not.

[A pause.] Well, I have tried to get some enlightenment, but it seems I have failed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] said something about a communication, if the Senator will permit me—
Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. DEPEW. The Senator from South Carolina said something about a communication having been sent to somebody representing some kind of a big stick in New York to the Senators here in regard to the appropriations for Georgia and South Carolina in the river and harbor bill. I have not heard a single word from New York on that subject.

Mr. TILLMAN. Perhaps the Senator from New York did not read the Washington Post this morning.

Mr. DEPEW. Yes; I read the Washington Post this morning.
Mr. TILLMAN. And moreover, the Senator from New York And moreover, the Senator from New York must realize that there are other Senators who get communications from New York besides himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Senator from New York [Mr. Depew] that if he understood me to say that the statement was that a communication had been sent by the Senator from New York he misunderstood me. I said the statement was that the communication had been sent from New York by a Senator, and I afterwards stated that it was the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], and that I only mentioned the fact to state that I was perfectly satisfied that it was an absolute I think, Mr. President, that it is very unfortunate that any such publication should be made. It was unauthorized; and the truth could have been very easily ascertained by making inquiry.

Mr. President, I have got a few words further to say, and I am glad that the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] is in his seat, as are also the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] in their seats. only wish that two or three other Senators, who have heretofore expressed themselves with so much vigor on the subject of the usurpation of power by conference committees, were also in their seats. I am satisfied, however, with the representation now before me, because from them we have heretofore had the most emphatic and unequivocal condemnation of any usurpation of such power by a conference committee as is assumed and exercised in this particular report.

Mr. President, the Senators whom I now see before me, whom I have named, have upon occasions when the most important measures were before the Senate expressed themselves in the most drastic language to the effect that no gravity of a subject, no emergency of a situation, can justify a conference committee in assuming to report to the two Houses on a matter which is not in difference between the two Houses

Language could not be found in the dictionary, if searched with a fine-tooth comb, to make it more emphatic than the Senators of whom I now speak have made it in the hearing of this Senate. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] on yesterday read from the RECORD the utterances of these Senators on that subject, and, Mr. President, I want to say that those Senators have never said anything on that subject which was too extreme to meet with my approval, because if that rule can be violated, if a conference committee can bring in and submit on a conference report to the Senate matter which is not included in the differences between the two Houses, there is no limit. They can do as they have done here. They can bring in a bill of forty-odd sections, and under the rule which governs the consideration of conference reports there is nothing which can be done but to reject that report in full or to accept it in full. In other words-Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for a moment. I am coming to specifics before I get through.

In other words, when a bill is presented by a conference committee in its report, something of paramount importance may be included in that bill-something which would control the action of the body—and there is no opportunity to amend or exclude other matter which the Senate would exclude if it had the opportunity to amend. Consequently it is an evil of the very first magnitude. For that reason I say that the Senators who have heretofore condemned this have not used language more extreme than I would approve of and could not use language more extreme that I would approve it. Why do I say that, Mr. President?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BACON. I do. Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator contend that the clause to which he has made such strenuous objection is within the rule?

Mr. BACON. I do not. I have not alluded to that. I have opposed that upon a different ground altogether. I think that was within the limit, provided there were differences on that general subject. I do not think the conference committees are limited to an absolute amendment or the exact amendment between the two Houses. They can report an amendment which shall reconcile the differences, and of course they need not follow either amendment for that purpose

But what I call attention to, and which I hope I may have the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] to-because he is a very properly recognized authority on this subject, a Senator whose familiarity with it is unsurpassed by that of any other Senator, and a Senator who has most rigidly, unalterably, and immovably put himself in opposition to any usurpation by conference committees—is that here is a section that I say distinct violation of the rule as to conference committees. tion 42 is one which amends the act of 1882 with reference to the requirements of the carriage of passengers on shipboard-a matter which was not in the bill either of the Senate or of the House, a matter which was in no manner referred to or related to any single matter of difference between the two Houses.

But, Mr. President, it does not limit itself to the question of being related to something not in difference. There may be a criticism upon a committee of conference where it adds a section even if it relates to the same subject, and they would have no right to do it; but when they go outside to amend an existing statute on a different subject, what possible opportunity is there for a difference on the question as to whether or not the conference committee has violated the rule as to conference reports?

Mr. President, if that is so, how do we stand to-day? Here is a matter of great importance, a question of the settlement of the Japanese question on the Pacific coast, something that all of us Here is a method for the disposition want to have disposed of. proposed in the report of this conference committee, and at the same time, in order to do that; to adopt the conference report, it is necessary to violate in the most distinct possible manner this fundamental rule as to conference committees. face to face with the proposition that, wherever there is a matter of sufficient importance involved, we will violate this rule rather than take further time to secure the main end which is sought to be accomplished by a conference report, or are we going to adhere to the rule? It is a sacred rule, Mr. President, and the word "sacred" is not too strong a word when we recollect the indignation with which Senators have heretofore met provisions in conference reports which were outside of the juris-Senators have met them with an indiction of the conferees. dignation which indicated that they regarded it as a sacred safeguard against improper legislation, and one under no circumstances to be violated.

If we accept this report—I care not what we may think about the merits of it—if we accept this report the most serious blow has been struck at the safety of the legislative body in regard to reports of conference committees that has ever been attempted since I have been in the Senate or that I have ever read about in any work, on parliamentary law.

The Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. President, took the position two days ago that a conference committee was turned loose—and he used the word "unlimited"--was turned loose for an unlimited consideration of anything which related to the subject and to the formulation of amendments to be proposed to the Senate or to the House. Anything which related to the subject was within their jurisdiction, according to the Senator's contention, and he used the word "unlimited." When I called his attention to the fact that he had used the word "unlimited." he made no correction of it in his subsequent remarks.

Mr. President, even if we were to consent to such a construction as that, if we were to concede-which I would not for a moment—that a conference committee has jurisdiction as to anything within the limits of the subject-matter, that still would not cure all the trouble in this case, because this is as to matter outside of the limits.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me in the line of what he has just been saying, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] particularly, because he has been my guide, counselor, and friend, my mentor and adviser and exemplar, especially in this particular, and because I have great admiration-I am not speaking now in any persiflage or nonsense or mock compliment; I am saying honestly what has been the fact and is the fact now-I want to just give the Senator a little of his own utterances and his position six months ago. It is in reference to the conference report on the rate bill last June, when the conferees took the liberty of putting in two or three slight verbal amendments which were not in the bill as it passed either House, and therefore were out of order. Even putting in the words "sixty days" instead of "immediately," in order to make the bill workable and enable the railroads to prepare their schedules so as to comply with the law—so necessary a provision as that was objected to. Senators will recall the fact that the conferees were harassed and bedeviled, if I may say that; certainly lectured and censured here for three whole days, especially by the two gentlemen on my right [Mr. Hale and Mr. Lodge], and I just want to give a brief quotation from that debate.

Mr. Pattersox. While the rule is a good rule and should as a general proposition be enforced, I have no hesitation in maintaining in a case of this kind, and as to a bill of this character, that when the conferees meet for the purpose of discussing a matter and reaching an agreement, if they discover that there is something needed to make a measure effective as a whole, they have not only the power, but it is their duty to insert that, and then submit it both to the House and to the Senate.

Mr. Hale. But, Mr. President, does the Senator not see the far-reaching, dangerous, and disastrous results of his proposition? Legislation is matured here and in the House of Representatives. Conferees are not a legislative body. They are to confine themselves to disagreements between the two Houses and to report only as to those.

Mr. Patterson. I understand precisely.

Mr. Hale. But when the Senator says the conferees have a right, when they believe that in order to make a measure effective they may put in new propositions, he is transferring the legislative power, which ought to be confined to the two bodies, to a conference committee that is only appointed and constituted not to newly legislate, but to consider differences between the two Houses.

The Senator is not a radical Senator; he is a conservative Senator, and he ought to see the wide and far-reaching and dangerous proposition which he has made, that the conferees can take upon themselves the power of legislation that only inheres in the two bodies.

As I understand the Senator's attitude now, it is that we

As I understand the Senator's attitude now, it is that we have need for a modus vivendi or easement or something to relieve the distressed conditions of the Californians in regard to their Japanese-exclusion policy, and in view of the necessity, we will say, of something being done, the Secretary of State prepared the amendment which is in the bill—so the papers The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] can correct me if I am in error, and if he remains silent I take it for granted that the newspapers are correct in this regard. Secretary of State prepared the proviso in regard to the passports of certain persons who might be coming to the United States. Mind you, the Japanese school question had not arisen until December, when it was called to the attention of the country by the President's message. The bill which we are discussing passed the Senate last May and passed the House last June, and the subject-matter of this proviso with regard to passports was not considered by either branch of Congress, and yet it has been inserted here.

The attitude of the Senator from Maine has been the same since I have been here whenever this matter has been under discussion. He can explain, if he sees fit, why he has changed front, why he yields to necessity, when we could just as easily provide for the passage of this proviso by a joint resolution in ten minutes by unanimous consent, as we did about the "sixty days" for the rate bill, and I have no doubt it would go through, so that when the conferees take upon themselves that dangerous power of legislating—six men assuming to do the work of ninety Senators and three hundred and eighty odd Representatives—if the Senator from Maine has suddenly changed from his rigid adherence to fundamental doctrine and principles governing our procedure here and can reconcile his expressed attitude, as I understand it, with his attitude six months ago that is for him to say, but I must confess, Mr. President, that I am woefully, woefully, woefully disappointed if the Senator from Maine does not continue to stand by his wise and proper decision last June instead of yielding to this emergency, we will say, and becoming an opportunist. I ha never thought the Senator from Maine was that type of man. I have

Mr. HALE. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BACON. With very much pleasure.
Mr. HALE. If the Senator from South Carolina will let me in between one of his "woefullies"—

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I might get up another "woefully" after a while [laughter], especially if the Senator from Maine shall fall down and disappoint me so "woefully."

Mr. HALE. The Senator has got another "woefully." Mr. TILLMAN. I will put in still another one if the Senator shall, as I say, become an opportunist.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has been firing away at me and has enjoyed it almost as much as I have.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have not enjoyed it at all.

Mr. HALE. The Senator assumes that I have changed my ground. I do not know what reason he has for that. I have not interfered in this discussion. I have not interfered on the side of the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Georgia because they are presenting their case very tersely and very briefly and are doing their best. They are doing admirably. There is no necessity why I should say that I agree with them, but the Senator has no right to say that I have changed my ground simply because I choose to sit in my seat and not take part in a debate which is so perfectly conducted upon both sides as the one that has been proceeding. Let the Senator wait to see what my attitude is in this matter.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President—

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from South Carolina?

Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. My interpretation of the attitude of the Senator from Maine lies in this, that no Senator is better informed of what is going on in this Chamber than he. He is thoroughly well informed as to every move that is made here on all important issues that arise, and the Senator from Maine has so often stood in his place and whenever this thing of the conferees exceeding their authority and inserting new matter has been attempted to be done he has always been so aggressive in maintaining the rule which he laid down in the quotation I have just read that I am "woefully "-I will repeat that offensive phrase again, without any intention to offend-I am woefully surprised and disappointed at the Senator's silence.

Mr. HALE. Now, does not the Senator see that so admirably are he and the Senator from Georgia presenting this case that it would only be carrying coals to Newcastle for me to say that agree with them?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not a question of agreeing with us. It is a question of the Senator from Maine voting and exerting his great influence to maintain to-day the attitude that he maintained last June.

Mr. HALE. Has the Senator been able to put any finger of his upon any vote that I have given on this question?
Mr. TILLMAN. No.

Mr. HALE. I did not know that it had come to a vote.
Mr. TILLMAN. We have not got to a vote yet.

Mr. TILLMAN. We have not got to a vote yet.
Mr. HALE. It seems to me it is something for a Senator to come in here when he is very busy with appropriation bills and sit and listen to the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Georgia, and he ought to be credited for that.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has not done us the honor to listen, except this morning.

Mr. HALE. I have done that. I have sat here and listened for a long time, when important matters are calling me outside. But for the Senator to now declare—because I have not joined with him and have not indicated what my vote would be upon this matter-that I ought to thrust myself into this debate that is so well cared for already is absurd, and the Senator knows that he has not the right to do that. I do not need to say that he has not the technical right, but he has not the right to assume how anybody is going to vote on this matter. know that I have changed my mind in the slightest degree, and he will find out before this matter is through whether I have or not; but I wish the Senator, instead of berating me in his remarks because I do not get up and join in this debate, would attend strictly to the subject-matter and not make himself so personal.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am sorry that I have given offense to my friend from Maine, but the Senator will recall that we have had some little private conference about this matter, and that I appealed to him to stand by his own attitude last June, and he has told me that he could not do that.

Mr. HALE. How does the Senator know that? He has not the right to say it. Moreover, Mr. President, it is not often done here, that Senators retail conversations that have taken place between them. I have never known that to be done much. There are certain things which are observed here in the Senate. We have little side talks. I may have said that this report might go through, but I have never committed myself to the Senator by saying that I was going to vote for it. He has no right, he has no business-and he knows it as well as I doto refer here to an interlocutory talk between him and me. shall never do that as to matters between him and me. If I did, I should get him in hot water every day.

Mr. TILLMAN. I had no purpose or desire to inject anything unpleasant into this debate. I was merely calling attention to a grave and serious matter of public moment and a grave and serious infraction of the unwritten law of the Senate, whatever may be the written law, that we should not inject into conference reports extraneous and new and entirely foreign matter, and have the conferees legislate, a thing which the Senator from Maine has condemned time and again; I felt called upon to direct attention to the Senator's attitude

Now he sees proper to lecture me because he says I am disclosing personal conversations. I do not usually betray personal confidences, and I had no conception that what we were discussing was private or secret, or that the Senator from Maine would talk to me in private one way and then do or say something in public another way. I have no such conception of that Senator's honor and honorable character.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from South Carolina grows more and more offensive. He has no right to intimate that I have said anything to him which commits me upon this proposition in any way as to how I shall vote when it finally comes up. may have said this proposition would go through and would be a relief, and that I might not interpose myself in the matter by making myself busy, but I have never intimated to the Senator in any way, shape, or form what my attitude was to be upon this matter when it is finally brought up. When it does come up I shall vote as I always try to vote, in accordance with what I believe is the wisdom of legislation.

I do not forget my record of the past. The Senator need not say himself by reading all that. That is not called for. I busy himself by reading all that. do not forget easily. I say to the Senator now that I have never intimated to him that in this matter I would change the attitude which I have always held about this matter of the right of conferees—never. If he says to the contrary, then he states what no conversation between him and me justifies his stating.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not want any issue with the Senator from Maine in regard to veracity. I do not think it worth while to bring it to that issue, and I can only say that from what conversation I have had with the Senator, I understood that he would no longer occupy the position he occupied last June.

Mr. HALE. The Senator had no right whatever to assume that.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, the question of my rights, Mr. President, must rest upon my understanding of what has taken place. I am sorry I mentioned anything of our private conversation, but as the Senator so positively denied any knowledge on my part as to his present attitude, I could not be bottled up in that kind of a way or snuffed out when I knew we had talked about it, and that I had appealed to him, and I had reason to believe he would change his attitude by his vote, if nothing more.

Now the Senator will do as he pleases, of course. I can not do anything with him. I do not propose to try. I have no such desire. I am merely calling attention to the fact that such desire. there has been in the Senate on various occasions which I recall the issue raised as to whether conferees could do such and such a thing or whether they could not, and the Senator from Maine has always occupied a pronounced and aggressive attitude against the power of the conference committee to inject into its report anything that was new, that had not been considered by either House.

The Senator will not deny that that is his unbroken record, so far as I know; and as to what the Senator may do in this case he, of course, as I said, will do as he pleases. purpose or intention of wounding that Senator's feelings or of doing anything to bring him into an attitude of inconsistency with himself. With his views of the wisdom and the necessity of a great issue, he will follow that course which seems to him best, and with that I shall not find fault. I simply contend that Senators here ought not to presume to hector one set of conferees, to lecture them, to call attention to these little lapses from custom and the rules in regard to conference reports. and the regular and proper thing to do in respect to them, and then six months later turn around and vote with another set who have done the very thing for which they lectured the first t. That is what I am complaining about.

My remarks, while I quoted the Senator from Maine, apply with equal force to other Senators here who have occupied that attitude, among them the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. He says he was overruled, and that his view of the parliamentary status and rights was not sustained by the Senate, and that he bows to the will of the Senate as expressed by the Vice-President in his ruling with regard to conference reports—that we can not amend them; that we can not instruct the conferees; that all we can do is to reject the entire report regardless of what it may contain; that the point of order does not lie.

The Senator from Massachusetts called attention to a necessity, which I think other Senators will-realize must exist here, that the rules of this body should be so shaped and such amendment should be had that when a conference report is brought in here and discovery is made that there are new things in it-extraneous matter, legislation by six men instead of by Congress-the point of order would lie and we would have the right to have the Vice-President declare whether this was new or not, and rule it out rather than be compelled to reject the whole report, and thereby kill, possibly, very important legislation.

That is what I am contending for now. If I have said anything to my friend that he thinks I ought to withdraw, if I can do so honorably I will do it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has chosen his way, and I have nothing further to say.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then, Mr. President, I am satisfied.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to add only a few words. I desire to say for myself that in particularizing Senators it was for the purpose of citing them as authorities and with no view of visiting upon them any particular expression as to their attitude. I was emboldened to do this by the fact that Senators on the other side of the Chamber had yesterday said that they thought this bill was open to the objection of having introduced into it extraneous matter. It was a violation of the fundamental rule, and my sole purpose was to cite the very high authority of the Senators whom I took the liberty of naming, and in it I hope I did not trespass upon their sense of propriety.

I wish to call the attention of those Senators to the particular matter which I say in this bill violates the rule. This bill is a bill with reference to the exclusion of aliens. The bill as it passed the Senate had exclusive reference to the question of the admission or exclusion of immigrants. The bill as it passed the House was to the same effect. That went into the conference, and when the conference report is brought it assumes to amend the act of 1882, entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea," altogether an independent piece of legislation. While, of course, immigrants come by sea the act which is thus sought to be amended is not one which relates to immigration. The act is found in chapter 374, on page 186, of the Statutes, in the third volume, Forty-seventh Congress, 1881–1883, and is entitled "An act to regulate the carriage of passengers by sea."

This bill, on page 32 of the pamphlet before us, makes an amendment to the extent of a page of that act, which was not in any manner alluded to or touched upon in either the bill that passed the Senate or the bill that passed the House, and, in order to show that it is not simply the making of regulations which shall affect immigrants and that it is specifically an act to amend the act of 1882, I call the attention of Senators to the fact that on page 33, in the next clause, there is an express reference made to the act of 1882, to save the conflict which might be between the two, showing that it was intended that it should be an amendment of the act of 1882.

Mr. President, I do not think that anything could justify an approval by the Senate of that act on the part of the conferees. I do not think, even if it would entail the practical defeat of the measure with reference to the Pacific coast, it would justify our direct and radical violation of this fundamental, vital, and important rule. But we do not stand con-fronted with any such necessity. As I have said repeatedly in this debate, the purpose sought to be effected with reference to the Pacific coast situation can be effected by a joint resolu-tion, which can be passed through the Senate by a unanimous vote of the Senate, which shall embrace every detail as embraced in this bill relative to the Japanese situation on the Pacific coast, and it can become a law, and become a law speedily and promptly, by the unanimous vote of the Senate and, I presume, by the unanimous vote of the House. And we would still preserve inviolate our regard for and observance of this fundamental rule as to conference reports not bringing in matter here which was not in difference between the two Houses, and which in this case goes still further and relates to matters which were not within the subject of that which was within the purview of the bill of the Senate or the purview of the bill of the House.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Georgia, before resuming his seat, answer a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does t Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.
Mr. CARTER: During the long-continued debate yesterday afternoon it was frequently asserted by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] and also by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] that this conference report contained matter extraneous and not considered in either House of Congress in the original bill. Further still, I understood the contention to be that the subject-matter was not germane to the question upon which either House had legislated and upon which the conference was ordered.

I desire to know from the Senator if it is true that section 42, found on page 32 of the printed pamphlet (Document No. 318), is the only subject-matter to which his objection is directed.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILL MAN] had already made the same criticism upon the section which relates to the power of the President to exclude Japanese. I do not mean to say there is no other extraneous matter in the bill. On the contrary, there is. I will call attention to it. To the provision with reference to the exclusion of Japanese I did not raise any point, because while I thought there might be some room for argument on that question, I did not concede that there was the slightest room for legitimate argument as to the particular section which I have indicated to the Senate and which the Senator has just repeated. There is another one, if the Senator desires me to point it out.

Mr. CARTER. My purpose in propounding the interrogatory to the Senator is to bring an issue here upon the question whether this conference report actually contains subject-matter not germane to the question or not passed upon by either House

I take it to be true that a conference committee has reasonable latitude in attempting to reconcile the disagreeing views of the two Houses, provided always that the conferees shall confine themselves to subject-matter germane to the legislation The contention of those who raise this point of order or the bill. The contention of those who raise this point of order has been, I believe, that this is entirely new matter, and that neither House of Congress has passed on the subject-matter, and that the subject-matter itself is not germane to the legislation being considered or confided to the conference committee, and, to the end that we may know the exact issues, I desire to have pointed out the particular portions of the bill to which these objections go.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I think in addition to that there is also a violation of the rule governing conference committees to be found on page 31. I am very frank to say that this not so marked a violation as the one to be found on the succeeding page, 32, which is section 42. section 42 as being as pronounced and marked a violation of the rule as it is practicable to find.

Mr. CARTER. To what portion of page 31 does the Senator

Mr. BACON. I will read the part. On page 31, about the middle of the first paragraph, after the semicolon following the word "Congress," are these words:

word "Congress," are these words:

And the President of the United States is also authorized, in the name of the Government of the United States, to call, in his discretion, an international conference, to assemble at such point as may be agreed upon, or to send special commissioners to any foreign country for the purpose of regulating by international agreement, subject to the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States, the emigration of allens to the United States; of providing for the mental, moral, and physical examination of such allens by American consuls or other officers of the United States Government at the ports of embarkation, or elsewhere; of securing the assistance of foreign governments in their own territories to prevent the evasion of the laws of the United States governing immigration to the United States; of entering into such international agreements as may be proper to prevent the emigration of allens who, under the laws of the United States, are or may be excluded from entering the United States, and of regulating any matters pertaining to such emigration.

The ground upon which I base the criticism that that is a

The ground upon which I base the criticism that that is a violation of the rule which governs and should govern conference committees is that there is not in either the Senate bill or the House bill the remotest reference to any such provision of law, and it is a most important and drastic and far-reaching provision, the limits of which it is very difficult for us to realize until it has been put in practical operation and we see what power is assumed to be exercised under it.

Mr. CARTER. I further ask the Senator if he considers the subject-matter last referred to as germane to the legislation under consideration or the questions confided to the conferees of the respective Houses?

Mr. BACON. I do not consider it within the questions confided to the conferees. I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] that when a bill has been put into conference the conferees are at liberty to frame any provision of law they may see so it relates to the subject-matter. not agree with that proposition, and my criticism on this is that it is distinctively without any provision relating in any manner to any part of either the Senate bill or the House bill and could not consequently have been in difference between the two Houses, because there is nothing in either bill about it.

Mr. CARTER. Do I then understand that the portion of section 39 referred to and section 42 constitute the only two portions of this report to which objection is raised on the question of order?

Mr. BACON. They are the only ones that I have suggested as being thus.

Mr. CARTER. That, I think, reduces the matter to a simple question as to whether or not the subject-matter comes within the rule.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am indebted to the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter] for bringing the points of order down finally to the exact provisions in the conference report to which Senators object.

There has been, I will not say a tacit assumption, but there has been a very vocal assumption by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Till-MAN] that this is a pure usurpation, and that the conferees have gone beyond their powers. I should not have taken the floor again if I had not desired to dispel the idea, so far as I could, from the minds of the Senate, if any Senator has the idea, that the conferees admit for one moment that they have usurped powers or gone beyond the powers confided to them. The two conferees who signed the report with me, the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dil-LINGHAM], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin], are two of the ablest and most conservative lawyers on this floor. They were both perfectly aware of exactly what we were doing.

Mr. President, I assert—and I shall try to demonstrate my position to the satisfaction of the Senate—that in the situation presented to the conferees we have not gone beyond our powers, either in contemplation of the Senate practice or of the House, where the rules are much more stringent than they are with us.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] yesterday consumed a great deal of time in showing or trying to show that I have been guilty of inconsistency. Since I have been in Congress, in both branches, I have seen a great deal of time devoted to exhibiting individual inconsistencies, and it has always seemed to me a great waste of time. Individual inconsistencies are of very little importance. But I think I can demonstrate in this case that there is no such inconsistency as the Senator spoke of. In the first place, he confuses two dis-One was on the ruling of the Chair as to points of order in the Senate under its rules and practice as to conference reports. The other point was as to the powers of conferees, and whether in this case, as a matter of fact, they had exceeded their powers.

As to the first point I argued here as well as I was able to do in favor of the House practice of a point of order lying against a conference report. The Chair overruled that position and was sustained in his ruling by the Senate, and I am convinced that under our rules and practice that decision of the Chair was correct. I am not now speaking of the policy or its expediency, but simply of what it is under our rules and prac-That being the ease, of course I no longer argued against a settled decision of the Senate.

Now, as to the usurpation of powers by the conferees in this instance, this case is not on all fours at all with the case of the rate bill. That was a House bill with certain numbered amendments, excluding absolutely from the consideration of the conferees matters agreed upon by both Houses. In this case the House substituted for the bill of the Senate not only a new bill, but the entire immigration statute of the United States, with amendments of their own. They did not omit a single section. They even went so far as to change the title of the Senate bill. They preserved nothing but the enacting clause. They preserved nothing but the enacting clause, and to that bill of theirs they added a number of sections which were not in the Senate bill at all.

Mr. President, in the judgment of the conferees, there being only one amendment, and that being a complete statute, that entire statute and the whole subject-matter of that statute were open to the conferees. I may say that very early in our conferences I thought it best to take the opinion of the Speaker of the other House as to the general powers of conferees in the conditions which then arose. I have no right to quote, and shall not, a private conversation, but on the parliamentary matter I think I am at liberty to say that the conferees, in their interpretation of the situation, did not go beyond the views and the opinion of the Speaker of the other House, who is recognized as one of the great parliamentarians of the country.

Now, take the three sections to which the Senators object as new matter. In the first place, dismiss the idea that this is a clause about the Japanese. No nation's name is mentioned in the statute, except in the repealing clause, which excepts from repeal the Chinese-exclusion statute. The proviso in regard to passports applies to all nations who issue passports to their subjects or citizens and who compel them to have passports to go to particular countries. It is a general provision relating to the exclusion of a certain class of immigrants under certain conditions. It is a mere extension of the section to which it is added.

As I take it and as I believe the best parliamentarians hold, the test of the powers of the conferees in a case where an entire statute has been substituted for the bill of one House is whether the subject-matter is germane to the general subject committed

Will anybody read the section which makes exceptions in regard to our neighbors in contiguous territory—we have named those countries and made a special exception in their caseand deny that it is legitimately within the power of the conference to add an additional section as to the admission of immigrants under certain conditions of passports which would enable them to enter the country? If we are confronted by a question as to the admission of aliens holding certain passports, it is just as legitimate to add them to that section as it is to strike out the clause which permits the Canadian and the Mexican to come in after one year's residence without paying a head tax, a privilege which is refused to all the rest of the

The international conference to which the Senator also made the point of order is an extension of a House section. The House bill contained what the Senate bill did not-provisions for the establishment of a commission to inquire into the whole subject of immigration, both at home and abroad. The work of the conference was practically merely to extend the power of that commission to enable them to make an agreement, if they could, with other countries so that other countries would recognize and aid us in enforcing the laws relating to immigrants into the United States.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the case of the air space, and on that I should like the attention of the Senate, because that is the clause to which most objection has been made. It is an amendment of what is commonly called "the navigation act," the act regulating the carrying of passengers. Every immigration bill that has been passed has modified our navigation acts. Always relating to immigrants, of course, we have demanded new forms of manifests. That was put in the last law. We have put in penalties relating to the clearance of vessels. I could read from the act, with its amendments, large and extensive changes in the navigation laws, all made in immigration acts because they related to the subject of immigration.

This question of the air space was debated in the Senate when the bill passed. It was the general desire of the Senate that there should be abundant air space for the health of the immigrants, and at that time I can only say, speaking for myself, I supposed that the air space provided by the navigation laws was sufficient. It has become very evident in the last six months (the Department of Commerce and Labor has taken up the matter) that the air spaces are not sufficient. The amount of air space, the accommodation for immigrants coming to this country, is a direct matter connected with the well-being and the health of the immigrants who land on our shores. We require those immigrants to be in a certain physical and mental condition. We require them to be healthy. If not, they are liable to be sent back to the country from which they came, often at the cost of great suffering.

President, nothing is more important to those people arriving here in ships than that they should have quarters which will not stimulate or produce disease. There is nothing more absolutely essential to the health and well-being of the immigrants than the air space and the condition they are in on board the ship.

There are other regulations in regard to immigrants contained in the navigation acts and in the immigrant laws. should have the right to deal with them. It was on that theory that the conference acted, that they had to take this matter apparently new, but which really related only to the immigra-Although it involved the amendment of another statute, it related only to the particular condition of the immigrants. They felt that with an entire statute before them it was legitimately within their scope.

I have not changed my mind as to the powers of conferees. I hold to the same view as the Senator from Maine, and the view that I myself expressed. I have not the least desire to put into the hands of conferees powers which do not belong to them. I believe that I am as jealous of the integrity of the powers of the Houses as any Senator can be.

My contention is that we have not exceeded our powers under the situation presented, the very unusual one of not only striking out an entire bill, but placing in the conference an entire statute relating to the care, the exclusion, and the admission of immigrants into the United States. The subject-matter being before us in that way, it seemed to me the true test was, Is the subject properly germane to the subject intrusted to the conferees:

In my judgment, Mr. President, the conferees had a right to make the addition with which fault is now found. I am informed to-day-and I venture to quote it that I may not be supposed to be advancing something which only a member of conference would be supposed to hold-I am informed today that the man whom I consider, and whom I think all consider who have examined his books, to be the greatest parliamentary expert living as to the parliamentary law of the Congress of the United States, Mr. Hinds, clerk at the Speaker's table, pronounced both these amendments to be entirely germane and within the power of the conferees.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss the labor-contract feature of the bill further than to say that I think that practically every American is opposed to the admission to our shores of laborers who have made contracts in foreign countries to engage in employment in our domestic in-

I do not know of anyone who favors any relaxation or modification of the restrictions upon that character of immigration. I think it is safe to say, and it ought to be, that every political party in this country is committed to the policy of restricting and to the policy of maintaining these restrictions against the introduction of foreign contract labor. It is almost as fixed a policy in American public opinion as the Monroe doctrine; it is

That is all I care to say about that phase of the question which has so far occupied the Senate in this discussion. I do not care either, Mr. President, to discuss that other phase of the subject embraced in the conference report which relates especially to the Japanese further than to say that every proper effort ought to be made to adjust the differences that seem to exist between this country and Japan. I would regard it as a very great mistake if the Senate or the Congress failed to pass such legislation as might be necessary to bring a satisfactory adjustment of that situation.

Mr. President, there may be some question about the wisdom, and I have heard some question raised as to the constitutional power of Congress to pass a law confiding to an executive officer, though he be the President of the United States, the power reposed in and conferred upon him by the provisions of this bill. It is a matter of such grave consequence in preserving the peace between this nation and Japan, and our interests in the Orient are such that every possible effort ought to be made within the bounds of reason and by the power of Congress to effect satisfactorily an adjustment and disposition of these differences. So much for that.

But, Mr. President, the particular question I arose, not to discuss, but to inquire about, relates to the provision which I find on page 17 of Senate Document No. 318, being the conference report.

I ask the attention for a moment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham], who has the bill in charge. amendment is proposed to section 2 of the present law, which find, as I said, at the bottom of page 17 of this document. The amendment is in these words:

Persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living.

Under the law as it is and under some amendment inserted before the amendment I have read it would exclude "all idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become a public charge; professional beggars; persons afflicted with tuberculosis, a loath-some or dangerous contagious disease." Then comes the provision to which I have adverted, which is as follows:

Persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical de-fect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such allen to

And then follow other classes who are excluded, such as persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral

Mr. President, I do not know whether Senators have had the same experience, but I have received numerous protests against the clause to which I have called especial attention from citizens of Jewish extraction, not only from my own State, but from other States. These protests have come sometimes from Jewish organizations and sometimes from individuals. Within the last twenty-four hours I have received this telegram from New York:

NEW YORK, February 14, 1907.

Hon. W. J. STONE, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Important that right of appeal conferred by other sections of immigration law should be granted to review decisions of inspectors account of low vitality. H. A. GUINZBURG.

I know this gentleman, Colonel Guinzburg.
Mr. GALLINGER. Is that "low vitality?"
Mr. STONE. Yes, sir. The low-vitality clause is the one to which I am trying to direct attention. Colonel Guinzburg formerly lived in St. Louis, and when I had the honor to be governor of my State he served on my staff, and I knew him well. He was very prominent in the social and business life of that city and a prominent Jew. I have just received a letter from New York, which I shall read also. Although I have received numerous protests of like kind from my own State, this having come within the last few hours, I am reading samples of others that I have had. This is from Mr. I. B. Rieinert, of New York, who is at the head of the I. B. Kleinert Rubber Company, one of the largest rubber manufacturing concerns in the East. He says:

Hon. William J. Stone,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: There is, according to the papers, a concerted attempt to restrict the immigration of the poor, unfortunate, persecuted Russian Jews. While the contemplated law does not say so in plain language, it does say so by inference. The same nefarious object was pursued in England. No one thought of it before the massacres occurred in Russia, but when the exedus began these measures were brought to light. It is useless to waste time writing on the unbounded injustice toward these unfortunates. The causes given are without foundation in fact. In Russia it is simply a hierarchical policy to prevent the liberal-mindedness and broad-principled tenets of these people to become known and perchance adopted by the ignorant hordes which sustain the hierarchical institutions. The Jew is shown to the multitudes to be a caricature after the laws had made him so. In liberal countries, while the people are still fed with the same nefarious pap of the infancy of humanity, with lies and calumnles about the Mosale people, yet where the laws are liberal the result is soon seen on them, inasmuch as they are citizens among citizens, comparatively free from the vices which make police and police courts a necessity. Look at the showing these people make in this country. No one, man for man, can conjure up superiority to them neither in citizenship nor in performance of a citizen's duties. The prejudice existing has its root in the ignorance of the true status. The features of the bill referred to which are vicious, positively vicious, is that a man is to be judge and jury at the port of embarkation who is and who is not fitted to come to this country. Now, we must certainly keep our shores free from the vicious element, as also from paupers, but we must not discriminate against anyone who is willing to work and who will make himself or his children good American citizens. The Jew makes, above all, a good, law-abiding citizen, is always educated in some way, and very soon acquires our education and citizenship. Please put your interposition against the unjust clauses, so that the measure may emerge as a just and truly American measure, aiding the good and preventing the evil influence and influence.

Sincerely, yours,

Mr. President, having gone so far—and it is far enough to show the reason which induces me to take the matter up—I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont what the reason was for introducing this amendment; what evil exists that is not covered by the present law or which this provision is necessary to cure, or what the purpose of it is?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. STONE. I do. Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, it should be remembered, and it will be remembered by those who listened to the debates last winter, that this bill was not intended so much as a restrictive measure as one that should provide for a better selection from those offering themselves as residents of the United The statistics show that the law of 1903 has operated very well indeed; that 821 per cent of the aliens who have come into the United States during the period of five years have been between the ages of 14 and 44 years-just in the very prime of life-and that 12 per cent have been below 14 years of age, leaving only about 6 per cent above the age of 44 years.

The existing law provides that certain classes enumerated— and the enumerated classes have been very largely read by the Senator from Missouri-shall be excluded, and among them are paupers and those liable to come to want. In this 6 per cent, of which I have spoken, above 44 years of age are some in whom perhaps will not be found the specific diseases for which exclusion may be claimed; nevertheless they may be deficient mentally; they may be deficient physically, so that they are liable to become public charges and to swell the number that already fill the hospitals, particularly in the State of New York.

On page 44 of the document containing the conference report will be found the provision of the House bill containing the clause in relation to the excluded classes, and among them are those found "to be of a low vitality or poor physique such as would incapacitate them for such work."

The clause of the Senate bill is one which has been read, and in conference the Senate clause was adopted. It is the clause that was approved by this body a year ago when the matter was under consideration. The Senator from Missouri will see that it has been treated in such a way that it can do no injustice to anybody. The examination must be a medical examination.

Persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living.

Mr. STONE. Does that mean that the defect must be permanent or temporary?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I do not know that I can make it any more clear than the language of the bill itself. The clause, I may say, was drawn with great care, was submitted to the officers having this matter in charge, was taken to the Department of Justice, submitted to the Assistant Attorney-General, who has charge of all the litigation growing out of immigration cases, and it was under his advice and with his aid, in order that no injustice might be done to any, that the language was adopted which has been incorporated in the report.

I do not think that the fear expressed by the writer of the letter from whom the Senator has read is any longer entertained by those representing that class. They objected to the language of the House bill; but, so far as I know, they do not have the same objection to the language of the Senate bill, which was adopted by the conferees,

I ought to say further, inasmuch as the writer of the letter which the Senator from Missouri has read supposes that there was an arbitrary examination at the port of embarkation, that such is not the case. The examination of the immigrant is made after he reaches our own shores and at our own station.

Mr. STONE. My only object in rising at all, Mr. President, was to call the attention of the Senators in charge of this measure to this objection. I am sure there is no purpose on the part of any Senator to discriminate against the Jews, for instance, who are the people who have been writing to me about the

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I will say to the Senator that such a thought as that never entered into the mind of any person who had anything to do with the drafting of that clause

Mr. STONE. Of course, I know it did not; but on account of the fear that was entertained I simply desired to call attention to it and to have an expression from the Senator that it was not intended by any possible consideration to affect those people.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the point of order which has been made to certain paragraphs of this conference report presents one question, but the report itself presents an entirely different question. In my judgment, some of the paragraphs of the report are subject to the point of order made by several Senators, among them the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon], and as they are, in my opinion, against the rules of the Senate, against orderly legislation by Congress, and subtract from the authority of the two Houses of Congress, I will, if an opportunity presents itself, vote to sustain the point of order.

That does not mean, Mr. President, that I will vote against the passage of such a law as is presented in this report. On the contrary, as I believe not only in the enforcement of the contract-labor law, but, if need be, would increase its efficiency, and inasmuch as I believe in the exclusion of Japanese coolies and laborers from the United States, whether entirely or to the extent proposed in this measure, I shall vote for this report disconnected from the point of order.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] a few moments ago suggested that the proposed legislation with reference to passports did not name the Japanese. That is true; but the Senator will not, I apprehend, deny that it was intended to meet the Japanese situation.

Mr. President, how does this Japanese situation arise, and what is there in it to cause apprehension and alarm? I take it that it results, first, from the fact that we own the Philippine Islands, and that somebody somewhere is afraid of a controversy which may ultimately involve that eastern situation. I take it that the Japanese situation arises, and it has become acute, furthermore, because the President of the United States, in his two messages to this Congress which dealt with the question, has seen proper to misstate the situation in California in the interest of the Japanese, so that those people, taking the case from the President himself, assert and claim that great injustice has been done to their countrymen on the Pacific coast on the school question. I will not stop to read at this time the messages of the President upon this subject; but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in each of these messages to Congress he has misstated the situation there to the effect that the Japanese had been denied the benefits of education, when the truth is, that they have only been denied the privilege of attending the same schools which the white children of California were attending.

Mr. President, what is the remedy proposed here for this situation by this bill which has been brought in by the conferees? I shall not read it again, but it appears on page 17 of the report of the conferees, and is to the effect that the President of the United States himself shall exclude laborers from other countries that come here under false pretenses, as it were, and that the exercise of that right shall rest in the discretion of the President alone.

Let us look at that a moment. I read from the Washington Herald of this morning a statement purporting to have been issued by Mayor Schmitz, of San Francisco. That statement is as follows:

We have come to a satisfactory understanding upon the assumption that Congress will pass the amendment to the immigration bill introduced February 13. Until this amendment is enacted into law we shall make no statement as to what the understanding is.

E. E. Schmitz,

Mayor of San Francisco, for the Board of Education.

In the Washington Post of this morning, what do we find?

Mayor Schmitz and the members of the San Francisco school board, having been assured by the President that this immigration report would be agreed to either at this session or at an extra session he would call, if this action were necessary, and the school board having been turned down by the Japanese Government on its proposition to establish a separate school for Japanese children, the California authorities now in Washington yesterday capitulated. They agreed to admit Japanese children into their public schools, believing that greater good will come from the exclusion of Japanese laborers and coolies.

I do not know. Mr. President, whether this statement is an-

I do not know, Mr. President, whether this statement is authoritative. If any Senator in this Chamber desires to correct it, I should be very glad to have him do so. What, then, is the situation, Mr. President? What is implied by these matters to What, then, is the which I have called attention? It is this: The President will have authority under this law to exclude Japanese laborers and coolies; he will hold the exercise of that authority in abeyance and over the heads of the California authorities, and will keep out the laborers and coolies, provided the civil authorities of California will admit Japanese children indiscriminately to the public schools of San Francisco. Is that the understanding? that the meaning of this? Does any Senator from California or elsewhere deny that these facts are susceptible to this interpretation?

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I desire to say that, so far as I am concerned, I know of no agreement between the California delegation and the President in reference to the adjustment of the school matters of San Francisco. I have not been a party to any such agreement or attended any conference of the California delegation or members of the school board of San Francisco with the Secretary of State or the President of the United States

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the senior Senator from California?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I think it is also incumbent upon me, Mr. President, to make the same assertion that has been made by my colleague [Mr. Flint]. I know nothing whatever of any arrangement having been made, directly or impliedly, other than that which the Senator from Texas read or has quoted from the newspapers. While the truth is almost always in the newspapers, yet it is sometimes painted in Titian colors. It is highly colored, I think, in this instance; at any rate, I can say the truth has been embellished to a high degree.

Mr. CULBERSON. There is no statement, Mr. President, which I have read which says that any agreement or understanding has been entered into by the delegation in Congress from California. The statement is to the effect that an understanding has been reached between the President, the mayor, and the school authorities of San Francisco upon this subject, and the extent of the statements which have been made by the Senators from California is that they are not apprised of any such arrangement. Of course their statements are entirely acceptable and satisfactory to us all.

to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator think that such an agreement as he details has been reached?

Mr. CULBERSON. I stated that the newspapers reported that such an agreement had been made.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the Senator's opinion? He is making a speech upon that supposed agreement.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am not on as good terms with the President as is the Senator from Indiana, and of course I have

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is the Senator's misfortune. Mr. CULBERSON. I dare say; but that is a question of opinion also. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I should like the Senator's opinion, since he is making a speech upon it, as to whether he thinks such an agreement has been reached?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I would not be surprised, in view of all the circumstances connected with this matter, if such an agreement as that has been reached.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, Mr. President, assuming that such an agreement has been reached, and, as the Senator has said, that it affects California, and San Francisco particularly, since the city authorities of San Francisco are satisfied and the school authorities of San Francisco are satisfied and the Senators from California are satisfied and the President is satisfied, why should the Senator from Texas be dissatisfied?

Mr. CULBERSON. I am dissatisfied, Mr. President, if this kind of an agreement has been entered into, because the President of the United States and the majority in this Chamber intend that the people of California and San Francisco shall surrender their right to local self-government, or else Japanese coolies and laborers may be continued to be admitted into this

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the Senator from Texas think that he is a better guardian of the interests of San Francisco than are the city and school authorities of San Francisco themselves?

Mr. CULBERSON. I think, Mr. President, that there is no such whip held over me by the President of the United States as he holds over the citizenship of California with respect to this immigration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But would the Senator mind-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Would the Senator mind answering that question, since the Senator says that he thinks an agreement has been made by the authorities of San Francisco?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have said nothing of the kind. simply read from a newspaper, which states that an agreement of that character has been entered into, and I said that I would not be surprised, from all the circumstances, if it did state the truth.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator's entire speech is based upon the supposition that such an agreement has been reached. Now, I have twice asked the Senator-and I trust he will answer me so that the Senate may be informed-whether in his earnest defense of the rights of San Francisco and of California the Senator from Texas thinks he is a better guardian of those rights than are the authorities of San Francisco and California themselves

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I express it as my belief that after this controversy is over it will be seen that the authorities of California and the school authorities of San Francisco will admit the Japanese to the public schools of that city indiscriminately, and that the President will enforce to a degree this authority to exclude Japanese coolies and laborers, and that thus, in all probability, subsequent events will develop the truth of this statement.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?
Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, of course I would be very glad to answer any question of the Senator from Indiana, but I only intended to speak a moment upon this question and not defer the vote longer than 4 o'clock, the original time suggested for taking the vote.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not be persistent with the Senator. I will submit to the Senate and to the Senator that he has not yet answered my question. I was only going to repeat it, after venturing to recall the Senator from the realms of prophecy, which he has entered and in which he is always so engaging, and ask him to state to the Senate whether the Senator from Texas thinks he is a better guardian of the rights of the people of San Francisco than are the authorities of San Francisco themselves and of the rights of the people of California than are the Senators from California themselves?

Mr. CARMACK rose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course, if the Senator from Texas does not want to answer that question, I see the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] has risen-

Mr. CULBERSON. I would state to the Senator from Indiana that if I were less modest than I am and less modest than some I know, I would unquestionably express the opinion that was a better judge of those things than are the people of

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then, I take it, Mr. President, that the Senator is proceeding upon the assumption that the Senator from Texas is a better guardian of the rights of the people of California than are the Senators from California on this floor and of the people of San Francisco than are the authorities of the people of San Francisco.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.
Mr. CARMACK. I just wanted to suggest to the Senator from Texas that the question of coercing a sovereign State into a surrender of its right to govern its internal and domestic affairs is a question that concerns every Senator in this body and every citizen of every State.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, of course if the Senator from Indiana

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I will not interrupt the Senator further. I am going to venture to reply to the Senator from Tennessee merely by saying that the Senator from Tennessee is always vigilant and alert, and, I might almost say, militant to find a violation of the sovereign rights of the States all over the country all the time under this and every other Administration. [Laughter.] If there is one thing that the Senator from Tennessee is more careful of than another, it is to find the rights of the States being violated at every minute of every night of every day of every year, and, in his defense, I pay him the tribute of saying that he is always watchful, wakeful, and brave.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will permit me

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.
Mr. CARMACK. I will say if there is anything with respect to which the Senator from Indiana is more vigilant than any other, it is to find a chance to violate the Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator will yield merely to let me say

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas vield?

· Mr. CULBERSON. Of course.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely hope the Senator will let me say, in answer to the more or less truthful observation of the Senator from Tennessee, that no matter how fell might be my purpose or that of any other Senator upon this floor, it never could be accomplished while the Senator from Tennessee was present. The Constitution, Mr. President, is absolutely safe so long as he is here. [Laughter.]
Mr. CARMACK. Then it will be a short-lived Constitution.

[Laughter.]

Mr. CULBERSON. I have referred, Mr. President, to this question for the purpose of indicating that not only have the rules of this Chamber been violated, in my opinion, by bringing in such a report as this under the circumstances, but that it has been done for the purpose, not known perhaps to all, of compelling the people of California and of San Francisco to surrender their right under the Constitution to regulate their public schools. If not, Mr. President, why do they propose this indefi-nite discretion in the President of the United States? Why does the mayor of San Francisco insist that until this is adopted he will not state what the understanding is? If they want to exclude the Japanese, if they want to answer the demand of the people of California and the people of the other States of the Union to exclude Japanese coolies and laborers from coming in contact with the labor of this country, why do they not do it by express law? Why do they leave it merely to the disit by express law? cretion of the President, and allow him to stand there with this authority on his part, and on his part alone, to exclude them under such conditions as he may see proper to dictate?

Mr. President, yesterday, having this situation in view, I proposed in effect that the conference report should be recommitted and the conferees should be instructed to bring in an amendment excluding Japanese coolies and laborers from the United States absolutely and positively, and not leave it to the discretion of the President to do so, provided, as I believe, the understanding is that the people of California shall surrender their rights upon this local question.

Now, let me read the resolution I proposed yesterday:

Resolved, That the conferees on the part of the Senate on the bill S. 4403 be instructed to present to the conferees an amendment providing for the exclusion of Japanese laborers and coolies from the United States and their Territories and insular possessions and the District of Columbia, to be effective January 1, 1908.

Upon that I challenge those in charge of this bill and on the other side of the Chamber to vote upon the question. Do not get behind a point of order. Points of order are convenient or inconvenient in this Chamber as party purposes are to be sub-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will suggest to the Senator from Texas that no point of order lies here.

Mr. CULBERSON. I was about to say that even the Senator from Indiana can be mistaken.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course the Senator could not expect the Senator from Indiana to admit that, but upon this particular point the Senator from Texas will have to admit that he is in error, since a point of order does not lie upon a conference report.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am very glad to hear the Senator from Indiana say, contrary to the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts, that a point of order against this resolution which I have proposed will not lie, and I am satisfied the distinguished occupant of the chair, from the same State, will concur in so just a ruling.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The point of order about which I was talking was the Senator's suggested point of order against the conference report. I did not know anything about his resolu-tion. The Senator from Texas has so many resolutions here all the time that I could not possibly be supposed to expect that this was the particular one he had in mind.

The Senator from Texas has introduced good many resolutions, but they have always brought forth

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Splendid resolutions, Mr. President.

Mr. CULBERSON. What I desired to say was that I hoped the Senator from Massachusetts would withdraw his point of order as to this resolution, and let us have a direct vote of the Senate upon the proposition whether or not Japanese laborers and coolies should be excluded from the United States, so that the people of San Francisco and of the entire State of California might be allowed to exercise their sovereign rights as to their schools without coercion on the part of the President.

Mr. CLARK of Montana. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to take up the time of the Senate in any general discussion of this bill or the point of order raised on the several propositions. The points in the bill which are objectionable to some of the southern Senators have been ably presented, and I am in accord with their views upon those matters. But, Mr. President, I will direct the few words that I intend to say-and I do not purpose to detain the Senate long-to the provision found on page 17, which I will not read, as it has been already read several times It is the one to which the distinguished Senator from to-day. Texas [Mr. Culberson] has just alluded.

Mr. President, upon a careful examination of this clause I confess—and it may be possible that my mental machinery is not capable of grasping the subject presented—that I can not understand the scope and the purpose of the provision. I presume, in view of what has been said, that it is a proposition relating to the exclusion of certain undesirable Asiatic people from our shores. It appears to me that a question of such import, a question involving the rights and welfare of several million people in the western part of this continent, should have some kind of affirmative legislation, instead of the indirect, vague, uncertain, and inexplicable clause which has been hastily inserted in this bill.

We had pending during the last session of Congress the rate bill, which was discussed here during several months. It elicited the greatest and ablest debates, or amongst the greatest, ever heard in this Chamber. It was only after months of careful investigation and discussion that a conclusion was arrived at. We have now here a question, Mr. President, which, so far as it concerns the area in the western part of the country which may be affected by the provisions contained in the pending bill, is of more significance and of more importance than the rate bill as applied to that same territory. And yet we are to consider and pass upon a question of such immense importance. couched in such language that it is difficult to understand, and without any chance, except in a few hours, to discuss it, and we are called upon to pass it blindly, simply to help the President out of a dilemma.

I suppose that this clause grew out of the fact that there has been some difference of opinion between the Chief Executive and the citizens of San Francisco on the question of excluding Japanese pupils from their schools, a case in which, in my opinion, as has been ably contended, the President has largely exceeded his authority. If this be true and the people of Oregon and California are content with the provision of this bill, as their States will receive the first impact of the Asiatic hordes which may attempt to flood our shores, we, perhaps, of the intermountain States, who live away from the coast, might be supposed to rest content. But I want to say, Mr. President, that there are several hundred thousand citizens of this country adjacent to the Pacific coast States-and I speak only for the State which I have the honor in part to represent here-who, notwithstanding the decision of the representatives from California, will not be satisfied with this flimsy subterfuge. The question of Asiatic immigration affects all of the western part of the United States. We have a large Chinese and Japanese population now in that part of the country, and the great labor organizations whose members are occupied in mining and other industrial pursuits which are the basis of prosperity in all that vast region are a unit against the further immigration of Asiatics into this country, and the people generally support them in that contention.

Mr. President, we find here a provision that when the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the purpose of the people to whom passports have been issued to go to the insular possessions of the United States or to the Canal Zone is to enter the United States ultimately to the "detriment of Porto Rico, Hawaii, and Philippines, giving President power to restrict the interests of labor," he may refuse to admit them. Now, we know that the President of the United States recently in a communication to the Congress expressed himself in the broadest and most liberal terms concerning the influx of Japanese into this country, and went so far as to recommend that they be allowed full privileges of citizenship. Is it probable that a Chief Executive who entertains such favorable impressions of the Japanese people is going to exercise the discretion set forth in this provision in favor of the labor interests of the country which it is supposed to be intended to protect?

It is, in my opinion, clothing one man with too much power. It is giving him the authority to legislate, as has been ably stated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Dubors]. Now let us look a little further into this proposition. The President may refuse to admit these people if he believes that their admission is to "the detriment of labor conditions." Who is to judge whether or not the admission of 10,000, 50,000, perhaps 100,000 Asiatics into this country might be detrimental to the labor interests? The President alone can determine that matter. As I said, it is a question of such far-reaching results that we ought not to rely upon the judgment and discretion of any one man, even though he occupy the exalted position of President of the United States. I do not know whether or not, in the absence of a treaty with Japan, the President will be warranted in exercising the discretion which this provision confers upon him with regard to subjects of Japan and other countries who might go to the insular possessions or the Canal Zone. It might be that the exercise of such discretion might involve us in trouble with that nation. I am confident that we have no treaty with Japan which would allow the President the power to exclude Japanese subjects from entering our ports if they should come directly from Japan to the United States.

Now, it seems to me, to make this provision consistent and complete—I should not say complete, because, in my opinion, nothing could be added to it that would make it complete-that it should go further and say that the President of the United States, when he believes that laborers or coolies coming directly from Japan into the United States, to the detriment of the labor interests, should have the power to refuse them entrance. Why was not such a provision as this included? Is it because the temporary residence of these people in Hawaii or the Philippine Islands or the Canal Zone might so demoralize them as to render them unfit to dwell amongst us? In my judgment, if these people who come around Robin Hood's barn to get into the United States should be excluded, the President should likewise be clothed with power to exclude those who come directly from Japan to this country. But it seems the friends of the Administration are afraid to take such a bold stand and have concluded to work by a plan of circumvention and indirection. This whole proposition, in my mind, is ill advised, crude, and vague, and will accomplish nothing, and it is unworthy of being framed into an important immigration bill like this. It is one of those exclusion propositions which does not exclude, and never will exclude, undesirable people; and if our friends in California believe that it will meet their requirements and solve the difficulties concerning which they were recently up in arms, in my opinion, their hopes will hang by a slender thread.

Mr. President, I shall content myself with simply making this further statement, that, in my opinion, it is due to the people of the Pacific coast and of the great States of the entire West that the influx of hordes of coolies, whether they come from China or Japan or any other country, should be absolutely pro-hibited by a well-considered act of Congress, and that we should not attempt to deal with the question by such a proposition as this, which no one can completely comprehend and which will be barren of important results.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, in the last hour I received a couple of dispatches that relate to the proviso which the Senator from Montana [Mr. Clark] has just been discussing, and I think it my duty to lay them before the Senate. I ask that they be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DENVER, COLO., February 16, 1907.

Hon. T. M. PATTERSON, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

We trust that Japanese labor will not be permitted entrance, but certainly not limited to Porto Rico. Hawaii, and the Philippines. If it must come, the mainland should be included. C. S. MOREY.

HOLLY, COLO., February 16, 1907.

them from mainland, very much against beet-sugar interests, as it gives cane-sugar countries cheap labor we need so much here. Please have clause modified so that we may have benefit of this cheap labor. The adoption of this clause as now formulated means very serious handleap

W. M. WILEY, Vice-President, The Holly Sugar Company.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, these dispatches show how easy it is for those who do not follow closely the proceedings in Congress to be mistaken as to the scope and meaning of The theory upon which those measures before the two Houses. dispatches were sent is that under this bill Japanese are to be excluded from the mainland and to be permitted to enter, without limit, Hawaii, the Philippine Islands, and our other insular

The point that was made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK | shows clearly that there is nothing at all in the proviso which excludes them from the mainland. In other words, so far as the proviso itself is concerned, if that were all there is that will operate upon immigration, the Japanese can come to this country directly from Japan as freely as they choose. I suppose the failure to provide for excluding Japanese who come directly from Japan to the United States is upon the theory that the Japanese will not be permitted to come directly to the mainland by the Japanese Government. I have understood-and whether my understanding of the thing is accurate I can not say—that Japanese are not allowed to leave the home country except upon passports, and that it is the policy of the Japanese Government to give no passports to its labor or cooly subjects to come to the United States. If that is the case, we can very well understand why there is no provision in this proviso that will exclude Japanese who come directly from the home country. But it must be clear to the most careless thinker that it is only necessary for the Japanese Government to change this policy, if that is its policy, so as to open its gates and so many as please will pass through them, and enter gates, and so many as please will pass through them and enter the United States directly from Japan.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me? Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. I merely want to say to the Senator from Colorado that so far as my knowledge goes there is no law of Japan upon the subject. It is merely a custom and usage. It can be changed at any time. There is no law which prohibits the Japanese from leaving Japan without a passport.
Mr. PATTERSON. It is simply a custom?

Mr. RAYNER. A custom which may be changed at any time. Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, yes; I only mentioned that fact for the purpose of making a statement with reference to this proviso. If that is the only legislation, whether in the nature of acts of Congress or treaties, in which the Senate would play its part, that is to be had upon the subject, then I would vote against this proviso, and therefore against the entire conference report, because the proposed legislation would be wholly inadequate to accomplish the end that not only the Pacific coast seeks, but that all of the midwestern States have in view, and particularly the States in which mining is carried on to any very great extent.

The Japanese question has already become a burning one in Colorado, and the labor organizations of that State have commenced to take action upon it and to speak without reserve their opposition to Japanese immigration. Only yesterday I clipped this from a Colorado paper:

FIVE HUNDRED ADDED TO JAP COLONY AT PUEBLO IN TWO WEEKS—THIS NUMBER JOINS THE 1,100 ALREADY EMPLOYED BY THE C. F. AND I. COMPANY.

The Japanese invasion of Colorado is no fallacy. At the meeting of the Trades Assembly yesterday it was reported that within the past two weeks 500 Japs have arrived at Pueblo to augment the 1,100 already there. The latter number are employed by one concern alone, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company.

I have been aware for a year or more that this company, the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, a large steel manufacturing company in Colorado, has been engaged in replacing a large number of its white workingmen with Japanese. I suppose they do so because they find it profitable. It may be both in the quality of the labor and the wages paid; although I understand that up to this time no discrimination between the Caucasian and the Asiatic has been made by this company in the compensation paid for labor. But it shows that this Mongolian invasion, which commenced nearly half a century ago on the Pacific coast, and which was stopped and turned back, has commenced again from another country, and that Colorado, like all the other mountain States where labor is heavily employed, has already commenced seriously to feel the effect of this invasion.

I recall that in going from Denver to Grand Lake a year ago crossed a spur railroad then being constructed upon which a large number of Japanese were working in the grading outfit.

I was told that there was one group in the neighborhood of 130 strong. Since then from many parts of the State have come reports of the certain, the quick, but silent invasion of the labor ranks of Colorado by Japanese cooly laborers.

Mr. President, I intend, so far as I am concerned, to vote for this proviso, but I do it upon the theory that it is simply a tentative proposition. It is intended merely to stay the unrest, the clamor, the dissatisfaction that has manifested itself, commencing on the Pacific coast and extending eastwardly from there, a dissatisfaction that is made known in no uncertain ways and in a voice that has at last reached the capital of the nation.

The proposed legislation as a permanent proposition would not be worth the paper upon which it is written. In the first place, direct immigration is in no wise provided against. In the next place, I take it, under the very language of the proviso, if Japanese subjects should receive passports in good faith to go to some other country, say to go from Japan to the Ha-waiian or the Philippine islands, and they did not at the time they received the passports entertain a fraudulent purpose to use them to get away from Japan to enter the United States, then we could not deny them admission should they subsequently come here. To do so would be a casus belli, for, Mr. President, I can imagine no greater affront to a high-spirited country than to deny admission to its subjects into a country to which, either under treaty or legislation, they had a right to come. Arbitrary or unjust exercise of a power in the Ex-ecutive of one nation to exclude the subjects of another nation would justly cause grave dissatisfaction, and with most nations it would result in war.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.
Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he understands the proviso to mean that when the President discovers certain fraudulent entries into this country have been made by means of passports, he can issue an edict or an order prohibiting the ingress into this country of all subjects of the country that issues such passports, or does he construe it to be confined to the individual case of fraudulent ingress or entry?

Mr. PATTERSON. To my mind the language clearly limits the hostile operation of the President to those who fraudulently use passports.

Mr. MALLORY. Only to individual cases?

Mr. PATTERSON. Only to individual cases; and it does not empower the President to issue a general order prohibiting, say, in the case of Japan, all Japanese from coming into this country in the event we find that passports are generally abused.

The persons against whom the Executive is to direct his order are specifically named; they are "such" persons—that is, those foreigners who have secured passports from their home government fradulently, intending to use them to gain entrance into this country. Against "such," and such only, the edict of the President may be issued excluding them from our country.

Mr. President, if this is to be the full measure of relief the Western States are to receive, whether through a treaty or legislative action, I can see in the future a stormy time either between the citizens of our own country or between this country and a foreign country.

There can be no doubt as to what the people of the West will demand. I do not confine my designation to the Pacific coast. I extend it to the people, especially to the laboring people, of the West, the mechanics and workingmen of every class and degree in the West. There can be no doubt as to what the people will demand. It will be the exclusion of Japanese laborers and coolies from the United States and its colonies. and nothing less. If they demand that, and the President shall execute this provision in the spirit of that demand, then offense will inevitably be given to the countries whose passports are challenged and whose citizens are excluded, because it must be, and it is undeniable from the careful wording of this provision, that it is neither the intention nor expectation of the Executive of the United States to use drastic measures to exclude the subjects of Asiatic governments from our shores. That is shown from the very nature of the authority that is given. It is all to depend upon the judgment of the Executive, first, as to whether passports to other countries or to our insular possessions were originally obtained to gain entrance into this country. It is the mind of the President that is to be satisfied upon that subject. Then, in addition to that, the mind of the President must be satisfied that the entry even of the interdicted classes will be detrimental to the labor of the country.

If this proposed law is administered in that spirit, if the executive department should use its discretion generously and admit any considerable number of the proscribed people, then,

Mr. President, there is disturbance, unrest, and dissatisfaction at home that must inevitably lead to trouble and discord with other nations.

If this law is executed in the spirit in which the working people of the West expect exclusion laws to be administered, then the President must, in my opinion, go outside and beyond the language of the proviso and enforce exclusion in such a way as to properly incense the governments whose subjects become the objects of our Executive's action. In other words, under it we are certain to have either grave and serious trouble at home or serious trouble with foreign nations.

The only excuse, Mr. President, for legislation of this character and upon a great subject like this is that it bridges over a troublesome time; that it will make easy negotiations which will accomplish the aims of the western people, and that there is a fair promise that the President will be untiring and unceasing in his efforts to secure by treaty the kind of exclusion that is needed, and if the President should be unable to secure that character of exclusion, then that Congress will not fail to come up to the full measure of its duty to the working people of the

Mr. President, upon the theory that this legislation is tentative or experimental in its character, upon the theory that the Executive and Congress are confronted with a crisis that demands palliation at the present time, upon the theory that this will tend measurably even to satisfy the dissatisfied elements of the western part of the country, and further, upon the theory that either the President or Congress or both will be prompt and earnest and energetic in securing the only kind of legislation that will satisfy the section of the country which is so deeply interested in the class of immigration that reaches our western shores, I shall support this measure.

The East is not disturbed. This undesirable population by the time it has been sifted through the thousands of miles of territory between the Pacific Ocean and the Atlantic, by the time it has been absorbed here and there in the numerous industries that stand ready to employ cheap or sufficient labor, by the time those needs have been filled only a scattering few will be left to reach the East, and that few will be there accepted as an advantage rather than be regarded as a menace.

But the people of the West have cause of complaint, and they will continue to have cause of complaint until this new threatened invasion has been arrested and a check put upon it as effective in every respect as were the exclusion laws of forty years ago that were particularly directed against the population of the Chinese Empire.

Mr. CARMACK. Just a word, Mr. President.
I thoroughly agree with what the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] said in his criticism of the provision in this report giving the President the power and discretion in the exclusion of citizens of foreign countries. I agree with him as to the significance and the purpose of that provision.

I believe, Mr. President, speaking in plain words, the fact is that a foreign power has browbeaten the Government of the United States and it has browbeaten a sovereign State of this Union into a surrender of its rights to control its own affairs. The attitude of this Government toward California has been harsh and turbulent and offensive to the last degree. Its attitude toward Japan has been cringing, obsequious, and almost pusillanimons

One of the President's favorite aphorisms has been to speak softly and carry a big stick. He seems to have interpreted that in this instance so as to speak softly to foreign nations and carry a big stick for the backs of his own people.

I object to this provision, Mr. President, because I believe that it will arm the Executive-and it is intended to arm the Executive-with a power to coerce the people of a sovereign State into a surrender of a right to control their own affairs, and that this is being done upon the demand of a nation made without a shadow of reason, without a shadow of right, without a shadow of foundation based upon any treaty stipula-tion or the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I believe that the President of the United States has created the difficulty which he now seeks to remedy. Had he, in the first instance, met the demand of Japan with the insistence that the domestic affairs of the State of California were outside of the control of the President of the United States, and had he sought to insure lasting friendship between the two countries by urging a treaty that would prevent economic friction upon her own soil caused by the juxtaposition of two laboring classes differing essentially in their standards of life and their standard of wages; had he stood firmly for this, I believe there would have been no danger of the enmity of Japan.

The people of the United States have nothing but admiration for Japan and for the people of Japan. The people of the Pacific coast have nothing but admiration for Japan and the people of Japan. But the people of the United States and the people of the Pacific coast are determined that there shall be no increase of race complications upon American soil, and they know that the best way of cementing forever the friendship between Japan and the United States is to prevent a race conflict by refusing to bring in juxtaposition the workingmen of both races, differing as they do in their standards of life and of wages.

Instead of that the President of the United States arraigned the sentiment of the Pacific coast, arraigned the local authorities there for exercising the power which was theirs as a local there for exercising the power which was theirs as a local sovereignty, and added fuel to the flame by insisting upon it that the Japanese people should not only be permitted to come here practically without restriction, but that they should be admitted to citizenship in the United States. He has thus created a movement upon the Pacific coast that will not rest until it ends in Japanese exclusion.

Mr. President, Japan has reason to complain of the United States, but not in the particulars to which the President has called attention. Within the past eight or ten years we have intruded our sovereignty into the Orient and taken possession of numerous islands there adjacent to Japan. Japan is a great maritime power, the carrier nation of the Orient, with ships floating upon every sea, with a splendid navy and a splendid merchant marine, and by reason of her nearness to those islands and her foresight and energy entitled to her accustomed share of the carrying business, What have we done?

We have extended our navigation laws to the Philippine Islands, though we have delayed temporarily their operation. For what purpose? To drive out the carrying trade of Japan and other nations from their accustomed fields and to monopolize the carriage of the Philippine Islands as well as that between the islands and the United States for American ships, imposing upon the Filipinos and upon their trade the extra burden of increased cost in ships and administration, and at the same time aiming a blow at Japan's operations in her legitimate field.

This Administration is to-day, under the misguiding name of "reciprocity," urging the maintenance of a tariff wall in the Philippines against the products of all nations except our own. Those islands have to-day a fair revenue tariff imposed equally upon the products of all countries, including our own, and it is sought now by this Administration to catch an underhold, to maintain the tariff wall or raise it as to these other countries, Japan included, and to level it to the ground so far as our own products are concerned. It is the very purpose of this measure by preferences given to ourselves to take away from Japan and other nations the opportunity to manufacture for and to trade with the Philippine Islands and to monopolize for American manufacturers and producers the trade of these islands. islands are in the Orient, at Japan's very door, within the field of her rightful operations.

While claiming preferences for ourselves in the Philippines, we deny Japan's right to preferences in Manchuria and Korea. Administration is insisting upon the open door in Manchuria and Korea and proposing to close it in the Philippines. We insist that Japan, occupying toward Manchuria and Korea practically the same relation that we have toward the Philippine Islands—those of protection—should open the door of trade to us, and yet at the same time we are proposing to close the door on Japan in the Philippines.

These are possible causes of friction between Japan and this country, which are likely to increase in the future, which we should avoid, because we are wrong in our contentions. we are not wrong in our contention that whilst we wish to maintain friendship with Japan we can not establish such relations of free immigration and intercourse of our people as to produce disturbance, economic revolution, and race conflict at home. We have the right to state that calmly and frankly to Japan. Whilst we insist upon this as involving no breach of interna-tional friendship, we should take care not to give cause of enmity between the two countries by economic changes in the Philippines, which will be sure to arouse the enmity and hostility of Japan.

I do not intend, Mr. President, to enlarge upon the difficulties of the situation, though a vast field of discussion is opened as to the future regarding the relations between Japan and this country, particularly if we retain our possessions in the Orient, Friendship with Japan, if we retain them, is essential, and we never shall be able to retain them if Japan says "No." We shall not be able to retain them, because they are 7,000 miles away from our base of operations. We shall not be able to retain them, because to fortify them would involve a greater expenditure than would be involved in the fortification of the soil.

entire coast of the United States. We shall not be able to retain them, because our transports, carrying our men there to defend them, will be cut down in midocean.

I suggest to the President of the United States, if a suggestion can reach him from this Chamber, that he address himself to the real cause of future trouble between Japan and this country, and while seeking to remedy that, that he also give

Japan some idea of the Government of this country, its dual government—the government of the nation and the government of the State, each supreme within its jurisdiction-and that he impress upon that nation-and I have no doubt that the suggestion will be received with hospitality—that the best way of preserving international friendship is to prevent economic warfare, the conflict of dissimilar standards of labor on the same

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for but a moment. I shall vote for this measure, although I dislike the manner in which it has been brought into this body, whereby we have been prevented from offering such amendments as we think appropriate and proper, and notwithstanding the fact that this proviso, which has excited so much discussion, is, in my judgment, ambiguous and is practically, if it is intended for the purpose which is assigned to it here, a Dead Sea apple-of the people whom it is intended to benefit.

I do not think, Mr. President, that under this proviso anything like the relief from the menace which is threatening the Pacific coast will be accomplished. However, the Pacific coast has its own representatives here, and for the present, at least, this question is confined to the area represented by a certain number of Senators, and inasmuch as they have made no protest against this, I do not feel called upon to obtrude my objections to this particular feature of the bill.

I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] will be submitted to the Senate, and that we shall be allowed to put on record our views regarding that proposed feature of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the conference report?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole, the bill seems to be a rather long and complicated one, deals with a very important matter, and ought at least to receive very careful consideration. I will further state to the gentleman from South Dakota that I do not notice a single minority member of the committee from whence the bill comes, and so I have no one of whom to take counsel. I reserve the right to object

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the bill has the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, in which committee it was very carefully considered. The bill is substantially in accordance with an agreement which has just been made with the Indians, signed by forty-two more than a majority of the male Indians over the age of 18 years. It is in line with the recent bills that have been passed affecting the sale of the Indian reservations. It is along the line of the bill which passed in the Fifty-eighth Congress for the sale of that portion of this same reservation that is located in Gregory County. The maximum price of the land in that bill was fixed at $4 per acre, while the maximum price in this bill is $6 per acre.

The Indians, as I have stated before, have agreed to the disposition of it under the terms of the bill. They will have left, after this land is disposed of, a reservation that is substantially 50 miles square, and there are only 5,000 Indians. I certainly hope, in view of the fact that no opposition developed from any source to the bill in its present form, that there will be no objection to the consideration of it at this time.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota, Certainly,

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think that the State of South Dakota should have land for school purposes, as is provided in the bill, and that the Government should pay for the

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will answer that question by stating that in at least six different instances since South Dakota was admitted into the Union Congress has made an appropriation and paid for the school sections under the guaranty that was given to the State when we came into the Union.

Mr. FINLEY. Why is that where certain sections have been allotted or patented the Government is called upon to pay for sections 16 and 36?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That refers to sections that have been allotted to the Indians, and it has always been the custom where school sections have been allotted to give to the State in lieu of such sections other sections, not exceeding two in any township.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it true that some of these lands have been allotted to the Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It is true that a portion of the lands have been allotted to the Indians. Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman think the Government

Mr. FINLEY. Does the gentleman think the Government should be called upon to pay to the State of South Dakota for lands allotted to the Indians? Doesn't the land belong to the Indians? I ask the gentleman if that practice has been the

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. We have heretofore appropriated to pay for sections 16 and 36 in every township, or where they had been taken to pay for a section in lieu thereof.

Mr. FINLEY. Has that been the rule where lands are allotted to Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; that has been the rule and was the rule in the former Rosebud bill which passed the Fifty-eighth Congress, and is exactly in line with this provision, and the price is the same.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and the agreement be inserted and ratified. That has not been done, and that has not been the practice for several years. wish to ask this question: Have the provisions of the treaty been inserted in this bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I may say to the gentleman that they have been.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman able to state how many acres were sold at $4 an acre under the bill which was passed opening that portion of the Rosebud Reservation of Gregory County two or three years ago?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Somewhere near 250,000 to 300,000 acres out of 400,000 acres.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At $4 per acre?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. The land that sold readily sold at $4 per acre. But very little sold at the $3 price. Since that the rougher portions have been taken at $2.50. I may say to the gentleman, as he was familiar with that legislation, that under the agreement that was made with the Indians they had agreed to sell that land for $1,040,000; that the opposition to that legislation came from the fact that the friends of the Indians were claiming they would not get as much under the terms of the bill as they would have gotten under the treaty. They will, however, receive nearly much, and have already received over $900,000, and if those that have taken lands pay up, as they undoubtedly will, there will be over $1,600,000 received, with nearly 100,000 acres to be disposed of, which will be sold ultimately.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One of the objections that have since been made to the method by which that reservation was opened is based upon this alleged statement of facts, that a great number of persons who could not possibly obtain homesteads under the bill were brought great distances into South Dakota and that great suffering resulted from the fact that the time they were required to remain there practically exhausted their resources, and they had great difficulty, after their disappointment, in leaving South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think that statement is founded on any facts.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is familiar, of course, with that particular locality?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Entirely so, and I was at the opening at the time it took place.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly,

Mr. MANN. How many people are supposed to have gone to South Dakota at the time of this previous opening?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The total number of registrations was 105,000.

Mr. MANN. And how many people entered land?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Twelve to fifteen hundred. I don't remember exactly, but not to exceed 2,000. Mr. MANN. Not over 10 per cent?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No.

Mr. MANN. What does the gentleman assume was the average cost to the people who went there, and how long a time did they have to remain there?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They had to remain only a part of one day, or not to exceed one day. I don't know that there is any way of estimating what each one spent, but from eight to ten dollars.

Mr. MANN. They had to go there to make the registration? Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They had to go into the State, but not right to where the land is. They had to go into the State to be registered?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. Mr. MANN. Then they had to remain there if they wanted Mr. MANN. Then they had to obtain and fulfill a chance?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. No; they did not.

Mr. MANN. Oh, they did not have to remain there. Of course they could go home and come back. Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I may say to the gentleman they did not remain. Those that were successful at the drawing were notified and had plenty of time to go there and get their filing. I think it was thirty days.

I know the complaint was made to me very bitterly at the time this opening was had, from people in our town who wanted to get in on the ground floor, that it was an expensive proposition—an expensive gamble. That is what it expensive proposition—an expensive gamble. That is what it was. It has been charged that a great deal of land that was then sold at $4 per acre was worth nearer $40. Can the gentleman inform us about that?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is not true. Four dollars an acre was a fair price for the land. In fact, it was more, in my opinion, than I thought it was worth at the time, and it was disposed of largely because the people had an idea that it was of greater value than it was, due to the fact that it had received so much advertising during the time the legislation was in progress.

Mr. MANN. How much land is covered by this bill?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. About 1,000,000 acres.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause Chair hears none. The question is on the amendments. [After a pause.]

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Burke of South Dakota, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT LOUISIANA, MO.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 25046) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Louisiana, Mo., which I send to the Clerk's desk. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That D. A. Ball, R. H. Goodman, Harry Higbee, William E. Williams, Charles Dustin, Ed. A. Glenn, and David Wald, their successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad, electric road, and highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at Louisiana, in the State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters." approved March 23, 1996.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; it is in conformity with the ironclad regulations we have here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Clark of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CERTAIN CHANGES IN THE POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10095) making certain changes in the postal laws.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after thirty days from the final passage of this act, when in addition to the stamps required to transmit any letter or package of first-class matter through the mails there shall be attached to the envelope or covering 10 cents' worth of ordinary stamps of any denomination, with the words "special delivery" written or printed on the envelope or covering, the said package shall be handled, transmitted, and delivered in all respects as though it bore a regulation "special-delivery" stamp.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as

In line 9, after the word "covering," insert "under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that this bill has been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and recommended by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; it is a unanimous report. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to object, but I wish to be heard upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The gentleman is in error.

It has not been recommended by the Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Maybe I am.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I desire to offer an amendment, to which I think the gentleman from Missouri will have no objection and its real and the second of the second o objection, and in order to expedite it I will submit it in one amendment. I move to amend by striking out all the language in line 3 following the word "after," and also the first word in line 4, and insert "July 1, 1907;" also strike out in line 5 the words "first class," and insert, in line 8, following the word "delivery," the words "or their equivalent."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think this amendment ought to be accepted. It improves the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3 strike out all after the word "after," and the first word on line 4, and insert "July 1, 1907."

In line 5 strike out the words "first class."

In line 8, after the word "delivery," insert the words "or their equivalent."

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. And I suggest the bill as proposed to be amended be read.

Mr. MANN.

Mr. MANN. Let us hear the bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill as if the committee amendment and these amendments just offered by the gentleman from Indiana were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after July 1, 1907, when in addition to the stamps required to transmit any letter or package of mall matter through the malls there shall be attached to the envelope or covering 10 cents worth of ordinary stamps of any denomination, with the words "special delivery" or their equivalent written or printed on the envelope or covering, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, the said package shall be handled, transmitted, and delivered in all respects as though it bore a regulation "special delivery" stamp.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would ask the gentleman if he is aware of the fact this bill was referred to the Post-Office Department and they refused to recommend its passage?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know about that, but I know this, that one of the Assistant Postmasters-General, or somebody in the Department, suggested this very thing in one of his reports

Mr. STEENERSON. I saw a letter, and I will inquire of the chairman if there was not a letter in the Post-Office Committee that refuses, or does not recommend the passage of this bill, and I fear that its passage will complicate matters very much in the Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You are going to complicate matters this much, that it will bring four or five hundred thousand dollars of revenue into the Post-Office Department

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not think so, and I am afraid it will be impossible to keep track over all revenues under that. would like for the chairman of the Post-Office Committee to state the facts in regard to the recommendation of the Department, as I think the House ought to know what the facts are.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have already stated the facts, and I fear the gentleman from Minnesota did not hear The Post-Office Department, in answer to the inquiry concerning this bill when it was first referred to it, simply suggested that it doubted the propriety of it. Nevertheless, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads thought the bill a wise measure, and have reported it to the House.

Since the report of the committee, in discussing the matter with the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, it was thought best to offer these amendments which I have offered, which are in the interest of the proper administration of the law. my own part, I agree with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark] that this will undoubtedly result in benefit to the public; and, the Department always having the control with respect to the regulations under which the service will be rendered, I see no disadvantage even to the Department. I therefore favor the passage of the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Both the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Clark] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] seem to think that this will bring in additional revenue. I do not think it is very clear to the Members just how that is to be brought about and how it is to be paid. I have been giving a little attention here to this, and do not understand it myself, and I think the bill ought to be explained, as it is an important matter, in that respect at least,

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Under existing law a special-delivery letter can not be given any favor or preference unless it bears a special-delivery stamp.

Mr. KEIFER. That we understand.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. That stamp is a peculiarly manufactured stamp, and many instances occur where individ-uals desiring to use the special delivery have not access to a post-office where the special-delivery stamps can be purchased, and under existing practices, whereby letter carriers and rural-delivery carriers sell stamps and have not the special-delivery stamps to sell to a patron, a patron not having a special-delivery stamp is put at the disadvantage of going to the office to The only propriety of some additional compensation is to cover the additional cost incident to the service in the delivery of the mail. Therefore, if in addition to the ordinary postage which is exacted by the statute there should be attached to the letter or package 10 cents' worth of stamps with the words "special delivery" or their equivalent written upon the envelope, the same revenue will be obtained by the Govern-

Mr. KEIFER. Who is to write the words "special delivery?" The sender?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The sender.

And put on the additional stamps?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. And put on the additional And I will say to the gentleman that if he fails to do it there is no loss to the Government, and the letter would then be treated as an ordinary letter.

Mr. KEIFER. This experiment with special delivery letters has been an expensive one?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. By no means. It has been a profit to the Government.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to inquire if the informa-tion the chairman of the Post-Office Committee now gives is from a communication from one of the Assistant Postmasters-General before the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It was not. It came in after the committee had adjourned, and there has been no meeting since.

Mr. STEENERSON. It came in after this bill had been reported?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendments and the amendments offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House with any extended remarks on this little bill. I am certain that it will not only be a great convenience to millions of people, but will at the same time bring a snug revenue into the Treasury.

I was asked to introduce the bill by one of my most valued constituents, Col. Frank W. Buffum, of Louisiana, Mo., a business man of large experience and of extensive and multifarious interests. The idea grew out of his own experience and observation. It may be interesting to state that Colonel Buffum is a nephew of the four Washburn brothers, three of whom sat together in this House as Representatives—one from Maine, one from Illinois, and one from Wisconsin. The fourth Washburn was subsequently a United States Senator from Minnesota and the Illinois Washburn was Secretary of State and minister to France.

I hereby incorporate a letter from a traveling salesman in Texas as a sample of numerous letters which I have received on the subject and which in itself is a sufficient argument to pass the bill:

TULSA, IND. T., February 3, 1907.

Hon. Champ Clark,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: The inclosed clipping, whether true or untrue, would certainly do two things—render valuable service to the public and increase the sale of stamps materially.

In the last ten years. I would have made use of at least $1 per month more stamps had this been possible. I am a traveling salesman and often telegraph when I would have written, but office being closed, could get no special-delivery stamp. It is urged that another stamp is needed, one something like a postage-due stamp could be made by letting the post-office, either where forwarded or received, place this on the letter beside the other stamp.

One hundred thousand traveling men will use $500,000 worth of stamps each year if this is done.

Yours, truly,

John L. Andrews,

Dallas, Tex.

JOHN L. ANDREWS, Dallas, Tex.

Here is the newspaper clipping to which my traveling friend refers:

WOULD USE ANY STAMPS—CONGRESSMAN CLARK OBJECTS TO SPECIAL-DELIVERY LIMIT.

WASHINGTON, February 1.

CHAMP CLARK wrote a letter to a Missouri politician touching political affairs, and to get quick delivery decided to send it by special delivery. He hunted all around for a special stamp, but, as it was after office hours, he couldn't find one. He then decided to change things by act of Congress and introduce a bill providing when additional stamps are required to transmit a letter or package containing first-class mail matter through mails there be attached to the envelope 10 cents' worth of ordinary stamps of any denomination, with the words "special delivery" written on the envelope or package, and that they be handled and delivered in all respects as though they bore the regulation "special-delivery" stamp.

I could furnish many letters of the same tenor, but this will

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOMESTEAD LAWS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21944) to amend section No. 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved lands in Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904, to restore to and confer upon certain persons the right to make entry under said act, and to amend existing law as to the sale of isolated tracts subject to entry under said act.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the substitute will be read instead of the original.

read instead of the original.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That all qualified entrymen who during the period beginning on the 28th day of April, 1904, and ending on the 28th day of June, 1904, made homestead entry in the State of Nebraska within the area affected by an act entitled "An act to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved public lands in Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904, shall be entitled to all the benefits of said act as if their entries had been made prior or subsequent to the above-mentioned dates, subject to all existing rights.

"Sec. 2. That the benefits of military service in the Army or Navy of the United States granted under the homestead laws shall apply to entries made under the aforesaid act approved April 28, 1904, and all homestead entries hereafter made within the territory described in the aforesaid act shall be subject to all the provisions thereof.

"Sec. 3. That within the territory described in said act approved April 28, 1904, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to order into market and sell, under the provisions of the laws providing for the sale of isolated or disconnected tracts or parcels of land, any isolated or disconnected tract not exceeding three quarter sections in area: Provided, That not more than three quarter sections shall be sold to any one person."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear some explanation of the matter; I confess that I do not understand it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not willing to let this bill pass without a chance to see it. It seems to contain some legislation outside of Nebraska.

Mr. KINKAID. No; not outside of my district. Mr. MANN. The section does it at least. F The section does it at least. For the present shall object.

Subsequently

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois has withdrawn his objection to the bill which I had up for consideration

The SPEAKER. Is there further objection to the considera-tion of the bill offered by the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Kinkaid, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FIXING THE LIMITATION APPLICABLE IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 25472.

The bill was read as follows

A bill (H. R. 25472) to fix the limitation applicable in certain cases A bill (H. R. 25472) to fix the limitation applicable in certain cases. Be it enacted, etc., That the limitation of the act approved April 27, 1904, entitled "An act to amend an act approved March 3, 1899, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in adding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, etc., and for other purposes," and the limitation of the acts of which it is amendatory shall be January 1, 1909.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like some explanation of the bill.
Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, in 1898 there was passed an act for reimbursing the States and Territories under certain circumstances on account of expenses connected with getting volunteer soldiers into the Army for the war with Spain. That act was amended in 1899, and there was further amendment in 1904, the principal object being to allow pay to officers and men, at the usual rates, for the period between the dates of gathering at the rendezvous and the muster in. All the States, I believe, but five have already, through their respective governors, received the allowances for the troops of those States, or have the matter in the process of settlement. The law provides that the fund paid shall not go to the State treasury or elsewhere, but only to the officers and men, the governor being the medium for the transmission of it. The State of Missouri, among others, has a claim that is not yet adjudicated. As presented, it is informal. Four other States have made no claim yet. All the others have made their claims, and they have been allowed and paid, or soon will be. Now, there is the limitation of January 1, 1906, for the presentation of these claims by the governor.

This bill provides that the limitation shall be January 1, 1909. It makes no other change in any of these acts, and its effect, if it becomes a law, will be simply to enable the volunteer soldiers of the Spanish war in those States where they have not yet received this money from the Government to get it. A failure to amend the law would be a denial to the volunteer officers and soldiers of a few States of the same benefits of the legislation which have already gone to many others having precisely the same rights and merits. The officers and men can not make the application. It must be made through the executive of the State or Territory. To my mind there can be no reasonable objection to this bill. Nobody can get any part of the money except the individual soldier and officer, and he can get no more than any other officer or soldier in proportion to his right—pay for the time he was at the place of rendezvous before muster into the service, at the same rate that soldiers from other States have already been paid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DE ARMOND, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TIME OF HOLDING CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT COURTS IN THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF IOWA.

Mr. HUBBARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 7793. I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to take up this bill of the Senate?

Mr. HUBBARD. There is a House bill which has already been passed upon by the Committee on the Judiciary

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill. The Cl formed a similar House bill has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary and is now on the Calendar, and the request of the gentleman is to discharge the committee from further consideration of the Senate bill and that it do pass.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair used the word "similar." Is the bill identical with the bill that was reported to the House? The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa will answer that question Mr. HUBBARD. The Senate bill is identical.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With this bill?

Mr. HUBBARD. This is merely a local bill. I will move to lay the House bill on the table,

Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate bill 7793-

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the bill is.

Mr. HUBBARD. It is merely a local bill. The SPEAKER. Let the Clerk read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

courts of the United States in and for the northern district of Iowa.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States in and for the northern district of Iowa shall be held in the several divisions of said district in each year as follows: In the Cedar Rapids division at Cedar Rapids, on the first Tuesday in April and the fourth Tuesday in September; in the eastern division at Dubuque, on the fourth Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in December; in the western division at Sloux City, on the fourth Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in October; in the central division at Fort Dodge, on the second Tuesday in June and the second Tuesday in November.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that this bill be temporarily laid aside until the original bill itself is procured from the Judiciary Committee, as the Clerk has read from the printed copy. By unanimous consent, when the bill arrives, the House will again recur to it.

Subsequently

The SPEAKER. Senate bill 7793, called up by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Hubbard], is now upon the Speaker's table, and if there be no objection, it will be considered.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Hubbard, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table. By unanimous consent, the similar House bill, H. R. 24281, was ordered to lie on the table.

NATIONAL CHILD LABOR COMMITTEE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 6364) to incorporate the National Child Labor Committee.

The conference report and statement were read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 6364) entitled "An act to incorporate the National Child Labor Committee," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same.

E. L. TAYLOR, Jr., SAMUEL W. SMITH, T. W. Sims, Managers on the part of the House.

JOHN C. SPOONER,
A. O. BACON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The House recedes from its amendment numbered 1, which was to add the words "and of the District of Columbia" after the words "United States" in line 3 on page 2. It is believed that this was unnecessary, as the section in which this amendment was made provides that the constitution or by-laws of the corporation shall not conflict with any laws of the United States.

The Senate recedes from the amendment of the House numbered 2, which struck out section 5 of the Senate bill and inserted in lieu thereof the regular form of the reservation by Congress of the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act.
E. L. TAYLOR, Jr.,

SAMUEL W. SMITH, T. W. SIMS, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I move the adoption of the report. The conference report was agreed to.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to send to the House of Representatives any information in his possession relative to the introduction of foreign laborers into the State of South Carolina by one E. J. Watson, together with a copy of his solicitor's legal opinion, if any be on file in said Department, as to whether said laborers were lawfully admitted to the United States, and a copy of any documents in his possession furnishing the grounds for said opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, what motion does the gentleman from Massachusetts make?

man from Massachusetts make?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. To discharge the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The motion is privileged, and I believe it is not debatable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman move that the resolution be passed by the House?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have made no such motion.

The motion of Mr. Gardner of Massachusetts was agreed to. The committee is discharged, and the reso-The SPEAKER. lution is before the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "a copy."
In line 7 strike out the words "of" and "solicitors legal."
In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "if any be on file in said Dertment."

In lines 9 and 10 strike out the words "a copy of any document in s possession furnishing."

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question on the resolution and the amendments to its final passage

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the previous question is ordered, there will be twenty minutes debate on a side?
The SPEAKER. There will. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question on the resolution and amendments to a final vote.

The question was taken; and the previous question was

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield.
Mr. FINLEY. The purpose of the resolution is simply to bring whatever information there is in the Department of Commerce and Labor before the House.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The purpose is clear, if the gentleman will read the resolution.

Mr. FINLEY. There was so much confusion in the House I couldn't hear the reading of the resolution very well.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am about to explain the whole matter. Mr. Speaker, the legislature of South Carolina in 1904 created a position which they called the "commissioner of immigration." This commissioner of immigration had the duty assigned to him of encouraging immigration into that State-immigration from certain specified nations in the north of Europe. The State of South Carolina appropriated $2,000 to pay the expenses of the importation of those immigrants.

An association—and it does not appear whether it was the Cotton Manufacturers' Association or the South Carolina Immigration Association—but at all events an association of private parties raised $30,000, which they placed in the hands of Commissioner Watson for the purpose of bringing alien laborers into the United States under a quasi contract.

Now, the South Carolina law especially said that Commissioner Watson might become the agent of any private individuals or any association, provided they paid all the bills. Whereupon Mr. Watson goes abroad with the $30,000 or more contributed by the association, establishes agents in six cities of Europe, collects together a body of 500 laborers, charters a special vessel from the North German Lloyd, and lands them last November in Charleston, S. C. The question at once arises whether they are admissible under our contract-labor laws, not only whether they are admissible, but whether the second shipload, which arrived last week, are admissible. Now, if this resolution as amended passes, we shall have all the facts before the House together with the Commissioner of Commerce and Labor's opinion as to whether these men were lawfully admitted or not. Contrary to the generally received opinion, Secretary Straus has rendered no decision that these men were lawfully admitted to the United States. No decision has been rendered by any man, woman, or child in the United States that these alleged contract laborers were lawfully admitted to the United States.

The Secretary has published, to be sure, decision No. 111, a very intelligent opinion of the Solicitor of his Department, Mr. Earl; but the question submitted to Mr. Earl and by him decided was not whether or not these laborers were lawfully admitted. The question submitted to Mr. Earl was as to whether Watson's activities were illegal; in other words, as to whether he had violated the contract-labor law.

Now, Mr. Earl's decision exonerates Commissioner Watson, but the opinion distinctly indicates that if the question had only been put in another form, if the question asked had been as to whether these immigrants were lawfully admitted, the answer would have been a very different one.

Now, there is the question that we want to get at. Obviously, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor believes that these were lawfully admitted, although he does not say so. He would have debarred them if he had not thought them entitled to land. We want to find out just why he thought so, because as clearly as any layman can read the law they were distinctly forbidden admission to the United States. We should like to hear what the reasons are on which their entry was based, in order that the law may be changed should Congress deem it necessary.

Many careful men believe that the present law is quite suffi-Many careful men believe that the pending bill to regulate immigration manifestly strengthens our contract-labor law. I am one of those; but we can not possibly tell until we know why these men were admitted whether the proposed legislation is sufficient or not.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman has any suspicions as to any irregularities which were practiced by Mr. Watson over there?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am very pleased to say that I have not; none whatever. The matter was done in the most aboveboard fashion by Commissioner Watson, in continual consultation with the Department of Commerce and Labor. dispute the validity of the decision, if any there be, by which those men were admitted.

Mr. DRISCOLL. From what countries did they come?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Belgium largely, I believe. I think there were stations in England, in Scotland, in Holland, in Belgium, in Germany, and in Denmark. I understand, however, the bulk of them came from Belgium. Twenty-two of them were returned within a month.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I should like to ask first how much time I have left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has eleven minutes remain-

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, as I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts a moment ago, he excuses the commissioner of agriculture of the State of South Carolina from any underhanded procedure?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Absolutely. It has been aboveboard from one end to the other.

Mr. LEVER, One other question. That being true, then if there has been violation of the labor contract law, it is up to the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Secretary of that Department, as a violator of that law. Is that true?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor has interpreted the law, very likely on perfectly sufficient grounds, but not grounds that seem sufficient to me. I think this House is entitled to ask on what grounds he has arrived at his determination. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Yes; and I would like to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that so far as we are concerned, we have no objection to a thorough investigation of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit one other interruption. I understand him to charge that there has been a violation of the immigration laws. Then. if there has been, it became of course the duty of the Department of Justice to prosecute the people who did violate them. Has there been any prosecution or any initiation of any prose-

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Mississippi please say that again and say it a little more slowly?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has there been any prosecution undertaken by the Department of Commerce and Labor or the Department of Justice?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I know of none. Does the gentleman from Mississippi know of any?
Mr. WILLIAMS. "The gentleman from Mississippi" does

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall continue my address.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, the gentleman from Massachusetts is attacking the Administration for not executing the law. That is the proposition, is it?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Mississippi has finished putting words into the mouth of "the gentleman from Massachusetts" "the gentleman from Massachusetts" begs his permission to continue his own address.

Mr. WILLIAMS. "The gentleman from Mississippi" is perfectly willing and delighted to have the gentleman from Massachusetts proceed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, go ahead.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The country cares very little whether Commissioner Watson obeys the law; but it cares a great deal as to whether or not the contract-labor law has been violated and whether or not contract laborers are being admitted contrary to the laws of the United States. I think it is quite possible, I will say in answer to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from South Capalina Live Laws 1 that the Capalina Live Laws 1 South Carolina [Mr. Lever], that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor will reply that the admission of these immigrants is permitted under that clause in the law which admits skilled labor if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in the United States. I do not understand that the facts will bear out the contention which I heard made in the Senate only yester-day as to the labor situation in South Carolina; but it may be that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor thinks that the presentation of the case made by the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from South Carolina is a correct one. If such is the Secretary's view, Mr. Speaker, it simply shows that we must amend our contract-labor law in order to safeguard that clause under which skilled labor may be admitted into the United States if labor of like character unemployed can not here be

I feel some hesitancy in trying to compress Mr. Eari's decision into a few lines, especially as its ingenuity makes the document worthy of most careful perusal.

Nevertheless, I hope that the short statement I will make will do Mr. Earl no injustice. As the statute is penal, he holds that none are guilty under it unless the letter and spirit are transgressed; that a State is not a "person" within the meaning of the contract-labor law, because evidence can be brought forward tending to show that Congress intended to control State action in securing immigration; that section 6 of the act of March 3, 1903, permits States to advertise in foreign countries the inducements they offer for immigration; that this is the equivalent to granting them permission to "offer inducements or make promises to foreign laborers by advertisements; that Congress has thus distinctly authorized States "to encourage the immigration of foreign laborers (sic);" that therefore the proviso in section 6 should be held to have applied also to section 4, which forbids the prepayment of the fare of contract laborers; and therefore that the activities of the agent of the State of South Carolina were lawful.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. How much more time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the gen-

Mr. ELLERBE. Mr. speaker, I want to know it the gentleman will answer one more question?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I will answer the question of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. ELLERBE. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he believes the contract-labor law has been violated by the commissioner of agriculture of South Carolina, Mr.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The decision of the Secretary is that Commissioner Watson did not violate it. I believe the law has been violated in the admission of these immigrants, which is a very different proposition. There are three propositions. First, was Commissioner Watson liable? Second, were the steamships liable? Both of those are penal questions. tions. Third, were the immigrants lawfully admitted? Now, to decide the last question the statute need not be construed in the same spirit that would be requisite in deciding the other

Mr. ELLERBE. Let me ask the gentleman this: Does he mean to state that the contract-labor law was violated by Commissioner Watson?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I have already answered the gentleman's question. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor said it was not. I have no opinion to offer about it further than that which I have already indicated.

Mr. ELLERBE. I will ask the gentleman if he means to state there is any evidence that any contract was made before they landed at Charleston?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Oh, unquestionably there was a contract in the meaning of the law, namely, an agreement, parol or special, expressed or implied. If I pay the passage of 500 laborers to the United States; if I have a contract with the Belgian Government to return them to their homes on demand; if I take money from manufacturers and various other people to supply them with laborers, I believe any court on earth would hold that those acts constituted an agreement, parol or special, expressed or implied.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will my colleague allow me about a minute and a half?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. With pleasure; as much time as the gentleman wishes. How much shall I yield? I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will yield back what I do not use. Mr. Speaker, I think this resolution ought to pass. Certainly I disagree with my colleague on the committee as to what the report will be. I prefer to follow the opinion of the distinguished Massachusetts lawyer who wrote this opinion, decision No. 111, Mr. Earl, but I have no hesitancy in agree-ing with my colleague that to decide these mooted questions there ought to be the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and then, with the information before us, if there is any question as to the right of a State of this Union to bring in desirable immigrants to its own borders at its own expense, I think this House will resolve that doubt.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to know whether they have any facts or information of any sort which lead them to believe that something is wrong, or whether this is a fishing excursion?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, answering both questions, I agree with my colleague [Mr. Gardner] that Commissioner Watson, of South Carolina, acted in the most honorable and straightforward manner. There is nothing concealed. We are simply getting the opinion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor as to the grounds on which he acted, and the further information as to whether these 414-odd people are lawfully in the United States, and if they are not, and future actions of that kind can not be taken, I think the House ought to know it. There is nothing concealed and nothing wrong. I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes remaining, which he reserves.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, speaking for myself I wish to say I have no objection to the passage of this resolution. think if there has been any violation of law that Congress and the people of this country are entitled to know. I want to say further that there can be no question that the State of South Carolina has acted in her sovereign capacity, and her commissioner of agriculture and immigration, E. J. Watson, has acted openly and aboveboard. This matter has been gone about in a direct way, and the immigration law of South Carolina, defining the class of immigrants, is in my judgment one of the very best laws that can be passed. When people come to this country, I am one of those who believe that they should be of a class and character qualified and fitted and equipped to become first-class American citizens.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman refer to this clause which says that the immigrants shall be confined to white citizens of the United States and citizens of Ireland,

Mr. FINLEY. I want to say to the gentleman that the part of the law that limits the Commissioner to white immigrants is the very best part of it, and is one that should be in all immigration laws in this country.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. And confines it to other foreigners of Saxon origin?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes; we are of Saxon origin. Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman what he means by "Saxon origin?"

Mr. FINLEY. I think it includes the people of northern Europe to a very general extent.

But, Mr. Speaker, it is said that twenty-three of these people were sent back. I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts did not mean to intimate that they were sent back by any officer of the law or anything of that sort.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It was because they were dissatisfied with conditions in South Carolina.

Mr. FINLEY. They were very foolish people, very foolish to be dissatisfied. But they came here at the solicitation of Commissioner Watson who simply informed them that there was labor and work in South Carolina for each and every one of them who would come; and as to what money he received from private sources, I am not informed and I do not know, but I do say that if the cotton-mill corporations in South Carolina, about which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] speaks with a good deal of feeling, if they did contribute, they have done no more than the great transcontinental railroads of this country have been doing for the past forty years directly or indirectly. Has there been any complaint about this by the gentleman from Massachusetts or anybody else? Has there been offered any resolution concerning them?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman asking me a question?

Mr. FINLEY. No; I do not think the gentleman would answer it if I did about that matter.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I did not understand the

Mr. FINLEY. So, Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that Commissioner Watson was able to do financially and did all he promised to do. At any rate, this same practice has been followed time and again by the transcontinental railroads and owners of vast tracts of land in the great Northwest. Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, certainly.
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman state that the transcontinental railroads have been importing immi-

Mr. FINLEY. No more than the cotton-mill corporations of South Carolina have, but equally as much.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman state a single instance?

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that he knows as well as I do that they advertise all over Europe for immigrants, and when they come here they are taken care of.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It is a penal offense to advertise for immigrants in Europe.

Mr. FINLEY. Well, it is done indirectly. The cotton-mill corporations in South Carolina did not do it directly. In the cases mentioned they advertise their lands and the desirability of a place for immigrants to come to. Now, I want to say this further, that if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gard-NERl will exert himself with equal interest and ability and bring into this House and pass through the House an immigration bill with an educational clause in it, I think we will agree with him

Mr. FITZGERALD. We dissent from that, if the gentleman please, so that there may be no mistake about it.

Mr. FINLEY. When I say "we" I mean myself, of course. I would not be egotistical enough to include the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

When the gentleman says "over here" Mr. FITZGERALD. he is attempting to indicate this side of the House. Therefore I beg to differ with him.

Mr. FINLEY. I believe a majority of the Democrats over here are in favor of that proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I disagree with the gentleman on that. FINLEY. That is a matter about which we can disagree. So, Mr. Speaker, I will join the gentleman from Massachusetts and do what I can to help along the passage of that law; and why such a law has not been passed here, doubtless he knows better than I do.

Mr. WEBB. Can I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.
Mr. WEBB. Coming back to the passengers who came over on the vessel Whittekind, was the gentleman advised as to the character or fitness of those immigrants?

Mr. FINLEY. I do not know, but I am informed that they are of the highest class of immigrants.

Mr. WEBB. One more question. Is it not your understanding and information that your Commissioner Watson kept in constant touch and communication with the immigration department here in Washington?

Mr. FINLEY. There is no doubt about that. that was done in the matter was after full consultation with the Department of Commerce and Labor; and he was acting openly, as I stated before. I want to say as to unrestricted and unlimited immigration, I am opposed to it as much as anybody. The gentleman from Massachusetts has found something that will, perhaps, distract the attention of the country from the fact that the immigration bill, about which he was so anxious last session, is as yet not enacted into law. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want to ask him a question. Independent of the merits of this discussion, are you opposed to the facts called for being brought

Mr. FINLEY. I stated that I wanted the facts. I think the resolution is largely a matter of buncombe, however:

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would not the debate better be held off until the facts come?

Mr. FINLEY. We might just as well have it now. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama. Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the resolution of my friend from Massachusetts. I want light thrown on this situation. I am glad to see the gentleman from Massachusetts indict the present Administration on the question of the restriction of immigration. I have been in favor of restricting immigration for many years, for protecting the American standard, for protecting the American workman; and it is only a few years ago that the President of the United States sent in a message here in favor of restricting immigration. Those who are informed well know that, although openly the President of the United States favored the restriction of immigration, when the crucial time came in the contest, when the President's hand was needed to aid in passing a bill through this House, adopting an educational test and fairly restricting immigration coming into this country, and to protect the American workmen from the slum labor of Europe, the President's hands did not come to the relief of those who wanted that kind of a bill. And to-day we are about to go to the country with a bill, an Administration bill, not a restriction bill, with the aid and assistance of the President of the United States. [Applause.1

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Can the gentleman inform the House could the President of the United States under his constitutional limitations have gone further than he did favoring the bill which was advocated last session by himself and the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I will inform the gentleman. I do not believe the President of the United States is in the habit of keeping within his constitutional limitations. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] He knows, I will say, that when the crucial test came last spring there was not a man in this House who did not know that the attitude of the President would make or defeat that measure, and those who desired a restrictive measure were looking to him for a message to this House in favor of such a measure, and they failed to get it. It is well known, too, throughout the country generally that the hand of the President was removed, and that the restrictive features of that bill were not put in it.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman yield for inst one second?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me finish; I have only five minutes. Mr. BENNET of New York. I simply say, as one who was opposed to restriction and who signed a minority report, that I never felt the time when the President's hand was removed either in this House or at the White House, but that the President of the United States was absolutely for it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was the impression I had, and that was the impression the country had. Now, so far as these people who are coming into South Carolina are concerned, they are from northern Europe. They are the kind of people we want, and the people that come into the northern ports generally are from the slums of southern Europe, and no protection is made against them. But I think it is wise to pass this resolution. I do not know whether the Administration has violated the law—the law as it stands on the statute book for the protection of American labor from the slum labor of Europe—and I am in favor of putting that question up to the Administration. If the Administration has violated the law for South Carolina, it has probably violated the law for Boston and New York and other ports. I say to the gentleman that I am here in favor of putting the question right back to this Administration and let them answer whether they have been violating the restrictive immigration laws of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have we re-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes remain-

Mr. FINLEY. I yield five minutes of that time to my colleague [Mr. Lever].

Mr. Lever]. Mr. Speaker, as I see it, there is only one question involved in this resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and that is a question of getting information before this House.

As far as I am concerned, and I think as far as the delega-tion from South Carolina is concerned, there is absolutely no I was glad to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] say that the commissioner of agriculture, immigration, and commerce of South Carolina, Mr. Watson, had made his arrangements to bring these immigrants to South Carolina in an open-handed and aboveboard way. That is the way we do things in South Carolina. It seems to me that if there has been a breach of the law in this case that breach must rest upon the present Administration, which is charged with the enforcement of the law. If there has been a violation of the law, such violation comes as the result of the action of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor, in Washington, and not from anything done by the secretary of agriculture, immigration, and commerce of South Carolina.

But in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there has been no violation the law. This resolution seeks to settle that question. We of the law. are quite willing to have it settled. It means a great deal to the people of the South to have it settled, and as far as we are concerned we are not opposing it, nor shall we oppose it. I hope, therefore, the resolution will pass. I know Mr. Watson personally. He happens to be a constituent of mine, and I know him to be a cautious, level-headed, sensible man, who I know is too high-minded and patriotic to go out of his way to violate the I repeat, if there has been a violation of the law that violation rests upon the present Administration. I have no objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to add, as a part of his remarks, that the people of the South, as I understand our position, want immigration, but they want it from the desirable classes, from northern Europe mainly.

Mr. LEVER. Of course, and the law of South Carolina fully

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. We do not want another race problem on our hands.

Mr. LEVER. Certainly not. One is sufficient. Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I interject that remark simply for the purpose of emphasizing and making clear our position in the matter of immigration as I understand it.

Mr. LEVER. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for his suggestion. I thoroughly agree with him. The people of South Carolina have provided in their law that the slums of Europe shall not be dumped upon them, and I feel sure that the people of South Carolina are greatly in favor of the educational test in the immigration bill, which I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] reported last year, and which seeks to stem the overwhelming tide of undesirable foreign immigration.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. What does the gentleman refer to when he speaks of the slums of Europe?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the law of South Carolina is plain upon that proposition. and that it confines its immigration operations to the countries of northern Europe.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Italy and Russia are admitted under your law.

Mr. LEVER. The law of South Carolina confines immigra-tion to people of Anglo-Saxon origin from the northern part of Europe. Certainly that has been the practical operation of the law

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. That is what I wanted to arrive at. Your State does not approve of any other kind?
Mr. LEVER. The law speaks for itself.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the District of Columbia appropriation bill that has passed the Senate with Senate amendments be taken from the Speaker's table; that the House disagree to all of the amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. GILLETT, Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, and Mr. BurlePOST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 25483, the post-office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Currier in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the bill which the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads presents for the consideration of the House is, I believe, the largest in aggregate in money appropriated ever before recommended by a single bill. The total footings of the bill carry $209,416,802, which is $17,720,803 in excess of the appropriation for the current year. Members are familiar with the growth of the postal service, which has in late years, by reason of the establishment of rural delivery, advanced more rapidly than formerly, and yet, while each year shows a gradual increase in expenditure, strangely enough the expenditure for the service for each of the last several years has been equaled, if not surpassed, by the receipts of the preceding year, so that we are virtually about one year behind as between actual expenditures and receipts.

The so-called "deficiency," or the difference between the re-ceipts and expenditures, has demonstrated that notwithstanding the advance made in the expenditure for rural delivery service this item of deficiency, or the difference between receipts and expenditures as relates to the total appropriations, has been decreasing. The so-called "deficiency" for the fiscal year 1905 was a little over fourteen and one-half million dollars, and for the fiscal year ending June 30 last a little over ten and one-half million dollars

The growth of the receipts of the service this last year showed a greater per cent of increase than the average per cent of receipts which prevailed for the preceding ten years. Last year the per cent of increase in receipts was 9.9 per cent, approximately 10 per cent increase. Assuming, therefore, that the same per cent of increase will probably prevail during the current fiscal year, the total increase as compared with the appropria-tion for the current year would show a less deficiency than prevalled during the preceding fiscal year of 1906; and if we add, for the purpose of estimate solely, an additional 10 per cent for the receipts for the fiscal year 1908, assuming that the total expenditure for 1908 would equal the total appropriations carried by this measure, the so-called "deficiency" for the fiscal year 1908 would be $6,218,135.

I mention these facts simply to call the attention of the House to the growth of receipts of the service as compared with the growth of expenditures for the service, and, as matter of fact, there is a decreasing per cent of the so-called "deficiency."

Let me say in passing just a word with reference to the socalled "deficiency." I am of the opinion that in numbers of cases in the past ten or fifteen years many needed facilities, many worthy expenditures, have been withheld because of the so-called "economy" which ought to have prevailed with Congress, occasioned by the presumed deficiency in the revenue. last year, following the recommendations of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Congress adopted a provision directing each of the various Departments and governmental establishments having headquarters in Washington to maintain for a period of six months, ending with December 31, 1906, a record which would show the amount in dollars and cents of what the appropriation would be if appropriation were made to cover postage for penalty mail. The reports of various establishments have been filed with the House aggregating a total for the six months' period of $2,285,427.

The several reports, tabulated for convenience of reference, are as follows:

That was only for a period of six months. Assuming therefore that the same amount of penalty mail would have entered the Washington post-office for the entire year, it would have amounted to a little under $5,000,000 postage which would have been required to cover the charge for penalty mail which the Post-Office Department rendered the Government for which it now receives no credit. When you take into account the fact that the thousands of post-offices throughout the country and the thousands of internal-revenue agents and customs officers the various Federal employees entitled to the privilege of official penalty mail, have not been taken into account in connection with this data, it is quite reasonable to assume that if the postal service secured even a book credit for the service which it renders the Government in the carriage of penalty mail, then the amount of postage which would be necessary to cover that amount would be vastly more than the $5,000,000 which we have demonstrated would emanate from Washington City

Even then we have not completed the elements of this charge. No account has yet been made of the franking privilege of the officials of the Government, and if it were possible to aggregate the entire charge which falls upon the postal service incident to the service which it renders for franking and penalty privileges, the amount which that credit would make would, in my judgment, reach much more than twice, possibly more than three times, the amount which has been evidenced by the record from Washington. I make no criticism, Mr. Chairman, of either the penalty privilege or the franking privilege. They are very proper privileges, and essential, in my judgment, to the proper administration of the service of the Government; but I believe that the Post-Office Department should in some way enjoy a credit of record to indicate the amount of labor which it renders these various officials of the Government for which it receives no credit.

Notwithstanding we have no record which is definite and accurate, I think we have demonstrated sufficiently, Mr. Chairman, that the so-called "deficit" is purely artificial and ought no longer to operate to establish a theory that we are extravagant, or that we should curtail the necessary facilities of the service and not make appropriations which we believe are essential to a complete and efficient administration of the service. So your committee has in the preparation of this bill been guided by what is believed to be the necessities of the service in order to render to the mail-using public every facility, under proper economic pay and use, that will be essential to a complete, speedy, and proper collection and distribution of the mail. Without going into the details, permit me to say that the amounts recommended in this bill for increased number of employees in the various branches of the service, the increased sum of money necessary for the payment of the various characters of work which falls upon the service, have been made liberally and fully with a view that there shall be no impairment whatever of the service in the fiscal year 1908.

In addition to our recommendation for the regular service of the postal system, your committee has made some recommendations for increases of salaries of the various employees of the There are four characters of employees of the service, which may, for easy recollection, be designated as clerks in the post-offices, city carriers, railway mail clerks, and rural delivery If the number of employees for the new service recommended by this bill should be approved by Congress, then there will be authority of law, with ample provision of money, to permit of the employment during the fiscal year 1908 of 28,728 clerks, 25,530 city letter carriers, 15,222 railway mail clerks, and 42,646 rural carriers.

We have, in connection with the recommendation for these various employees, submitted a scheme of promotion for all of these employees, and that scheme of promotion, resulting in increases of salaries of all of those employees, is conditioned upon two elements, one an efficiency record, or a merit record, and the other upon at least one year's continuous service in one So far as the clerks and carriers are concerned, the committee believes that opportunity ought to be given both clerks and carriers to maintain an equal standard of efficiency in the service. Generally throughout European countries the carrier service is looked upon entirely as a messenger servicesomething a little above an ordinary laborer—who is required to know but little more than the names of the patrons of his route and to have little more intelligence than sufficient to decipher the addresses. We are of the opinion that under American institutions, particularly in the governmental service, we ought to encourage a higher standard of efficiency, and our letter carriers are of a higher standard to-day than the ordinary laborer and maintain in their individual capacity a higher degree of intelligence than in the ordinary messenger service. We have, therefore, in our suggestions for promotions recommended a classification of both carriers and clerks which is uniform so far as they are concerned, so that they have uniform grades running from $600 a year to $1,100 a year, and with uniform privileges of advancement, with equal eligibility for promotion into higher grades of the service, with equal privileges for transfer from one employment to the other; so that if a clerk by reason of confinement in the office needs outdoor experience, or a carrier by reason of exposure in the outdoor service needs indoor employment, they will be permitted to transfer from one grade to the corresponding grade of the other service without loss of any of their privileges. And then, under the scheme, after entrance at the lowest, or $600, grade, they advance automatically after one year's service in each grade, conditioned upon an efficiency record of proper standard, to the next higher grade until they have reached the highest grade authorized by law.

And the committee suggests by its recommendation that the general character of the work in offices of larger or smaller gross receipts ought to have some consideration, and therefore suggests that $900 be the highest compensation to which the automatic advancement of clerks and carriers will take them in all offices where the gross receipts are less than $50,000, and where the gross receipts are in excess of $50,000 and less than $200,000 then to the grade of $1,000, and in all offices where the gross receipts are in excess of $200,000 the arbitrary advancement is to $1,100. So far as clerks are concerned, the $1,200 grade is still retained by the law. Members will recall that in the grade of $1,200 compensation the clerks are engaged upon the more important duties of the office.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. In just a moment, when I have concluded this. The distributing clerk is a clerk of $1,200 grade, requiring the very highest order of intelligence, and the service in the grade of $1,200, so far as the clerks are concerned, is retained and a provision of money is made for the increase of 50 per cent of the $1,100 men to the $1,200 grade.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Why they put that amount $50,000? In a post-office where the receipts amount to $40,000 they make that a first-class postoffice, and does not the gentleman think that that amount should be $40,000 in which they shall receive the increased amount of salary-both the clerk and the carrier, too?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Answering the second question of the gentleman first, I will say that I do not think it ought to be made $40,000 as the dividing ine. To answer his first question last, I will explain why we made it $50,000 instead of $40,000. Forty thousand dollars gross receipts is now the di-There are, viding line between a first and second class office. however, many offices throughout the country located in very small communities where by reason of some one or possibly two local industries which purchase large quantities of stamps advance the office from the second to the first class.

The committee believe that in those small communities where the gross receipts were in excess of $40,000 and under $50,000 the general standard of compensation in civil life outside of the Federal service would be lower than the standard which would be recommended if we made $40,000 the dividing line, and that the size of the town in connection with the gross receipts of the office ought to a certain degree at least be considered in making up that standard of compensation. For example, there are a few offices in communities of scarcely more than 1,500 population where, by reason of the location in such communities of some concern which does a very large mail-order business and purchases a large amount of stamps, the receipts of the office, governed by the sale of stamps, makes the office a first-class office above $40,000 gross receipts, and to fix a standard of pay for clerks in that office on a basis of a first-class office above $50,000 would be unfair because it would give them a higher standard of compensation than maintained in the other lines of industry of that small community. So far as the carriers are concerned, their employment is not determined by the gross receipts, but by the population, by reason of its distribution and whether it is congested or scattered, and therefore often where there are large gross receipts in a small community, as I have explained, a limited number of carriers would be needed because of the limited population, and the committee therefore believes that substantial justice would be done by determining the highest grade of salaries for clerks and carriers under the automatic scale of promotion by fixing $50,000 gross receipts as the line of demarcation rather than $40,000.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HUGHES. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do.

According to your own statement, then, you Mr. HUGHES. have admitted that in a few cases this would work a hard-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No, sir; I have made no such admission

Mr. HUGHES. And in the general case it will work hardship by not putting this amount at $40,000 instead of $50,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I specifically disclaim that it works any hardship anywhere.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, I can inform the gentleman and will show at the proper time that it does work a hardship, and I have a case in mind where the town has 20,000 inhabitants and the receipts of the office are about $48,000. According to this paragraph in the bill those clerks will be cut out of being advanced to the one grade, which I do not think should be done, and I think that amount should be changed from $50,000 to $40,000 in accordance with the rule of the Post-Office Department changing a second-class office to a first-class office.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The weak spot in the gen-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The weak spot in the gentleman's argument is that he is thinking of the highest grade in the office, while I am speaking of the grade to which the automatic promotion will carry the employee.

Mr. STERLING. May I ask the gentleman a question?
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Certainly.
Mr. STERLING. I understood the gentleman to say that the twelve-hundred-dollar salary for clerks was retained, or that the grade of twelve hundred dollars was retained. Is that limited by the same rule that you limit the salary of the carriers in regard to the receipts of the office, making $50,000 gross receipts the dividing line?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It is not. The grades for clerks run from $600 to $1,200 in offices of the first and second class. So that it is possible to pay a clerk in an office of the second class $1,200. However, the committee so fixes the scale of arbitrary promotion that no clerk or carrier can advance by the arbitrary promotion beyond $900 in offices where the gross receipts are less than $50,000, nor beyond a thousand dollars where the gross receipts are in excess of $50,000 and less than $200,000, nor beyond $1,100 in offices where the gross receipts are in excess of $200,000. It says, however, that the salaries in those respective offices, divided by the fifty thousand and two hundred thousand dollars gross receipts, shall not exceed those amounts, except where unusual conditions prevail. the provision exactly, it says:

That the salary of clerks in second-class offices, except in localities where unusual conditions exist, shall not exceed $1,000.

The reason for that is this:

The rule now is that a thousand dollars is the limit which a clerk in the second class can be paid. There is not to-day a single clerk employed in any second-class office in the United States at a higher grade than a thousand dollars. But we think there may be instances, and particularly in newly developed communities, like the creation of a large community by the discovery of minerals, where the office advances pretty rapidly, and the conditions may exist where they can not get proper employment at that amount, and that exception is made to meet those conditions. But the duty of the Department will be to ascertain and determine the specific fact that unusual conditions do exist. So this recommendation does not demote anybody. It does not provide any lower compensation than now prevails in any office. It does provide for automatic, direct annual promotion each year of $100, conditioned only upon two one a year's service and the other a proper standard

Mr. STERLING. Then there might be cases where it would

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. But we have provided, Mr. Chairman, that both as to clerks and carriers they should be eligible for promotion from the highest grade in their respective offices to the designated places in the service. To illustrate: You take an office of $50,000 gross receipts and less, or a second-class office where the gross receipts are less than $40,000 annually, and there is not to-day, and there never has been, a clerk employed in one of those offices at a higher compensation The very nature of the business, the character of the receipts, the size of the community, the freedom of the employment of efficient employees, has by natural laws fixed a reasonable standard of compensation in those particular communities, and those offices are now receiving those same grades of pay. But in order to give eligibility to both clerks and carriers for advancement into the higher grades of those offices, assistant superintendents or superintendents or any of the designated positions, we make specific provision that they shall be eligible to the higher grades in their respective offices.

Mr. STERLING. There are cases now, are there not, where they are getting more than a thousand dollars, and where the gross receipts of the office are between $40,000 and $50,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Getting more than a thousand dollars

Mr. STERLING.

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Can the gentleman name one?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know. Are there not some? Mr. HUGHES. I can answer the gentleman's question and Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I thought the gentleman said under $40,000.

Mr. STERLING. Between $40,000 and $50,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There are some instances of that kind.

Mr. STERLING. Under the provisions of this law the clerks in offices of between $40,000 and $50,000 in gross receipts can not be promoted beyond a thousand dollars.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The grade is held specific, and automatic promotion is not provided.

Mr. STERLING. They may be promoted to a salary as large as $1,200?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. They can be promoted to the designated positions above $1,200.

yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. AMES. I would like to ask the gentleman if it was not a rule of the Department that fixed the salaries of clerks and carriers, and I would like to ask him if he knows of any other instance in the service of the Government where the rate of compensation is fixed on receipts and not on the labor and faithful service?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Postmasters' salaries are all based on receipts.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have answered your ques-

Mr. AMES. In that particular case. But does the gentleman think that in this case receipts should be the criterion for recompense rather than service?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do.
Mr. AMES. I would like to ask the gentleman one more question: Following up that reason, should not the rural freedelivery carriers have compensation only according to the re-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; because he is obliged to furnish the horse and wagon and maintain the equipment and be at the expense for repairs, the feed of the horse, and many other things.

Mr. GRAHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman to give me and the committee some little information as to the charge made in the public prints that under a clause in the bill permitting clerks to be promoted there is a clause in regard to discipline that would enable politics to enter into the thing, that a man who was efficient and active in politics that the postmaster might recommend his promotion, or if he was not active in politics that the postmaster would refrain from approving the recommendation increasing his salary? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania had been as careful in reading the bill as he has been in reading the newspapers

Mr. GRAHAM. He had no opportunity to read the bill, as it was only presented this morning.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, it has been in print for very many days

Mr. GRAHAM. I have to read the newspapers, and I am not always able to read the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am busy with Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will excuse me from undertaking to run down and explain all the hundreds and thousands of rumors based upon nothing, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as well as others, undoubtedly read in the newspapers. There is no basis of truth whatever for that general charge the gentleman refers to.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am satisfied, so far as the gentleman is concerned

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Not only is there no truth in it, but every provision recommended by the committee is against that very condition.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am very glad to have that explanation. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I want to say to my friend from Pennsylvania, along with other gentlemen who are much disturbed, as I have found by numerous inquiries made to me in person about the things in the newspapers, that neither the gentlemen nor the representatives of the papers have made any investigation of the matter.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he will agree to amend this bill and reduce these gross receipts of the office from $50,000 to $40,000, if there can be inserted in the bill that it should not apply to towns where the patrons of the office that cover, say, in population, 10,000 and over? That would seem to cover the most of them.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I see the general scope of the gentleman's question, and in the interest of expedition I suggest that he let me answer—not to shut him off peremptorily. The difficulty in legislation for a service of this character, where every community of the country, big and little, is more or less affected, grows out of the disposition, and the inclination to groups our work by what cognize in our work by the country. gauge our work by what occurs in our particular district; and I have no doubt but what the gentleman from West Virginia is prompted in this suggestion by some condition which exists in some community or locality in his Congressional district. But, Mr. Chairman, when you come to legislate for the entire country, particularly when you want to fix some general statute which shall become permanent and operative along a general line on a fair basis, we find that it is utterly impossible to circumscribe ourselves by local conditions. I have no doubt we could frame a measure for mail privileges on the basis of each of the Congressional districts represented in this House, and when you have done this there would be found some particular community that lies in that district which some Member might claim was unjustly affected. Therefore, we can not, Mr. Chair-man, prepare a statute measured only by the local interests which are brought to our attention. And the committee has been impelled in the study of this subject and in the recommendations which it makes by the general situation throughout the country, and not by one or two specific localities.

It therefore brings into this House for its action a general scheme of promotion of the more than 100,000 employees of the service, creating an expenditure from the National Treasury in the next year alone of almost $9,000,000, practically 50 per cent increase of the postal service recommended for the next fiscal year, and if we are to be persuaded and controlled by every little incident that is called to our attention from our own communities the total amount would probably be multiplied

We have taken this great body of clerks out of the uncertainty under which they have rested their entire service, out of the chaotic condition that always prevails under the discretionary authority lodged in some official, and propose to give them a permanent constant statute classifying them in a body for their entire service. They will have full knowledge that they will advance step by step as long as they maintain a proper standard of efficiency. We give to each equal eligibility, equal opportunity, so that a man may start with a $600 position and advance to the blacket state. vance to the highest salarled position in his office. When your committee has done that, when it has recognized the just classification, when it has endeavored to fix the compensation at a proper standard, I think this House is not going to overthrow that recommendation and saddle upon the Treasury more or less expenditure because there may be here and there some community where some employees prompt some Member of the House to urge higher salaries for their benefit.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will.

Mr. HINSHAW. Have you any information at hand showing approximately the number of such clerks in cities having receipts of from ten to fifty thousand dollars? It is not large,

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; I do not think it is.
Mr. HINSHAW. The bill provides that carriers in cities where the gross receipts shall be less than $50,000 may be promoted until they receive $900 a year, and in cities where the gross receipts are $50,000 and not in excess of $200,000 that they may be promoted until they receive $1,000. Now, the carriers in those two kinds of cities work equally hard, they have the same number of hours a day. Does the gentleman believe that that is just?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I believe that is a just provision. I will ask the gentleman if that was called to his attention by some carrier in his district?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; by a postmaster. Mr. GREENE. In lines 13 and following that, on the sixth page, there is a provision that letter carriers employed in cities recognized by the Post-Office Department as now having a population in excess of 75,000, where the gross receipts are less than $200,000, shall be entitled to all the privileges applicable to postoffices where the gross receipts are in excess of $200,000. I have had several inquiries as to the condition of clerks in the same

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I can anticipate his question and say that as far as I am concerned I shall have no objection and will not oppose the insertion at that point of the word "clerks."

Mr. GREENE. Very well.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Will that satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. GREENE. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say what I was about to say some little time ago, that the recommendation for the increase of salaries of clerks and carriers alone for the next fiscal year will aggregate $3,700,000.

Now, in order that the committee may show its entire fairness in its recommendations for these increases of clerks and carriers, a provision is made that seeks to cover any mistake on our part by reason of the change from the population basis to the basis of gross receipts as to carriers. Under existing law carriers are paid not to exceed $850 a year when located in offices in communities whose population is not in excess of 75,000, and $1,000 where the population is in excess of 75,000. Therefore the committee discovered in its analysis that when it fixed the grades between $50,000 gross receipts and $200,000 gross receipts it was quite possible that there might be some offices where the population being 75,000 and the gross receipts under $200,000, those carriers would get no promotion. Hence, for the purpose of taking care of that situation, the following provision is inserted in the bill, which will result in a promotion of every letter carrier from the thousand dollar to the eleven-hundred-dollar grade when located in a community having 75,000 population, even though that office does not have as much as $200,000 gross receipts. And I may say at this point the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Greene] made an inquiry about clerks, and I stated that I would have no objection to the insertion of the word "clerks." I will read what is in the bill, and Members can insert the word "clerks." now read from page 6 of the bill, lines 14 to 21.

That letter carriers employed in cities recognized by the Post-Office Department as now having a population in excess of 75,000, where the gross receipts of said offices at the time of the passage of this act are less than $200,000, shall be entitled to all the privileges and subject to all the requirements of this act applicable to post-offices whose gross receipts are in excess of $200,000.

The provision for these promotions was intended for present employees, and therefore if we inadvertently made use of language which would operate against carriers living in a community of 75,000 people and upward, where the gross receipts were less than $200,000, they would not enjoy that promotion, and so we have inserted this provision. That will affect 453 carriers. If clerks should be added, it would affect 251 clerks, making a total of 704 men only, entailing a charge of about $7,000.

Mr. AMES. I should like to ask the gentleman what per cent of increase would this amount to for the clerks and carriers in the country?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have not the figures at hand. Mr. AMES. Does it not amount in cities of 50,000 and under to $50 a year? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It amounts in cities under $50,000 gross receipts to $50.

Mr. AMES. I mean $50,000 gross receipts.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It is $50 on a basis of $850. The gentleman can figure up the percentage for himself.

Mr. WILSON. Did I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that he was willing to have a provision put into this section, between lines 14 and 21, which would apply to the clerks also of the offices in this particular grade?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have stated that I shall make no opposition to that. Now, Mr. Chairman

Mr. BRUMM. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will yield to the gentle-

Mr. BRUMM. I want to ask if you have increased the salary of the employees in the bag and lock shop in the city of Washington?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. We have not.

Mr. BRUMM. Is it not true that they get much less than any other employees in the whole Department, and why not apply the rule to these men as you do to others, especially as in the city of Washington living is perhaps dearer than any other place in the United States?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say frankly, speaking personally, I have no sympathy with the movement to increase the salaries of all the Federal employees in the city of Washington. But that is not within the jurisdiction of the Post-Office Committee, although the particular instance to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers may be. We are recommending these increases with regard to the service throughout the country and without respect to the city of Washington.

Speaking briefly with reference to the increase of the salary of the railway mail clerks, we provide for $100 increase by simply elevating the total number of grades in which they are at present employed, which would of course elevate each one of these employees by $100.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the proviso on page 6. necessity of the word "now" in there?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will say what I suggested a moment ago, that we are seeking to give an increase of salary to present employees, and if we did not insert this proviso—

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I am only speaking of the word " now.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am coming to that. It is not an oversight, it is premeditated and has a reason. We would avoid the promotion in cities having a population of 75,000, less than $200,000 gross receipts. We make this exception directly to those cities where the employment at the present date, when this bill is to be signed, applicable to those employees. We did not intend to make it in the future to other conditions similar in character.

The total amount of increase alone for the railway mail service for the next fiscal year is $1,452,083. We make a recommendation so far as the rural carriers are concerned by changing the existing law, which fixes the maximum salary at $720, so as to provide $840 for the maximum, and the estimate of the Department is that the increase for the increase of rural carriers' compensation for the fiscal year will be $3,722.310, making a grand total for the increase of salaries alone of these various classes of employees in the postal service about $8,900,000.

Mr. CROMER. Did the committee consider the proposition of fixing a standard route in the rural free-delivery service?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It did not give that subject an exhaustive consideration on account of the limited time of the session and the necessity of the passage of this measure at as early a day as possible. We were obliged to postpone some considerations. Therefore, as far as the rural service is concerned, we thought we could continue the present method of a maximum compensation, leaving the length of route to be determined under the regulations of the Department.

Mr. CROMER. I wanted to know what regulations the Department has now.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The regulation under which this service is administered fixes $720 as the maximum salary. That will be changed if our recommendation is followed to $840. I have the scale here. For 23 to 24 miles it is $702; 22 to 23 miles, $684; 21 to 22 miles, $666; 20 to 21 miles, $648; 18 to 20 miles, $612; 16 to 18 miles, $576; 14 to 16 miles, $540; 12 to 14 miles, $504; and 10 to 12 miles, $468.

So that we have fixed the maximum salary at $840, and the same proportionate scale will be maintained by reason of the difference in the length of routes.

Do not the number of houses also figure?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Not in the scale of compen-The number of houses is an element and a very important element in the establishment of the service.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman said that the increase in the salaries proposed by the bill would make a difference of $8,000,000 from the present compensation. Does that increase include the extra force?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, no; that is in addition the extra force. The $8,900,000 is for increases of salaries to the extra force. only. I now yield to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman said a moment ago that the number of houses was a very important element in the establishment of the service. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the number of houses is a very important element in the continuation of the service afterwards?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Undoubtedly, because the number of houses indicates the number of families.

Mr. HUGHES. Does not the gentleman, in his opinion, think the amount paid the carriers should be increased when they have increased population on a shorter route? For instance, if the route is only 16 miles long, and the carrier, on account of the dense population on the route, would take as much time as the carrier to go over a 24-mile route that is not so thickly populated, does the gentleman not think his compensation populated, does the gentleman not think his compensation should be increased in accordance with the work he does?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; the gentleman fails to understand the administration of this service. The gentleman from South Carolina has a much more accurate understanding, because he is familiar with the facts or of the number of houses. The number of houses on a short route, a number of houses congested, would not take as long as if you had to travel a longer route, and therefore I do not think that is a proper basis. I want to state, Mr. Chairman, that the rural-delivery service, so far as its installation is concerned, has apparently been reduced to a substantially normal status. We made ample been reduced to a substantially normal status. We made ample provision, in the judgment of the committee, following the rec-ommendation of the Department, for the installation of practically all that will be demanded during the next fiscal year, and while four years ago, as I now recall, there was over 65 per cent increase in the appropriation for rural-delivery service, yet this year there is only a little over 16 per cent, as I recall, including the increase of salaries, and if there would be no increase of salary for the rural-delivery service the increase of this appropriation for the next fiscal year would be about 3.85 per cent. Showing very clearly, Mr. Chairman, that while this service grew with astounding rapidity for several years it has finally apparently reached a substantial normal basis.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Is it a fact that the Post-Office Department has regulation which requires that a standard route shall handle a certain number of pieces of mail per month—3,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am inclined to think that it has a regulation substantially like that—I do not recall the exact number of pieces—and I think it ought to have some sort of a regulation of that kind, because we ought not to pay some fellow who drives over a route where there is no business, and unless a given number of people along a certain established route secure and deposit a reasonable amount of mail it is pretty strong evidence they do not care for the service.

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Indiana this, if he will permit me: In my own district I happened to have called to my attention in the last few days a situation like this: On a normal route of 24 miles 99 per cent of the patrons have their own boxes, and yet this route does not come up to the standard set by the Department. Now, would the gentleman think it fair to that route that it should be reduced in service to three times a week or finally discontinued?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Unless they have real mail service, something reasonable in the number of pieces received and dispatched, I think the gentleman will agree with me that it would be pretty strong evidence they did not care for the service. The mere nailing up of a box upon the gatepost does not establish a mail service, and if there is not a receiving or a depositing of mail, I see no reason for the continuation of the service. Now, Mr. Chairman, the time is rapidly passing, and I wish to make some brief suggestions relative to two other recommendations of the committee

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before the gentleman passes to that-

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The gentleman may have referred to the point, but I have not heard it. Is there any provision in this bill in reference to the pay of substitute carriers?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes; we put the pay of the substitute on the basis of pay by the hour.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So if they work a day they get paid?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Undoubtedly, as they should. Mr. CROMER. Does that apply to the rural substitutes also? Mr. OVERSTREET. No; the rural substitute is paid at the same rate as the principal.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has made recommendation for a change of existing law relative to railway mail pay, and from the number of telegrams and letters which the Members of the House have received for the past week or ten days from railroad representatives I can imagine that the committee is pretty familiar with the opposition to this recommendation. It is a business question, Mr. Chairman-a question that ever since I was drafted to go upon this committee by the present Speaker of the House has always been before us. It is an important question. It is a complicated one. There are almost as many different opinions upon it as there are individuals who give it any consideration. The committee has made some recommendations, There is a division within the committee, I will say, for the first time since my connection with this service, and that division is with reference to this question only.

I believe something ought to be done to reduce the present rates of railway mail pay. I follow my judgment as other gentlemen follow theirs, and I believe the more you study, the more evidence you read, the more witnesses you examine, the more telegrams and the more letters you receive upon the subject, the more doubt you are apt to entertain as to what ought to be done. In the last analysis you must approach the subject, first, with a spirit of fairness, then with a spirit of some courage; otherwise you would be floated off your feet by the onslaught of the opposition from the transportation companies.

The present law, Mr. Chairman, was enacted on March 3, 1873, and if time permitted, which it does not, I would be glad to pay a tribute to the genius and intellectual strength of whoever it was that conceived the method of pay for the carrying of the mail. Briefly, that method is that the rate decreases as the weight increases—a principle that I think is eminently fair and just. Under that law the scheme of weight was read into the statute, and the corresponding rates to be paid was given alongside of it.

On the 12th day of July, 1876, the rate was reduced 5 per cent; on the 17th day of June, 1878, the rate was reduced 10 A 5 per cent reduction in 1876 followed by a 10 per per cent. cent reduction in 1878 resulted in a 141 per cent reduction from the original rate fixed by the law of March 3, 1873. Your committee recommends a further reduction of 5 per cent on routes carrying daily in excess of 5,000 pounds and not in excess of 48,000 pounds; 10 per cent on routes carrying a daily average in excess of 48,000 pounds and not in excess of 80,000 pounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman's time be extended until he completes his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to take more time, he can do so, but it will come out of the time which he controls.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. And above 80,000 pounds daily average, a flat rate of $19 per ton a year. Under existing law, after the reduction of 141 per cent, the flat rate on each ton of mail in excess of 5,000 pounds carried over each route a day per year was $21.37; so that the reduction recommended by your committee to $19 is a reduction on that character of weight from $21.37. In addition to that—because I can speak of it in connection with the railway mail pay—we make a recommendation for a change of rate on post-office car pay. That law was passed at the same time with the other law.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois

I may not understand the statement of the gentleman clearly. Is it the gentleman's statement that the law was passed in 1873, the first modification in 1876, the second modification in 1878, and that there has been no modification since that time?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have not stated the latter, but that is true. I am coming to that. The rate of pay, which is an extra allowance for the service of railway post-office cars, was provided in the statute of 1873. Those rates are $25 upon 40-foot cars, $30 upon 45-foot cars, $40 upon 50-foot cars, and $50 upon 55-foot cars and upward. We recommend a change of rate so as to fix those rates at $25 on 40-foot cars, the same as now, $27.50 on 45-foot cars, $32.50 instead of $40 upon 50-foot cars, and $40 instead of $50 upon 55-foot cars and upward. There has been no change of law with reference to the railway post-office car pay since the original act was passed in 1873. There has been no change of law with respect to railway mail pay since the deduction in 1878.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it would be utterly impossible for me Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman permit a question right

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will.

Mr. YOUNG. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not a fact that the rate decreases automatically, and that there has been no change in the law because of the increasing volume of business, which of itself automatically decreases the rate?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Oh, yes; and so it did under the original law.

Mr. YOUNG. So that the rate now received by the railroads is considerably lower than in 1878?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Not the rate, because the rates have never changed.

Mr. YOUNG. But in proportion, because of the greater increase in the proportionate amount carried?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I started to say that it is utterly impossible for me to go into great detail in discussing this matter. I have already trespassed upon the patience of the House, and merely plead as my excuse the many interrup-tions. But let me say this, that within the last quarter of a century there has been great outlay by railroad companies and a revolution in the construction of freight cars. The added equipment, the air brakes, and so forth, have increased that expenditure. The double tracking of roads in order to make more rapid speed in the delivery of freight, the hundreds of thousands of sidings upon which to lodge that freight, and the added expenses of terminals not only for the benefit of transportation companies, but for the shippers as well, have greatly increased the expenditure. Yet with all that added outlay, covering a quarter of a century, freight rates have been materially

It may be said that competition has controlled it, but whatever has controlled it, the fact still remains that freight rates have materially reduced, notwithstanding the great outlay incident to the construction of cars, the double tracking of roads, and the increased facilities of sidings and terminals.

Within the same period of time there has been another revolution in the construction of passenger coaches. The present passenger coach, with its well-lighted and well-ventilated accom-The present modations, equipped with modern appliances, with air brakes and other things for the safety and convenience of travelers, is a palace as compared with the coach carried by the transportation companies a quarter of a century ago. Yet, with all the added increase of expenditure by the roads, incident to increased comforts and facilities, throughout the entire country to-day and for many years past there has been a steady reduction of passenger rates. And with all of this, notwith-standing the increased expenditures of the transportation companies to better their roads and to increase the compensation of their employees, the dividends of these companies have shown the most remarkable development in profits ever known in this or any other country in the history of railroad business

But, Mr. Chairman, while within this period of a quarter of a century we have witnessed the reduction of freight and passenger rates, notwithstanding the great increase of expenditures, never since July, 1878, has there been any reduction in railway mail pay. Yet it is claimed that the Government has added new burdens to the companies. What are they? Higher speed, more trains, better accommodations for mail and mail employees, but no better than for the same character of employees and service which have obtained with reference to passenger and freight traffic.

This law of increased weight, resulting in decreased rates, has grown since its inception in 1873 more rapidly than its conceivers dreamed. The highest development on any railway mail route in 1873 showed a total weight upon the most dense route in the country of an average of 16 tons per day. Last year the highest development of the traffic showed a route carrying 244 tons a day, or sixteen times the maximum volume at the time of the passage of this law.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Young] seeks to have the attention of the House called to the fact that the decreased rate has been such a benefit to the country, by reason of the increased weight, that it would not justify any change of the law. But it was upon that basis that the law was originally drafted. Therefore the committee believes that by virtue of the great development in this service, whereby we now have 3,146 railway mail routes throughout the country, where over 90 per cent of the mail is carried upon routes carrying in excess of 5,000 tons a day, the railway companies carrying this mail have been able to put into operation economies which thoroughly justify some reduction, and, in the judgment of your committee, at least the reduction which I have here named.
Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SIBLEY. Is it not true that the automatic reduction of compensation since the report of the Wolcott commission has amounted to 16 per cent through the augmentation of heavier transportation of mail matter?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not know, and I do not think it makes any difference. Let me say a word about the Wolcott commission. I have no doubt the attention of this committee will be called by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and others to the so-called "Wolcott commission." That was a commission appointed by Congress to inquire into the rates of railway mail pay. If there was a full representation of this body present at this time I would ask every man who had read the report to hold up his hand. I submit there has 2 per cent of the membership of this House that has read the evidence submitted to the commission. port was submitted practically seven years ago, and we have continually been told that because that commission did not recommend a reduction, that therefore no reduction ought now to be recommended.

I have said on this floor, and I presume my statements will be quoted in this debate against me (I have made statements before I read the commission's evidence), that I felt that in view of the fact that that commission had made no recommendation for reduction we might well rest upon that.

Mr. SIBLEY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will.

Mr. SIBLEY. I would like to ask the chairman, who I know has given a great deal of attention to this subject, if he does not know whether there has been an automatic reduction of 16 per cent, what reduction, in his judgment, has been worked through the automatic decrease in pay as the volume of matter increased?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I make the same answer to my friend from Pennsylvania that I did a moment ago to the gentleman from Michigan, that the original law was based upon the theory of decreased rates as the weight increases, but if the gentleman's argument is that because the increased weight results in a decreased rate, why the reduction of 1878 and 1876?

Why would not that have been a bar to action in that day?

Mr. SIBLEY, I would like to ask the gentleman if the figures show that there was a decrease or an increase?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. When?

Mr. SIBLEY. Between the dates the gentleman just mentioned.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There has been a decrease of the amount of money they received as compared with the less weight. But in our judgment the time has come when the rate which fixes the amount of money ought also to be further

I submit that we have been conservative in this recommendation, and a more exhaustive examination might result, and I am sure would result, in even recommending a larger percentage of reduction than this to which I have just addressed myself.

Mr. CROMER. What consideration did the committee give to this subject? I have received some information from the railroads that the committee gave no consideration to this subject of decrease of pay.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I presume the gentleman has received a number of those telegrams which I think very appropriately fell upon this House on St. Valentine's Day, to the effect that 35 per cent reduction has been recommended.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I started to state that I have no doubt that not 2 per cent of the membership of this House has read the evidence before the Wolcott commission. I stated that I had made statements on the floor before I read the evidence, resting upon the security of that report. Now, I concede to every man just as much right to his judgment as I claim for myself, and I admit there is doubt about the report of the Wolcott commission being based on the evidence. But, so far as I am concerned, simply exercising the best opportunities I have for marshaling what little intellectual ability I have, I do not think the Wolcott commission made the proper recommendation, and I believe in the light of my study of that evidence, although I may be in error, that, had I been a member of that commission, I would have recommended a reduction of the pay. Therefore we have before Congress the Wolcott commission report and evidence.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I have heard it stated that the carriers of the mail—the railroad companies, I suppose—were not given an opportunity, or sufficient opportunity, to present their side of the case. I suppose that is what the gentleman from Indiana referred to.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes, sir; that is what his inquiry was. If the gentleman will bear with me, I will come Therefore the House has-Congress has-all the evidence submitted by the Wolcott commission seven years ago. In addition to that it has had before the committee, I think without exception, in each session of Congress when it has been my privilege to have been a member of that committee, railroad representatives who have been in to make inquiry about the chances for a reduction, at which times I have uniformly taken opportunity to interrogate them and secure as much evidence No; this session there were no representatives of the railroad companies heard by the committee, but I do not believe that, so far as these per cents of reduction here recommended are concerned, any such hearing was necessary, because sufficient information was already in the possession of the com-

But, sir, the Members of Congress have heard from the representatives of the railroads. They have heard little else in the last week, and just like the gentleman from Pennsylvania interrogated me with reference to newspaper reports on account of some other provision in this bill, so hundreds of messages and letters are sent here, filled with inaccuracies, trying to stampede this Congress in regard to this matter. Was any hearing given in 1878 or in 1876? Was there a scintilla of evidence before this House by report or otherwise as to whether any hearing was asked for at those dates? And if after thirty years, after a voluntary reduction of passenger and freight rates, we can not take this action without bending the knee to these representatives and dictators of legislation, I submit that we had just as well abandon any efforts whatever to recommend action to this House. [Applause.] Did we not hear last year that the rall-road companies would be utterly annihilated by the passage of the rate bill? Was it not heralded by every newspaper controlled by them that the efforts of Congress to control them under the interstate-commerce act would injure them, and that their property was being taken from them without due process There will never come a time when you can get any satisfaction from them by giving them the hearing which they desire, and, as I said to one of them, I believed it was perhaps a mercy we did not give them a hearing, because I thought that after thirty years we were justified in making a reasonable recommendation without having Congressional committees and commissions befuddled and confused by expert cross-examination and a tabulation of statistics which would overwhelm any individual who sought to analyze them.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to ask the gentleman this question, premising it with this short statement. I have received a number of telegrams, not alone from attorneys representing railroads, but from business men, protesting against this proposed action on the part of Congress, stating that it would result, they thought, in an impairment of the efficiency of the passenger and freight service. I would like to hear from the gentleman whether or not he thinks these fears are without grounds.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I was coming to that. state, Mr. Chairman, that I am absolutely confident that the postal service will not be impaired in the slightest degree by adopting these reductions to which I have addressed myself thus There will not be a single train changed in a schedule, and the scarecrow of these telegrams and letters ought not to persuade Members against the exercise of proper control of their own votes on the theory that the people have been frightened lest the service be impaired. I will venture to say that there has not been a telegram received either by the gentleman from Texas or any other gentleman in this House from a business organization or a commercial organization in his district that has not been prompted by the request of some railroad organization. [Applause.] They are not volunteer telegrams sent because of the solicitude of these communities. I think there is no more fear of the impairing of an efficient high standard administration of this postal service by these reductions than resulted after the reduction of 1878.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. SIMS. Is this legislation proposed by your committee subject to the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana, It is.
Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman not believe with a minority report filed that there will be a point of order made against it? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I presume there will be one

I would like to know whether or not a rule could not be brought in making it in order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The committee thought it wise to call this subject to the attention of the House and urge upon the House its adoption. We propose to take advantage of all of our rights under the rules and subject to the rules. I hope, and sincerely hope, that some provision may be made whereby this subject may be brought before the House and let the House determine

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman in that connection

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Overstreet] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Shackleford]?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield.
Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If every other method should fail, would that not be properly brought before the House by appealing from the decision of the Chair?

OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes; and I would be opposed to such a revolutionary method, even though I favor this proposition. I am not yet ready to join a revolution.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The gentleman would not go that far to save a few million dollars for the people?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Not with my assistance, nor, I think, of those who are associated with me on this committee. There are fair methods of procedure, and when they have been exhausted I am ready to quit.

There are one or two other features of this special provision which I wish to call to the attention of the committee, and I preface my remarks upon those by admitting that there is more doubt in my mind with reference to those provisions than with reference to the reductions to which I have addressed myself. The first one of those is a provision that at the times of the weighing of the mail the empty mail bags shall not be weighed or taken into account in connection with determining the pay for the transportation of the mail. We have made this recommendation without knowing specifically to what extent it would affect the

is recommended entirely from a principle that when a bag having once been weighed, with contents of mail, it ought not to be weighed a second time when it was empty and being reto be weighed a second time when it was empty and being re-turned for additional contents. And on the principle that empty kegs, crates, baskets, and bags are now returned to the shipper without extra charge, we thought that principle ought to obtain to the advantage and profit of the Government. To-day the Government in the administration of this service carries by freight in freightable lots empty mail bags, and distributes them where the demand is the greatest. tice and authority will be in no degree interfered with by this provision which we recommend, and, indeed, ample appropriation is carried by this bill to carry the necessary freight charges in the handling in freightable lots of empty mail bags to be transported from one section of the country to another for the additional mail which they are supposed to carry. But this provision that no empty mail bags shall be weighed at the time of the weighing applies entirely and wholly to those bags which are to be found in the cars at the time the mail is being weighed, but which contain no mail. There will always be a limited number of them, just how many nobody knows. have uniformly been weighed just the same as the bag which contains letters of the first class are weighed, and their weight has been estimated as part of the weight of the whole mail in determining the amount of compensation. I say frankly that while I advocate the principle and believe it ought to be maintained, nevertheless I concede a doubt as to the time of its adoption, perhaps, without knowing absolutely what effect it would have. But, nevertheless, I so favor the principle that I stand by the recommendation.

Another recommendation is the striking out of the present law of the word "working" with respect to the authority of ascertaining the average daily weight of the mail. I entertain equal doubt with respect to that, although it is a very decidedly debatable question. And it is recommended by the committee. The law of 1873 provides that at least once in four years the mail shall be weighed and the daily average weight upon each mail shall be weighed and the upon that weight as a basis the rate route obtained, and then upon that weight as a basis the rate for the entire four years succeeding shall be applied. The law provided originally that for "thirty" consecutive working days that mail shall be weighed. A later statute changed the "thirty" to "ninety," so the present law authorizes once in four years in order to establish the rate of compensation for a four-year period, that the mail shall be weighed for ninety successive working days. And by the elimination of the word "working" and by the addition of "one hundred and five," which this recommendation contains, the law would read that for "one hundred and five consecutive days the mail should be weighed."

I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. LACEY. Right in this connection, there has been, of course, a steady increase in the amount carried during the whole four years?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Had the gentleman been present he would have heard that statement.

Mr. LACEY. Is that figured in making the compensation? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There is no change made in that.

Mr. HAUGEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. HAUGEN. Have you made any comparison of the amount paid by the Government to the express companies and that which is paid to the transportation companies?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The only investigation which I have made personally has been a study of the evidence before the Wolcott Commission and a certain amount of evidence which was before the Postal Commission last summer and fall, showing these comparisons.

Mr. HAUGEN. Has the gentleman made a comparison as to the average cost of mile per pound?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; because they are in an entirely different service. It is very difficult, in my judgment, to make comparison between the express service and the transportation of mail service, which is entirely different. I do not think the services are sufficiently similar for comparison.

Mr. HAUGEN. Has the gentleman any information as to the number of pounds carried by them?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I do not recollect.

Mr. HAUGEN. A billion pounds.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There are over a billion pounds of mail, I understand. The last statement was approximately one billion; but I have no information as to what number of those pounds were carried by the railroads.

Mr. HAUGEN. I know it is about 41,000,000 of the 1,000,-000,000, for which there were paid about 4.1 cents a pound, and then, with nearly $6,000,000 for the cars, we have another half cent, and we employ about 15,000 clerks—

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I would rather that you put that into a question.

Mr. HAUGEN. I wanted to get at the expense. about 6 cents a pound for every pound carried by the trans-portation companies. Now, is it not a fact that the express companies carried it at a much less rate—200,000 pounds at 2 cents, an average being about 400 pounds?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. While the gentleman from Iowa and myself are in accord as to reducing the price, I do not agree with him in that. I do not believe the cost of carrying is 6 cents a pound. But that is a matter for debate, and I have answered the question and prefer not to yield further.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to set him a question?

ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Certainly.
Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I did not exactly understand the chairman's statement about the weighing of the mails. The number of days at present the mail is weighed is thirty?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No, sir; ninety.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. And the committee proposes to increase that to one hundred and five?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I was at that point, I will say to the gentleman, when I was interrupted. I think, perhaps, I will cover his proposition; if not, I will yield for an inquiry.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. All right; I will ask no further questions just now

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. At the time of the passage of the act of 1873, which read "thirty consecutive working days," I think there is little dispute but what an exceedingly limited number of trains of any kind were operated upon Sundays. Certainly not to the extent that they have been operated upon Sunday in recent years; and I am of the opinion, without tangible record proof, I admit, but I am of the opinion that the word "working" was used constructively, to apply to the labor actually incident to the weighing of the mail. There were many railroads, as there are now, that did not operate daily. There are many cases where there is service only three times a week, and a great many cases seven times a week. I presume I would not be disputed when I made the statement that in 1873 the proportion of service on daily routes was much less than it is to-day. But the actual labor or working incident to the weighing of the mail meant the consecutive days that it was possible to weigh the mails, or work in weighing them, by reason of the operation of the trains which carried them. If the train operated for six days only, under the law it could not be weighed on Sunday, the seventh; whereas if it operated daily, the number of working days would apply to the seven days in the week. For my part I am constrained to the opinion that "working" applied to the labor incident to the weighing, and not to the Sabbath day as distinguished from the other six days of the week.

But in ascertaining the average daily weight, the practice of the Department has been upon roads where the service has been daily, seven days in the week, to exclude the seventh day or Sabbath, and divide the weight carried seven days by six in ascertaining the average. The theory is specifically stated in the explanation made to your committee, a theory which I admit is susceptible of very fair argument, that the failure to carry the mail on the seventh day would be followed by that particular amount of weight being held over until the following day, or Monday, and then, if it were carried on Monday, be counted as the weight of that day, whereas by carrying it on Sunday it would give expedition to the service, and therefore the road was entitled to fair compensation, and by dividing by six instead of seven, a fair proportion of compensation was granted the carrying road, and that the road which rendered daily service and thereby distributed and collected the mail for the benefit of the people, was doing better service than the road which operated less than seven days, even if the service was for

But the law in reference to the weighing for a certain number of consecutive working days was for the purpose of ascertaining the average weight.

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman—
Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I want to state the law:
The average weight to be ascertained in every case by actual weighing of the mails for such a number of "successive working days" is the language of the statute. Therefore, in the judgment of your committee that average weight should be obtained by dividing the total weight by the total number of days' weighing and following the precedent fixed by this House at the present session of Congress in declaring by resolution in favor of the integrity of the spelling book, we may be pardoned for our approval of Ray's arithmetic.

Mr. YOUNG. I wish to ask the gentleman, then, if, under the statement which he has so clearly made just now, it is not a fact that the railroad company by taking off its Sunday service and carrying all the mail for the week in six days instead of seven would, under the provision of the bill you propose, increase its compensation, so that for the poorer service it would get more pay and for the better service less pay?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The gentleman's inquiry is founded upon the assumption that the Sunday mail will be discontinued. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment no Sunday service will be discontinued. The gentleman fails to appreciate the fact that the Sunday operation of trains is not occasioned by the mail, but by the commerce of the country, and that they will be operated upon Sunday for that commerce even if they should not take up the mail, which would lie over until Monday; and there are just about as many instances where the Sunday service is carried because of the express business as where it is carried because of the mail business. It is true that there are a limited number of exclusively mail trains; but that number is Those trains are operated only for the mail, and if the gentleman's inquiry was entirely as to that class of mail I sub-mit that whereas in hundreds of instances the daily papers of this country, which are second-class mail matter, constituting more than two-thirds of the weight of all the mail, are sent by express within a zone of 500 miles, they would still be able to get the benefit of the Sunday service upon those routes.

But the gentleman will recognize that I stated at the outset that this particular recommendation is undoubtedly a debatable question, and there may be some instances where if it were followed by an actual discontinuance of Sunday mail service it would undoubtedly result in an impairment of the service. But I do not believe that the recommendations of your committee, to which I have addressed myself with respect to the 5 and 10 per cent reduction, are susceptible to the same doubts that this proposition may possibly be.

Mr. STEENERSON. I wish to state that in my argument upon this question I shall undertake to answer the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Young] and demonstrate that it would make no difference whatever in the railway mail pay whether the mail is carried on Sunday or simply carried on six days in the week.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Then I will remand my friend from Michigan to the tender mercies of my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask the gentleman to yield a moment further. Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. YOUNG. Even assuming, as the gentleman from Indiana says, that these trains will not be discontinued on Sunday, might they not well take off the mail service, and would they not be likely to take off the mail service on the Sunday train if they could increase their compensation under the law by so doing, as it clearly appears they could do if this provision should become the law

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I am not prepared to accept the gentleman's conclusion as to the fact that it would result in increased pay, but I am quite ready to agree with him that any conduct on the part of the carriers which would result in increased compensation they most certainly would avail them-

Mr. LACEY. I should like to ask the gentleman: The Sunday mail is the heaviest, is it not, on account of these tremendous Sunday newspapers?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. There is a serious doubt about that being the fact. Indeed, there is quite a little information to the effect that, as a whole, the Sunday mail is lighter than the average week-day mail.

But the gentleman must understand-and if he does not know, I will be glad to give him the information-that, while the weight of the mail is practically now one thousand million pounds, over 600,000,000 pounds of that is mail of the second-class matter, and yet of the daily newspapers there is not to exceed 10 or 15 per cent of the circulation issue which enters the mail. So the talk about the daily papers being a tremendous burden on the mail is a mistake. The great bulk of the daily papers issued which is not distributed by local carriers is carried by ex-press within a limited zone, carried by express at a lower rate than the rate of mail within that limited zone. The New York papers are carried as far west as Pittsburg by express cheaper than the postage would be, but going beyond that zone the mail rate for the same amount of weight would be cheaper.

Now, Mr. Chairman, just to recapitulate and to hurry on. The recommendation, so far as the railway mail pay and railway post-office car pay are concerned as carried in this bill, will result in the next fiscal year in a saving to the Government of $3,000,000 by reason of the reduction of the 5 and 10 per cent which I explained a little while ago, and by reason of the change of rate of railway post-office cars it will result in a saving of an additional $1,000,000.

So far as these two specific propositions go, there will be a saving for the next fiscal year of $4,000,000. I do not believe there can be any question about the justice of these recommendations or the wisdom of their adoption. If, on the other hand, the empty-mail-bag recommendation should prevail, we have no estimate as to what that saving would be, because the empty bags have been treated throughout the weighing period just as the full bags have been treated.

So far as the change of method of ascertaining the average rate of pay based upon what we call "the Sunday service" is concerned, that would result in a saving next year of approximately $2,000,000. That would not cover any except the third weighing division, and that would also apply to the empty mail bags, because both recommendations with respect to elimination of empty bags would apply only to the division at the time of weighing the mail under existing law, and this year that weighing section is the third, or the Middle West.

The estimate of the Department of the difference in compensation in that third, or Middle West, division by the change of method of ascertaining the average weight based on the last year's pay would be about $1,750,000, and so we assume that the same proportion, where it would be weighed this year, would carry it a little beyond the $2,000,000 in the change brought about by the change of method of computation. But next year there will be a weighing in one of the other three divisions, and in the limited time of three years this provision would apply to all the country. So that if you should assume that the estimates of the Department, which were submitted to the committee with reference to the saving of difference in pay based upon the difference in divisor in ascertaining the daily weight, were applied to the entire country, as compared with the items last year, it would in time amount for that purpose alone, taking the entire country, to approximately $6,000,000. That is as nearly accurate as we now have statistics to make it.

If you will take the first recommendation, upon which I have laid considerable stress, of the saving of $4,000,000, and these two additional recommendations should be adopted, it would make a difference in excess of $10,000,000 of pay, based upon estimates for last year's pay, but only applying fully at the end of three years.

Therefore we have only eliminated from the appropriation for transportation purposes the $3,000,000, and the item carried in the bill for compensation for the transportation of mail does not suffer by any reduction in dollars and cents on account of the change of divisor or the elimination of the empty

But I believe, Mr. Chairman, that certainly the House has ample statistics and sufficient evidence to warrant at least the $4,000,000 reduction and leave the other two to be debated when these items occur in the reading of the bill to determine whether or not if the change of divisor, based upon the ordinary rules of arithmetic, must be followed, and there is any danger of it resulting in the impairment of proper Sunday service provision can be made by way of amendment to secure ample safeguards against being unfair in the treatment for that service.

Now, just a word upon this final suggestion which I desire to The last session of Congress we adopted a provimention. sion in the post-office appropriation bill requiring the keeping of a record by the Post-Office Department of second-class mail matter, dividing it into its several elements of the different classes of mail of the second class. We have been so pleased with the result of the record that we have thought it advisable to recommend a further weighing for another six months, and then not only a weighing of the second class, but a weighing of all other classes of mail, in order that we may have more accurate statistics, which we do not now possess in any degree with respect to the various classes of mail, their amounts in weight, the number of pieces, and relative proportions of one to the other. This provision is recommended in the report of the Postal Commission, which was filed but a short time ago. Another recommendation by the Postal Commission was for the creation of a commission of three Senators and three Representatives, to be appointed by the presiding officers of the respective bodies, to investigate the entire postal service with a view primarily of recommending to Congress, if possible at the next session, some improved methods of business based upon more modern ideas than now obtain in the administration These are the only recommendations of the of the service. Postal Commission which the committee has given any consideration to since the report of the Commission was filed. It had been my purpose to discuss briefly the action and recommendations of that Postal Commission, but so much time has already been occupied by me that I feel that it would be unfair to the committee and to my colleagues upon the House committee if I took further of your time.

Simply let me say that the committee did not take up for consideration any of the recommendations of the Postal Commission except these two to which I have just referred, letting the matter go over to a further session, and to be followed with the information which might be secured from this system of general weighing and counting of pieces during the six months beginning next July 1, and in connection therewith whatever information and recommendations may be made by the new Commission which we have recommended. I would like to say, how-ever, just this much with respect to the report of that Postal Commission: It is with great regret that I have observed from reading a number of papers throughout the country, in their criticisms of the report of the Postal Commission, an absence of a fair investigation of the report and an exaggeration of deof a fall investigation of the report and a case at the second class. We will never be able, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, to reach any kind of satisfactory adjustment of the great problem of the second-class matter of mail unless we can have the cooperation of the great press of the country, daily and periodical. It is in the interest of those great enterprises that legislation is needed. The antiquated laws of to-day are scarcely enforceable. It would be an easy matter, in my judgment, for a strict enforcement of existing laws relative to the second-class matter of mail to result in great harm and loss to the publishers of the coun-But so long as the newspapers and periodicals of the country. But so long as the newspapers and periodicals of the country insist upon wholesale criticism without fair and reasonable cooperation on their part I fear we will always have an unfortunate entanglement and a contest which will bring about no Much, much of misinformation has been spread abroad with respect to the action of that Commission. It is not proper at this time, and I have not the time if it were, to specify that unfortunate situation.

If I had the time I would be glad to inform this House upon some methods which have been adopted by some periodicals, daily and otherwise, which have been stimulated for the purpose of defeating action. I could point out to this House wherein some of these misguided and unfortunate representatives of a great and influential press have even sought to aid some railroad corporations in a joint movement to defeat all legislation by Congress relative to the second-class matter of mail and the reduction of railway mail pay. I think that the great volume of the American press should be exonerated from any such criticisms which I have just made in reference to some. I believe in the integrity, the influence, and high purposes of that press, and they can subserve a splendid purpose and aid in a cause which has been urged for their benefit by giving better attention to the efforts of honorable gentlemen of Congress in studying and seeking to bring about some wise laws which will result in their benefit. But until the press as a whole can give ear at least to fair and reasonable efforts we can never hope for final action upon this great problem. A united press is more powerful than Congress. Surely with such power Congress is entitled to its aid in any proper effort to solve so important a problem.

Much is to be conceded to them and none would I take away, except now to call the attention of the House to the fact that the House is powerless in the settlement of this great question of second-class matter of mail unless the press itself shall give a more courteous attention to the efforts which are made. principle, the central principle of the recommendation of that commission, is that an added cost should be made, occasioned by the handling of the article itself, separated from its trans-portation. We therefore recommend that so long as the matter of the second class is carried in bulk in an unbroken package to a single addressee there should be no change either of rate or of method of treatment. But where the individual copy falls as a burden upon the entire machinery of the postal service, to be handled first by the clerk at the office of entry, and by the railway mail clerk, and by the clerk at the office of destination, and then possibly by the carrier, we thought that individual copy should pay an additional fair charge, based upon a fair estimate of the cost for the additional handling. That is the central idea in the recommendation. There are many details which undoubtedly would have to be whipped into shape before final action, and the limited time of that commission and the limited time of this session, with its many crowded duties, made it impossible for full and complete consideration at this session and made it impossible for as complete an investigation of the details that possibly ought to be made and necessarily would be made before final action.

That difference between the transportation charge and the charge for the copy which falls for handling purposes on the machinery of the service is recognized by every civilized country on which the sun shines except the United States and Canada. It is not a new principle. It is only my purpose at this time to call the attention of the House to the importance of that great subject, to my personal fear of absolutely no action except upon a proper and fair cooperation upon the part of the press, by which we mean the creators of second-class matter of mail. I hope to see the day come, Mr. Chairman, and that at no distant time, when we may have this cooperation, and when by the aid of the reasonable and influential means of that great service there can be brought about a fair and a proper change of law, eliminating these intricate, complicated, and vexatious problems which invest and surround us under existing statutes which conditions have so vastly changed.

And so, Mr. Chairman, your committee has after much labor and very thorough consideration brought to this body for its action this great bill carrying more than $200,000,000 and asks for your approval. Eighteen States are represented upon that These men have brought to the consideration of these problems as good ability as any equal number of men in this House could do. I bespeak for them at your hands a fair consideration of their recommendations, believing that when you have so considered those recommendations you will agree with us that we are rendering to the people of this country a high standard of postal facilities and a proper recognition of the hard-working employees and fair recommendations for changes in existing laws. I thank you. [Loud applause.] I suggest that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon] take control of the time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. James].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call to the attention of the committee H. R. 23017, commonly called the "Fowler bill," providing for credit, or asset, currency. This bill has been favorably reported by the majority of the Committee on Banking and Currency, composed of the Republican members of the committee, and was opposed by myself and the other Democratic members of said committee.

This bill provides that national banks shall have the right to issue an amount of money equal to 40 per cent of their outstanding bond-secured circulation. The interest which they are to presumably pay upon this issue is  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent every six months, which is to constitute a reserve fund for the purpose of redeeming said money so issued of failed banks. This money is not secured by national bonds, as are the national-bank notes.

Government does not guarantee the payment of this money issued as proposed under this bill, but merely becomes the trustee of the interest so paid or the amount of 5 per cent deposited until the interest paid in upon the issuance of said notes becomes 5 per cent, then the 5 per cent can be withdrawn. There is nothing said in the bill about who shall pay the notes when the reserve fund of 5 per cent is exhausted. This money is made a legal tender, just like a national-bank note. The provision relative to its legal-tender qualities is as follows:

Sec. 9. That said national bank guaranteed credit notes, issued in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall be received at par in all parts of the United States in payment of taxes, excises, public lands, and all other dues to the United States, except duties on imports; and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States except interest on the public debt and in redemption of the national currency. Said notes shall be received upon deposit and for all purposes of debt and liability by every national banking association at par and without charge of whatsoever kind.

Under this provision all debts due the Government can be paid

Under this provision all debts due the Government can be paid in this money, including taxes, excises, public lands, and all other dues to United States except duties on imports, and can be paid out by United States for all salaries and other debts owing by the United States to persons or corporations. In other words, the Government has to receive it for all things except duties on imports and can pay it out for all things except interest on the public debt. The pension roll of one hundred and fifty million can be paid in this money to every soldier who draws a pension. Every Southerner whose property was taken during the civil war would have to accept it. Every person who does public work of any kind would have to accept it. It is legal tender in "reality" for all purposes in the usual avenues of trade, however much the advocates may attempt to call it "credit money," or check, or by whatever deceptive phrase described.

The Government does not guarantee the redemption of this money, notwithstanding the legal-tender qualities accorded to it, as I have set forth. It only provides as follows:

SEC. 6. That the taxes upon national bank guaranteed credit notes, provided for in sections 2 and 3 of this act, shall be paid in gold coin to the Treasurer of the United States. Said taxes, when received, shall constitute a guaranty fund to redeem the notes of failed banks and to pay the cost of printing and current redemption.

So we observe there is a striking and rather singular silence on what shall become of these notes when the reserve fund is exhausted; it only says the Government shall redeem "out of the fund" notes of failed banks. Where we shall go when "the fund" is exhausted is not disclosed; but I insist, Mr. Chairman, this is a place many of us desire information upon.

Mr. Chairman, our friends, the Republicans, are wanting to foist upon the country, not the despised 50-cent silver dollar, for which we Democrats were called "anarchists," "repudiationists," and other delectable names, but in its stead you propose a "rag-baby dollar," worth nothing at all "intrinsically," and only 5 per cent "prospectively." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the Republican party has been exceedingly kind to the national banks, so kind, indeed, that its kindness has ripened into love. Under the beneficent laws that party has enacted the national banker can buy $100,000 worth of bonds, upon which he gets interest and upon which no taxes can be collected, and by this saves at least 2 per cent, which is the amount, when we include State, county, school, municipal, and sometimes railroad tax, and then the United States allows him to issue, by depositing these bonds, the sum of $100,000 in money, which he lends to the public at from 6 per cent to 10 per cent per annum, or whatever the market will stand, and every time a bank note of the $100,000 issued is lost, burned, or destroyed the banker is this much additional ahead. What per cent this would be I have no accurate information, but it undoubtedly is considerable.

Mr. Chairman, the Government of the United States does not stop here in its special favors and class legislation, but it continues its friendly aid to these "struggling bankers," and lends money collected from all the people by taxation, without any interest at all, to the national bankers, year in and year out. What a vast sum it is! The statement of the United States Treasury issued on the 29th of January, 1907, shows in national-bank depositories of the United States $161,061,798.25.

This wonderful sum of the people's money in the national banks, without the payment of one single cent of interest, and which great sum of money they are charging from 6 to 10 per cent per year when they lend this money back to the people, from whom it came and to whom it rightly belongs. Mr. Chairman, I challenge the world for a greater or more vicious act of class legislation. I challenge anyone to present a scheme of spollation or graft to excel it. Almost every State in the Union charges interest upon its public funds so deposited. The State of Missouri loans its money at public auction to competitive bidders and realizes upon it 3 per cent interest per annum. The laboring man who counts his weary hours of toil in his battle for bread to feed his family gets no such kindly assistance, in hours even of distress, from his Government, nor does the farmer, whose energy feeds the world. The drought may blight his crop, the waters may wash it away, the frost may kill it, misfortune may hover about him, but under this benign system of Republicanism he is given the poor privilege of paying high taxes, by tariffs upon necessities of life, that the money may accumulate in the Treasury to make greater the surplus to loan to the bankers for nothing. To the farmer, the business man, and the laborer no such charity or favor is shown. They might tell of mortgages about to be foreclosed, of the officer ready to sell their all under the hammer, yet empty-handed they would return from the marble counters of these men, realizing the truth of Kentucky's inspired poet's words as they rang in their ears, when he said:

Go, look in the banks, where Mammon has told His hundreds and thousands of silver and gold; Where, safe from the hands of the starving and poor, Lies pile upon pile of the glittering ore! Walk up to their counters—ah, there you may stay Till your limbs grow old, till your hairs grow gray, And you'll find at the banks not one of the clan With money to lend to a moneyless man.

In the Fifty-eighth Congress the minority leader, Mr. Williams, introduced an amendment to the Hill bill, which provided as follows:

All national banking associations, designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be depositories of public moneys under such regulations, requiring payment of interest on amount deposited, and limiting the amount in any one bank "bidding in competition" for same, as may be prescribed by the Secretary.

The solid Democratic vote, aided by some patriotic Republicans, adopted this amendment, which would have brought many millions of money as interest on these deposits into our Treasury. But, Mr. Chairman, what became of the bill as amended? The Republican party killed it in the Senate, and the "system" continues to use the public money without interest.

The bankers urge the Fowler bill because they say this money is needed to move crops. Yes, Mr. Chairman; they are great crop movers, but not crop makers; they want to move crops—into their already overflowing coffers, where they have been moving them for twenty years. [Applause,] moving them for twenty years. [Applause.]

Their contention is that we need more money at certain times of the year-crop time-and that the volume of money is great enough except at this particular time; that they want an emergency currency, which will appear at this time and disappear when this function is performed. If they really want this elasticity, let them support an amendment which I propose offering to this bill loaning the public money out to highest bidder, secured by bonds. This will give elasticity. This will take the millions by bonds. This will give elasticity. This will take the millions of the Treasury to that part of the United States which needs it to pay for crops. This will aid in moving crops, and besides it will move a crop of interest from the national banks into the Federal Treasury. [Applause.] This will give elasticity; this will take these millions away from Wall street, the muchfavored money center, and give the great crop-making sections of this country—the South and West—a chance to borrow this money from their banks, who would be willing to pay interest. In this part of the country it would be used for legitimate purposes and not for gambling upon the stock market, and by this the people would save many millions which are now given to the banks.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that this money should be loaned at auction to competitive bidders, because it would prevent either party from favoring certain banks by depositing money in such institutions and then in return get large contributions for campaign purposes to corrupt elections. As it is now, with one hundred and sixty millions of money to loan to banks without interest, the party in power could deposit it with favored banks and when contributions were asked for campaign purposes, a hint to the wise would be sufficient; and such gentlemen do not need even the "hint," for they are exceedingly wise, This system could be used to procure an immense fund to be used in putting voters in blocks of five and debauching the public will.

I am going to send to the Clerk's desk and have read a statement of the different times that the Secretary of the Treasury has gone to the relief of Wall street, showing the amount of money and the names of those who are interested in the corporations who have been benefited.

The CHAIRMAN. The paper will be read in the time of the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHAW'S FRIENDSHIP FOR WALL STREET—THE TREASURY AND WALL STREET.

[The Commoner, January 11, 1907.]

Instances within the last two years in which the Secretary of the Treasury went to the relief of the money markets are cited by the New York World, together with the names of the favored banks, their directors, and their insurance company connections as follows:

Secretary Shaw took the first step to relieve the financial stringency in 1905 when, during July and August, he permitted the banks to deplete their 25 per cent reserves by allowing them to use $7,000,000 of this fund. On September 28 he offered to receive in exchange for consols of 1930 securities of the loan of 1907, 4 per cents, and those of 1908, 3 per cents. The amount of money placed in circulation as the result of this transaction was $915,033.

From January 1 to July 15, 1905, to help out the Treasury on account of the deficiency in the revenues, the Secretary called from the national banks $51,316,800, as follows: January 15, $8,999,000; March 15, $13,489,300; May 15, $14,169,000; July 15, $14,659,500.

December 15, 1905, he anticipated the interest due January 1, 1906, and paid out $4,149,663 to relieve the financial stringency.

January 5, 1906, he anticipated interest on bonds due February 1. The amount placed in circulation as a result of this transaction was $1,644,489.

SECURITY FOR DEPOSITS.

SECURITY FOR DEPOSITS.

Late in February, 1906, Secretary Shaw deposited $9,941,000 in national banks of New York, Baltimore, Chicago, New Orleans, Boston, Philadelphia, and St. Louis. Early in April, 1906, Mr. Shaw authorized the assistant treasurer at New York to accept State and municipal bonds as security for deposits in national banks desiring to import gold. Under this arrangement $49,870,000 was turned over to the banks between April 12 and May 31. Gold was imported to cover this amount, and the money was returned to the Treasury when the gold arrived from Europe.

Between May 31 and June 30 $13,170,259 was deposited in national banks.

Between September 10 and October 15 Mr. Shaw facilitated gold imports by accepting Government, State, and municipal bonds as security. The amount of gold imported under this arrangement was $46,606,000.

These funds were returned to the Treasury when the gold arrived, the last payment being made November 14.

September 27 Mr. Shaw deposited $26,000,000 in the national banks, State and municipal bonds being accepted as security for these deposits. October 22, 1906, Mr. Shaw offered to stimulate national-bank circulation to the extent of $18,000,000 by accepting approved securities other than Government bonds for deposits that had been made, the bonds released to be used immediately as a basis of circulation without withdrawals from the Treasury. On this offer circulation was increased by $15,837,850.

Secretary Shaw had also anticipated the interest on bonds due May 1, 1906. This action released $12,000,000 from the Treasury.

The same men who control these five favored banks also control the life-insurance companies which contributed $148,702 to Mr. Cortelyou's campaign fund.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Cortelyou comes in as Secretary of the Treasury with all these millions to place in banks without interest. He, I presume, knows who contributed to the last campaign fund, because he was chairman. Would he loan it to those who contributed abundantly, or those who did not; to an enemy or a friend? I do not charge any corruption against any public official, but I am calling attention to the viciousness of this system. A Secretary of the Treasury, if the Treasury is to be used as an adjunct to Wall street, might deposit money to-day; this would gid the bull. He wight withdraw it port day; this would aid the bulls. He might withdraw it next week; this would aid the bears. My understanding is that a person may on Wall street be a bull to-day and a bear to-morrow, but always a hog. [Laughter and applause.]

Why, we are told that in the Senate a bill will soon be passed that will come through here with the rapidity of a streak of lightning, providing that the "customs duties" shall be deposited in the national banks, and the national banks shall keep that money there, perhaps three hundred millions a year, without any interest, and loan it to whom they please at 6 to 10 per cent. The farmers must come and borrow it, the laboring man must come up and borrow it, and when he asks the banker from whence it comes, he tells him that Uncle Sam let him have it; and the farmers ask at what interest, and the banker says, "We don't pay any at all." The farmer asks, "Where did Uncle Sam get it?" The reply is, "It came from the people." But the farmers are expected to turn around and sing:

The star-spangled banner, oh, long may it wave O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

[Applause and laughter.]

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow an interruption?

Mr. JAMES. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. I suppose the gentleman from Kentucky will admit that when money is deposited in the national banks the banks always furnish security for that money.

Mr. JAMES. So does every laboring man who pays 8 per cent interest. He has to give security.

Mr. WEEKS. The bulk of the money deposited in national banks is secured by Government bonds.

Mr. JAMES. Oh, no; Secretary Shaw allows them to deposit railroad bonds and municipal bonds. I should say not.

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Kentucky is right. banks of issue must give security by depositing Government bonds. They are like the farmer's trap to catch the coon, they get interests going and coming; they get interest on the money from the people and they get interest on the bonds from the Government. It is a system that can not be beat. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. WEEKS. I do not want to take up the time of the gentleman from Kentucky, but I want to bring out the fact that the banks do deposit security, which is largely Government bonds; that they have to buy these bonds, and they get 2 per cent interest on them.

Mr. JAMES. Frequently 3 and 4. Mr. WEEKS. The bulk of them, 2*per cent. Therefore the

Mr. JAMES. Oh. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield to the gentleman for that. I have heard that argument for the last twenty years about how little the banks make. We know one thing, that whenever the Treasury of the country is open to the national banks and they are allowed to take the money and to lend it to the people, for which the banks pay no interest at all, and they lend it to the people at an interest of 6 or 8 per cent, we all know that they make 6 or 8 per cent profit from the people's money, that is gathered from every avenue in this country by the hand of the taxgatherer. I say the banker has no more right to the people's money without interest than they have themselves.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. If the gentleman will allow me, did not the gentleman from Kentucky vote two years ago to loan it to the banks at 2 per cent, as provided by the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS?

Mr. JAMES. No; I did not. I voted to lend it out to competitive bidders at 2 or 3 or 4 per cent, or whatever interest it would bring at auction by competitive bids rather than to have it loaned to the banks for nothing, as is now the case. But I want to say one thing to my friend from Connecticut, that when this House passed that bill making the bankers turn into the public Treasury six or eight million dollars by requiring them to pay interest on Government deposits it made that bill as dead as a mackerel. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That was the amendment.

Mr. JAMES. Ah, but didn't the amendment pass?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Yes.
Mr. JAMES. And that killed it, because it provided for in-

[Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, in 1896 our contention was that we did not have money enough to meet the business needs of the country; that we should have a larger per capita of circulation. Republicans said we had money enough; that all we needed was confidence. Our per capita circulation in 1896 was $21.41; was confidence. Our per capita circulation in 1896 was $21.41; now it is $33.78. In 1896, with $21.41 per capita, the Republicans said we had enough; now, with $33.78 per capita, they say we have not enough, but should have more, provided, of course, that we shall allow the banks to issue it at 3 per cent, and as I verily believe without any interest, as I shall, I think, presently show. The United States has to-day the largest per capita circulation of any country of the world except The per capita of the principal countries of the world is

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The gentleman has just read the per capita circulation in the various countries of the world. want to ask the gentleman if he does not honestly think that that demolishes his idea about the quantitive theory of money?

Mr. JAMES. No, sir; but I think it absolutely demolishes the idea that you ought to allow the national banks to get their hands further into the Public Treasury. [Applause.] But I notice one thing, that much as you gentlemen disputed the quantitive theory of money, and much as you assailed us and called us anarchists in 1896, because we wanted more money-we did not care whether it was silver or gold, so it was money—you gentlemen saying that there was money enough, yet when you get into power the only way you can get any applause from the people is by turning your backs upon your former doctrines and following the teachings of the Democratic party, as you have done on this question. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the circulation per capita in 1860 was $13.85; to-day it is almost three times that amount. I want to read the per capita circulation of the United States from 1860 to 1907,

Our per capita circulation has advanced from $13.85 in 1860 to $33.78 in 1907. It will be observed that our per capita circulation has been increasing about one hundred millions a year. Our per capita decreased from $24.52 in 1894 to $23.20 in 1895, and further decreased from $23.20 in 1895 to $21.41 in 1896, and it has gradually risen since then at the rate of about $1.30 per capita each year. No stronger argument, to my mind, can be made in favor of a quantitative theory of money than is pre-The circulating medium is increasing at the rate of about one hundred millions annually. I am in favor of large per capita circulation. I am in favor of an abundant supply of money. I believe the prosperity of our country to a great degree depends not only upon the toil, thrift, and industry of our people, but upon a sufficient supply of money to readily perform the business of the country, but I am unwilling to turn the money-issuing function from the Government, to which it rightly belongs, over to the banks that they may profit by getting it for nothing to lend to the people.

Secretary Shaw, in a speech in New York at a banquet given by the Missouri Society on January 31, 1907, used the following language relative to the bill I am now discussing:

PROPOSED BILL FAVORS THE BANKS.

PROPOSED BILL FAVORS THE BANKS.

If any legislation is to be had, let it be solely for the purpose of relieving the country from these frequently recurring stringencies. No plan should be devised primarily to enable the banks to make greater profit. The banks of the country are doing fairly well now and business is prosperous. Nevertheless, we are confronted several times a year with conditions admittedly dangerous. Let a plan be devised which will effectually protect against this danger and all will be well. I doubt not the proposed legislation would prove profitable to national banks, especially elsewhere than in reserve and central reserve cities, but I do not believe it would result in any perceptible elasticity. In other words, its remedial features are inadequate, and remedial legislation is all we need.

Mr. Chairman, when Secretary Shaw sounds the five alarmy

Mr. Chairman, when Secretary Shaw sounds the fire alarm against legislation on the ground that it is too favorable to the bankers, it is time for all Americans to grab a hose; the great surprise is that with the Secretary balking at this legislation that any could be found to advocate it. There is no doubt in the Secretary's mind that this bill would "prove profitable to the national banks." He is entirely convinced that "business is fairly prosperous with them." I can not take issue with him upon this statement, when I review the statement issued on September 4, 1906, by the Secretary of the Treasury, which is as follows

CONDITION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The Treasurer states that on September 4, 1906, there were 6,137 banks with a paid-in capital stock of $835,066,796, with surplus and other profits of $670,814,981. The surplus proper was $490,245,124, which the Treasurer states "is nearly three times the amount required to be accumulated and maintained under the law." He further states that the surplus and other undivided profits amount to over $0 per cent of the paid-in capital. The total liabilities of the banks at that date were $8,016,021,066, over one-half, or $4,199,038,310, being individual deposits. The deposits to the credit of banks amounted to $1.589,001,462, and to the credit of the United States and disbursing offices of the Government, $107,831,814.

It is worthy of comment that nothing is said in the Fowley

It is worthy of comment that nothing is said in the Fowler bill of what is to become of the accumulated interest which the Government holds as trustee only. There is no provision for it to go into the Treasury. My judgment is that it will be held there and when these notes are finally retired then the na-tional banks will come and ask that the money shall be returned to them, saying it was only intended to be a reserve fund and has performed its purpose and is therefore rightly theirs. This will be the next step of the "system." They will urge that it could not have been the purpose of the Government to charge them interest on money when they now get the use of one hundred and sixty millions free of interest, which they secure with bonds-not even always Government bonds-that the 3 per cent required on these notes was only required instead of bonds to make it secure. This would as certainly be their contention in this step as this Government endures.

I am confirmed in my belief upon this question by the bill introduced in the Fifty-seventh Congress by Mr. Fowler, the same author of this present bill now under discussion, which was a similar bill to the one now pending before this House, the difference being in the rate of interest, the interest being in the bill in the Fifty-seventh Congress one-fourth of 1 per cent, payable every six months, or one-half of 1 per cent per year. if it is not the intention of the gentlemen to allow this money to be returned to the bankers and it is to go to the Treasury, then the Democrats, by opposing the bill providing for one-half of 1 per cent interest per year on $215,000,000, which the banks were to have the right to issue, have by this fight saved to the people the difference between one-half of 1 per cent interest and 3 per cent interest now proposed, the sum of 2½ per cent interest yearly upon $215,000,000, or the huge sum of $5,375,000 per year, which, if it should run twenty years, would amount to $107,500,-000. The whole system of allowing national banks to issue money is wrong. If there is money to be made out of issuing money, let the people make it by the Government issuing it. The vicious system which has grown up, and to all quite apparent, only further sustains the contentions and opposition of Thomas Jefferson and Andrew Jackson made in the twilight of the Republic.

The National Bankers' Association have not only told Congress what we should do for them in this bill, but their scope of wisdom is not circumscribed by the narrow limits of finance. They are experts on shipping, for on October 12, 1905, they passed the following resolution:

AMERICAN BANKERS' ASSOCIATION, October 12, 1905.

Resolved by the American Bankers' Association assembled:

1. That the members of this association are deeply interested in any measure which will promote the interest of the whole country commercially and industrially, and especially with reference to our foreign commerce.

2. That we favor and most respectfully urge the passage by Congress of some measure to foster and encourage the upbuilding of our merchant marine and to give us back the prestige upon the high seas which chant marine and to give us back the prestige upon the high seas which we once enjoyed.

3. That we favor the ship-subsidy measure which has received consideration by Congress, which we think would tend to restore our flag upon the seas and build up our merchant marine to the extent that the necessities of our trade now and in the future may demand.

4. That we recommend that our Senators and Congressmen favor some just and equitable measure that will bring about the results and afford the relief above suggested.

5. That through our legislative committee we memorialize the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States with a copy of these resolutions.

resolutions.

These gentlemen don't balk at calling this measure by its These gentlemen don't bank at calling this measure by its right name—a subsidy. Some of its equally ardent friends try to coat over its bitter taste by calling it "a bill to encourage shipping," or a "subvention," but gentlemen so long favored by subsidies from the Treasury think it all right to aid the shipowners, and do not hesitate to so declare. They, however, fa'l to say how much stock they own in the ship monopoly.

Mr. Chairman, in my honest judgment no more un-Americau, un-Democratic, unpatriotic measure ever sought favor at the hands of the people's Representatives. I do not believe the "system" in its wildest dream for gold and graft ever surpassed the demands of this bill. The national bankers, so emboldened by former successes, now brazenly throw off the mask. After already having demanded and received the pound of flesh they now ask for the heart itself. I challenge the patriotism of this House in opposition to this bill. [Applause.]

Let us meet them upon the threshold of this last attempt and tell them plainly that they must stand within this Republic's sacred circle of equal rights to all and special privileges to [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield forty minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Webb].

Mr. Webb. Mr. Chairman, the power to make a treaty is an attribute of sovereignty. A government without the power to conclude treaties can not be either national or sovereign. The various nations of the earth lodge their treaty-making power in the different branches of their governments. In Great Britain the power to conclude a treaty is a prerogative of the Crown, exercised by and with the assistance of a minister.

Prior to 1875, with few exceptions, the King of France had accusive power to execute treaties. The national lawmaking exclusive power to execute treaties. The national lawmaking power in France, however, repudiated the treaty of peace made by King John after the battle of Poitiers, and also the treaty signed by Francis I at Madrid after the loss of the battle of Pavia. These kings, it will be remembered, were actual captives when they executed the treaties, and this may have been the reason which moved their nation to repudiate their acts. Under the French constitution of 1875 the treatymaking power is left to the President. There are certain classes of treaties which he is forbidden to make, however, except with the consent of the national lawmaking power.

The Belgian constitution lodges the treaty-making power in the King, and forbids him to make certain classes of treaties without the consent of the lawmaking power.

In the Netherlands the ruler makes and ratifies treaties, but certain kinds of treaties must be ratified by the States-General before becoming effective.

Likewise in Italy the king alone has the treaty-making power, being forbidden, however, to conclude certain classes of treaties without the consent of the Chambers.

The German constitution of 1871 lodges the treaty-making power in the Emperor, and forbids him making certain kinds of treaties without the consent of the Reichstag.

The King of Spain has the power to make peace treaties and conduct the diplomatic and commercial relations with other powers, but he is expressly forbidden to make certain kinds of treaties unless authorized by law.

In the United States, under the Articles of Confederation, Congress exercised the treaty-making power by appointing commissioners, whose duty it was to originate and conclude treaties, to be afterwards ratified by nine States. From the 4th of July, 1776, to the inauguration of the Government under the Constitution in 1789, the United States concluded fourteen treaties, ten of which were signed by Benjamin Franklin and another commissioner, and three of which were signed by Thomas Jefferson and another commissioner. The Articles of Confederation provided that the sole and exclusive right and power to conclude treaties vested in the Congress, and the States without the consent of Congress were specifically forbidden to enter into any treaty with a foreign prince or state, or alliance, or confederation whatever, or with any other State of the Confederation. The Articles further provided that no treaty should be made by Congress without the assent of nine States. The same articles further prohibited Congress from entering into any treaty whereby the States should be restrained from imposing such duties and imposts on foreigners as their own people were subjected to.

In the convention which gave birth to our present Federal Constitution there was wide difference of opinion among the great men as to where the treaty-making power should be lodged, but the extent of that power or its limitations were not discussed fully; in fact, the debates on that particular subject were strikingly brief. Some of the great minds of that historic body wanted this power lodged in the President alone. Those who were extremely jealous of the rights of the States and suspicious of the enlargement of Executive powers demanded that no treaty should be made without the consent of Congress. Finally the compromise was reached by which it was provided that the President, by and with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senators present, should make The idea seems to have been that the dual existence of the Republic should be recognized, and that in concluding treaties the President would represent the Republic's national existence, while the Senate would represent the States in their sovereignty. The powerful sentiment in favor of protecting the States is seen in that provision of the Constitution requiring the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senators present to make a valid treaty. The idea of requiring two-thirds of the Senators present to ratify a treaty was no doubt taken from the Articles of Confederation, requiring nine States, or two-thirds of the original States, to make a treaty valid. This same remarkable instrument, which Mr. Gladstone said was the "most wonderful work ever struck off in a given time by the brain and purpose of man," provides:

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary.

This clause is a contradiction in itself, for it declares three classes of laws to be supreme. There can not be three supreme laws emanating from the same source. "Supreme" expresses the highest degree, and it is hard to conceive how three different branches of our Government can possess this extreme superiority. The fact that a treaty forbidden by the Constitution, or an act of Congress not permitted by that instrument, are void and must give way shows conclusively that neither is really and actually supreme, but are necessarily subordinate in some respects. I well conceive how a treaty made entirely within the scope of the treaty-making power is the supreme law of the land in its own particular field, and the same might be said of an act of Congress when it does not conflict with the Constitution, with a subsequent treaty, or the reserved powers of the State.

The fact that this is a constitutional Republic precludes the idea of absolutely unlimited power anywhere and negatives the doctrine of absolute supremacy in any one department of our Government. However, the interesting question is, What is the extent of the treaty-making power under our Constitution and what are its limitations? The Federal Government during its existence of more than a hundred years has executed more than 300 treaties according to the provisions laid down in the Constitution, and yet where is the man so bold as to undertake to define the treaty-making power of the Federal Government or the limitations that can be placed upon that power? This power is undefined and undefinable. No arm of our Government seems so little comprehended.

There are those who contend that because the States before the formation of the Union had the right to make treaties with foreign nations, when the States agreed to delegate the treaty-making power to the President and Senate that immediately the President and Senate were clothed with absolute power and right to make any treaty affecting any State constitution or law which those States had the power to make before the adoption of the Constitution. The States, in forming the Constitution, delegated in unequivocal terms the sole and entire treaty-making power to the Federal Government, and went so far as to forbid any State to make any treaty. If this view is correct—and I do not assent to it—then any treaty made in accordance with the formalities prescribed by the Constitution is superior to all the reserved powers of the States, notwithstanding the tenth amendment to the Constitution, which would mean that all the reserved powers are not reserved, but confided to the President and Senate.

There are others who contend that no treaty is valid which contravenes the Federal Constitution or any State law any State constitution, if the said State law or constitution is within the reserved powers of the State. Both of these contentions have much in our legislative, judicial, and political history that tends to sustain them. However, this last contention has been apparently somewhat shaken by Supreme Court decisions, which I will notice further on in this discourse.

It may be said generally that the treaty-making power does not extend so far as to authorize that which the Constitution itself forbids, nor can a treaty change the character of our Government or that of any State. This power, while full and to a degree supreme, must always "be exercised agreeably to the fundamental principles of liberty," which form the foundation stones of our Republic. The power must, therefore, be exercised to maintain and preserve our national life, and not encroach upon it or destroy it. No further general limitations than these can be gathered either from the Constitution or from the opinions of the Supreme Court for more than a century. In view of the dual existence of our Government—State sovereignty coexistent with national sovereignty—there is no power in the Constitution so difficult to define and so impossible of limiting by any one definition.

It is generally understood, and has been declared more than once by the Supreme Court, that a treaty can not contravene any provision of the Federal Constitution, and yet we find the Supreme Court, notwithstanding the right of trial by jury guaranteed in that instrument, has upheld a treaty which provided for the trial of an American citizen by an American consul in Japan without indictment by grand jury or hearing before petit jury, in which trial one Ross was convicted by the consul of murder and sentenced by him to be hanged.

The Constitution declares that a treaty is the supreme law of the land, and yet our highest court has held that Congress itself can repeal any treaty, though made according to constitutional requirements; and, on the other hand, it is generally admitted, and so held by our courts, that a treaty executed after the passage of an act of Congress is superior to such legislative act, which indicates that an act of Congress and a treaty are coordinate in their effect, and whenever they conflict they are regarded as legislative enactments, and the last one is held to be the law of the land by repealing the former.

Whenever a treaty is concluded which requires legislative enactment to make it effective, such a treaty remains inoperative until the Congress has enacted the necessary legislation.

A treaty can not usurp the power which the Constitution expressly lodges in the Congress, and although the Constitution says that a treaty is the supreme law of the land, yet such an instrument stipulating the payment of sums of money to foreign powers can be rendered nugatory by the refusal of Congress to appropriate money for this purpose, for the Constitution expressly provides that no money shall be paid out of the Public Treasury unless Congress so directs.

A treaty which undertakes to levy customs duties, although declared to be the supreme law of the land, becomes invalid unless Congress shall ratify the same, for the reason that the Constitution provides that all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. It is therefore clear that a treaty is not the supreme law of the land whenever an act of Congress is required to make it effective. No treaty, therefore, can compel Congress to appropriate money, because the representatives of the people are responsible only to their constituents and are not dependent upon the treaty-making power, and a high authority says that "every foreign government may be presumed to know that when a freaty stipulates the payment of money the legislative sanction is required."

The rights of aliens in this country have usually been defined in our treaties with foreign countries, but the Congress of the United States has the undoubted power to bar or deport aliens regardless of any treaty, or all treaties, which the President and Senate may have made to the contrary.

Congress has the power under the Constitution to declare war, but the President and Senate by treaty can terminate it at any time without Congressional sanction, and no legislative act is required to give the treaty-making power the right to "transform the condition of war established by the declarations of Congress into the condition of peace established by treaty." In fact, all the great wars between the United States and foreign powers have been terminated by the President and Senate—namely, the war of 1812, the war with Mexico, and the war with Spain.

The question of the power of treaties of cession and their limitation is one of great perplexity, and one upon which the greatest legal minds from the beginning of the Government to the present time have had different opinions. The United States have acquired territory by legislative enactment and by treaty. The Republic of Texas and the Hawaiian Islands are the only instances where territory has been acquired by legislative enactment, and by mutual enactment on the part of the Republics of Texas and Hawaii, In these instances the Republic of Texas and the Government of Hawaii became extinct and each ceased to be an independent power. Many authors, and the Supreme Court itself, have discussed the question as to whether the treaty-making power can cede territory belonging to a State of the Union without the consent of such State.

In the Constitutional Convention Colonel Mason, in urging

In the Constitutional Convention Colonel Mason, in urging the right of the House of Representatives alone to originate bills for raising revenue, declared that he did so because "he was extremely anxious to take this power from the Senate, which could already sell the whole country by means of treaties."

Mr. Mercer contended that treaties could not alter the laws of the land till ratified by Congress. Colonel Mason contended that the Senate and President could alienate territory without Congressional sanction. "If Spain should possess herself of Georgia," said he, "therefore the Senate might by treaty dis-member the Union." The distinguished John Bassett Moore, in his work on International Law, says that nothing in contradiction of this statement is reported to have been said in the Constitutional Convention. Jefferson, however, in 1792, when Secretary of State, gave instructions that the right to alienate even a part of the territory of any State did not belong to the Central Government. He seems to have admitted, however, in another part of the same writing, that as a result of a disastrous war United States territory might be abandoned. Alexander Hamilton differed with Jefferson on this question, and contended that the treaty-making power could alienate United States territory, especially if the territory were uninhabited. When the northeastern boundary dispute arose in 1842, the question of the power to cede a State's territory by treaty universally discussed. Judge Story declared that he did not think it universally true that territory within a State could not be ceded to a foreign nation, since such a cession might, for example, be indispensable to purchase peace, or might be of a nature calculated for the safety of both nations, or be an equiva-lent for a like cession on the other side. He further said that Chief Justice Marshall, in a conversation with him, said that he was unequivocally of the opinion that the treaty-making power did extend to cession of territory, although he would not under-take to say it could extend to all cases; yet he did not doubt that it must be construed to extend to some. boundary disputes have always been settled by treaty, but a United States treaty in only one case has ever professed to cede territory belonging to a State, but even in this case the consent of the interested States to the provisions of the treaty was obtained. Kent, in his Commentaries, lays it down that the power of cession belongs exclusively to the United States, though a sound discretion might forbid its exercise without the consent of the local government, except in cases of great necessity, when their consent might be presumed. The eminent writer, Duer, maintained this view also. Woolsey suggests that a whole State could be wiped out of existence if the extreme necessity arose.

In Geoffroy v. Riggs the court says in a dictum that the consent of a State is necessary to a cession of its territory. Justice White, in the Insular cases, says that "a State's territory can not be alienated by the action of the treaty-making power alone, but it might be done from the exigency of a calamitous war, or necessity of the settlement of boundaries if such action be expressly or impliedly ratified by Congress." The weight of authority, therefore, is that ordinarily no part of a State's territory can be ceded away from it by treaty without the State's consent, and yet it is undoubtedly true that the weight of authority is also to the effect that in extreme cases an entire State could be ceded to a foreign power if necessary to preserve the national existence.

The most interesting question to-day is as to what extent the treaty-making power can supersede a State law or State constitution. The construction of treaties and United States statutes is comparatively easy, but when we come to consider the treaty-making power and the power of the States we tread upon much unmarked ground, for there is no one who can say specifically what the power of each is as regards the other. It is agreed that Congress can not pass a law interfering with State statutes in regard to the descent of property, as this would be interfering with the internal affairs of a State, and yet it has been decided by the Supreme Court that such State statutes in so far as they apply to foreigners can be absolutely set aside and nullified by treaty stipulations, which is another way of saying that the treaty-making power extends farther into the local matters of States than acts of Congress. It is interesting to note that of the 300 treaties concluded by the United States since 1776 not one of them has ever been declared unconstitutional.

The weight of authority is to the effect that a treaty properly ratified, concerning a subject within the treaty-making sphere, is superior to any State constitution or State law, although Mr. Calhoun contended that a treaty could not affect matters wholly within the State's jurisdiction to any greater extent than Congress could do so; but the Supreme Court has expressly over-ruled this view. He further contended that the supremacy of the treaty-making power was not absolute, but limited both in extent and degree; that it did not extend beyond the delegated powers, all others being reserved to the States and to the people of the States. He said:

* * Beyond these the Constitution is destitute of authority and is as powerless as a blank piece of paper, and the measures of government mere acts of assumption.

The fact that the Federal Government is a Government of delegated powers proves that there is sovereignty left in the States. Full sovereignty was originally in the people of the States and only a portion of their sovereignty was given to the National Government. Yet the extent of that sovereignty which still resides in the States has never yet been accurately defined, and it is only possible to define it as each particular case arises.

In Ware v. Hylton, decided in 1796, the court said that if it had the power to declare a treaty void, it would never exercise that power except in a very clear case. Such a case has never arisen, as no treaty has yet been declared unconstitutional. The courts have always regarded it as their duty to construe treaties.

In the Passenger cases, decided in 1849, Chief Justice Taney said:

The first inquiry is whether, under the Constitution of the United States, the Federal Government has the power to compel the several States, the Federal Government has the power to compel the several States, the Federal Government has the power to compel the several States to receive and suffer to remain in association with its citizens every person or class of persons whom it may be the policy or pleasure of the United States to admit. In my judgment, this question lies at the foundation of the controversy in this case. I do not mean to say that the General Government have, by treaty or act of Congress, required the State of Massachusetts to permit aliens in question to land. I think there is no treaty or act of Congress which can justly be so construed. But it is not necessary to examine that question until we have first inquired whether Congress can lawfully exercise such a power and whether the States are bound to submit to it. For if the people of the several States of this Union reserved to themselves the power of expelling from their borders any person or class of persons whom it might deem dangerous to its peace or likely to produce a physical or moral evil among its citizens, then any treaty or law of Congress invading this right, and authorizing the introduction of any person or description of persons against the consent of the State, would be an ansurpation of power which this court could neither recognize nor enforce. I had supposed this question not now open to dispute.

In 1866, in the case of the United States v. Rhodes, Judge

In 1866, in the case of the United States v. Rhodes, Judge Swayne said:

A treaty is declared by the Constitution to be the law of the land. But adds:

What is unwarranted or forbidden by the Constitution can no more be done in one way than in another. The authority of the National Government is limited, though supreme in its sphere of operation. As compared with the State governments, the subjects upon which it operates are few in number. Its objects are all national. It is one wholly of delegated powers. The States possess all which they have not surrendered; the Government of the Union only such as the Constitution has given it, expressly or incidentally, and by reasonable intendment. Whenever an act of that Government is challenged a grant of power must be shown or the act is void.

But even this expression of opinion on the part of Judge Swayne was obiter and not essential to the decision of the point at bar.

The people on the Pacific slope, and especially those of the State of California, and more particularly those of the city of San Francisco, were thrown into a state of fright, which almost amounted to furor, by the vigorous words of the President in his message to the present session of Congress, wherein he declared his purpose, if need be, to exhaust the civil and military power at his command to enforce the provisions of the "most-favored-nation" clause of the Japanese treaty in regard to separate public schools in the city of San Francisco. Since that time the attention of lawyers and public men everywhere has been sharply drawn to the question of the treaty-making power as it affects the States, and to the specific question as to whether the Japanese, under the treaty of 1894, can compel their admission to the white schools of California. Many years ago the legislature of that State passed a law empowering school trustees, whenever they should see-fit, to establish separate schools for Indians, Mongolians, and for the children of Chinese or Mongolian descent, and providing further that when such schools were established, Indian and Chinese children, or children, of Mongolian descent, must not be permitted to attend the white schools.

The number of Japanese in San Francisco and California has been growing very rapidly for the past ten years, until at the present time it is claimed that more than a thousand Japanese enter the port of San Francisco every month, and that there are more than 50,000 Japanese wage-earners in California at present. The rapidly increasing number of these people constrained the authorities to establish separate schools for orientals and others provided for in the statutes. The Japanese in their controversy with the United States contend, as I understand it from the public press, that Article I of the treaty of 1894, which declares—

That in whatever relates to the rights of residence and travel the citizens or subjects of each contracting party shall enjoy in the territories of the other the same privileges, liberties, and rights, and shall be subjected to no higher imposts or charges in these respects than native citizens and subjects, or citizens and subjects of the most-favored nation—gives them the right to attend the white schools of the Commonwealth of California, or, for that matter, anywhere in the United States. This contention and the President's threat alarm the people of California. If the situation were changed a little many other States of the Union would be alarmed also. I noted in the press dispatches of a few days ago that the legislature of California had directed her attorney-general to defend the suit instituted by the Federal Government in behalf of the Japanese and had appropriated $10,000 for the employment of extra counsel. It thus appears that the people of California are terribly in earnest and are determined to fight to the bitter end any effort to force orientals into their white public schools. The Supreme Court will now be called upon to decide whether or not the treaty rights of the subjects of the Mikado are violated by this statute providing for the separate schools, and if violated by the statute, then to say whether or not the State of California has the right in managing her internal affairs, in pursuance of the police powers reserved to her by the makers of the Constitution, to enact and enforce her school laws. No one will contend that the Congress of the United States can pass a law nullifying her school act in this respect. Has, then, the Senate and President more power than Congress in this respect? Dr. John Bassett Moore says:

That a treaty is no more the supreme law of the land than is an act of Congress is shown by the fact that an act of Congress vacates pro tanto a prior inconsistent treaty. Whenever, therefore, an act of Congress would be unconstitutional, as invading the reserved rights of the States, a treaty by the same effect would be unconstitutional.

If the Supreme Court should decide that the Japanese have the right to force themselves into the white schools of California, then every subject of Great Britain, whether he be the black man of Jamaica, the Mongolian from Hongkong, or the Hottentot from South Africa, would have the right to enter any white public school in the United States. So it will at once be appreciated by people everywhere that the question now at issue is a very grave one, and its determination may have very far-reaching effect if it be decided in favor of the Japanese contention.

However, as I come from a section of this Republic where the conviction is innate that the Caucasian race is superior to the Mongolian as well as to the African—in fact, superior to all other races [applause]—I must be pardoned for looking at the problem from the standpoint of a southern Caucasian, and also from the standpoint of a lawyer who has read the decisions of our Supreme Court on questions very much akin and parallel to the Japanese question under discussion. I am aware that the Supreme Court has uttered many strong general expressions in regard to the treaty-making power. For instance, I quote from the opinion of Judge Cushing, delivered in the famous case of Ware v. Hylton, decided one hundred and eleven years ago. The judge says:

The State may make what rules it pleases, and those rules must necessarily have place within itself. But here is a treaty, the supreme law, which overrules all State laws on the subject to all intents and purposes; and that makes the difference. There is no want of power, a treaty being sanctioned as the supreme law by the Constitution of the United States, which nobody pretends to deny to be paramount and controlling to all State laws, and even State constitutions, wheresoever they interfere or disagree.

The court which passed upon this famous case, which has been affirmed many times since, was composed of judges some of whom had taken part in the Constitutional Convention, and therefore had large understanding of the opinions of members of the convention as to the limit and extent of the treaty-making power. I am aware that Judge Iredell, of my own State, dissented, but his dissent was not based upon the treaty-making power, but upon the application of the particular treaty executed before the Constitution was formed to the case at bar. All fair-minded lawyers must admit that the general principles enunciated in Ware v. Hylton are the law to-day as much so as a hundred years ago, and, in fact, our Supreme Court during all of its history has adhered strictly to this case as leading authority.

In Pollard's case, the judge writing the opinion of the court among other things said:

In Ware v. Hylton it was held that the treaty of peace repealed and nullified all State laws by its own operation, revived the debt. removed all lawful impediments, and was a supreme law, which overrules all State laws on the subject, to all intents and purposes; and is of equal force and effect as the Constitution itself. In Hopkirk v. Bell the treaty was held to repeal the Virginia statute of limitations. In Hunter v. Martin the treaty of 1794 was held to be the supreme law of the land; that as a public law it was a part of every case before the court and so completely governed it that in a case where a treaty was ratified after the rendition of a judgment in the circuit court which was impeachable on no other ground than the effect of a treaty the judgment was reversed on that ground. All treatles, compacts, and articles of agreement in the nature of treatles to which the United States are parties have ever been held to be the supreme law of the land, executing themselves by their own flat, having the same effect as an act of Congress, and of equal force with the Constitution.

In Hauenstein v. Lynham, decided in 1879, Judge Swayne, delivering the opinion of the Supreme Court, among other things

There can be no limitation on the power of the people of the United States. By their authority the State constitutions were made, and by their authority the Constitution of the United States was established; and they had the power to change or abolish the State constitutions or make them yield to the General Government and treaties made by their authority. A treaty can not be the supreme law of the land—that is, of all the United States—if any act of the State legislature can stand in its way. If the constitution of a State must give way to a treaty and fall before it, can it be questioned whether the less power, an act of the State legislature, must not be prostrate before it? If a law of a State contrary to a treaty is not void, but voidable only by a repeal or nullification of a State legislature, this certain consequence follows, that the will of a small part of the United States may control or defeat the will of the whole.

In Geoffrov v. Riggs, decided in 1889, Judge Fields says:

In Geoffroy v. Riggs, decided in 1889, Judge Fields says:

That the treaty-making power of the United States extends to all proper subjects of negotiation between our Government and the governments of other nations is clear.

Mr. Butler asserts that no matter what grievance a State may have in regard to an international matter, it can only obtain relief through the Central Government, and that the State has no power to deal with foreign nations interested, neither has it power to legislate within its own territory in any way which affects a foreign power or citizens of a foreign power having treaty relations with the United States if such legislation violates in any manner existing treaty stipulations or provisions.

In 1879 the United States circuit court of Oregon held that a statute of Oregon prohibiting the employment of Chinese on public works was void because it conflicted with our treaty with China. This was in no sense a police regulation. In this opinion the presiding judge said:

Admit the wedge of State interference even ever so little and there is nothing to prevent its being driven home and destroying the treaty and overriding the treaty-making power altogether.

In 1879 California in her new constitution prohibited corporations from employing Chinese labor. The legislature at once enacted statutes making such employment a misdemeanor. whereupon one Parrott was arrested for violating this statute. The case came before Judge Sawyer, of the United States circuit court of California, who, among other things, said:

The States have surrendered the treaty-making power to the Government and vested it in the President and Senate; when duly exercised by the President and Senate the treaty resulting is the supreme law of the land, to which not only State laws but State constitutions are in express terms subordinated.

The learned judge declared the constitutional provision enacted thereunder void, as conflicting with the Chinese treaty.

In the case of Chy Lung v. Freeman, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1875, Justice Miller declared void a statute of California which was ostensibly passed to close California's doors to lewd and debauched women. This statute was general in its terms, but was really directed at Chinese women. The court held the statute void because it went beyond the necessities of State control and invaded the right of the National Legislature to regulate commerce.

In 1880 it was decided by the United States circuit court of California that a State law prohibiting aliens who could not be naturalized from fishing in public waters was void because it violated stipulations in the Chinese treaty as discriminating against the subjects of that Kingdom and in favor of other aliens, since Chinese could not be naturalized.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.
Mr. GARRETT. Was not that case of Ware v. Hylton a case that involved a treaty that was adopted before the Con-

Mr. WEBB. A peace treaty. That is one difference, too. It was a peace treaty adopted prior to the creation of our present Federal Constitution. I believe that treaty with England was concluded in September, 1783, while our Constitution was not formed until 1789.

In the famous Chinese Queue cases, decided by the circuit court of California in 1879, an ordinance of the city of San Francisco providing that every person imprisoned in the county jail upon a criminal judgment upon arriving at the jail should have his hair clipped to the uniform length of 1 inch from the scalp, was declared void on the ground that the ordinance was in conflict with the fourteenth amendment, which prevents discrimination against a particular class of people, and on the further ground that it was aimed at certain aliens, the Chinese, and was void because it contravened certain stipulations of the Chinese treaty. This case was never carried to the Supreme Court. The able judge who delivered the opinion in this case expressed correctly the feeling which even then existed against the Chinese in California, and also expressed the feeling which now seems to exist in that State against the Japaneses. anese:

We are aware-He said-of the general feeling, amounting to positive hostility, prevailing in California against the Chinese, which would prevent their further immigration hither and expel from the State those already here. Their dissimilarity in physical characteristics, in language, manners, and religion would seem, from past experience, to prevent the possibility of their assimilation with our people. And thoughtful persons, looking at the millions which crowd the opposite shores of the Pacific and the possibility at no distant day of their pouring over in vast hordes among us, giving rise to ferce antagonism of race, hope that some way may be devised to prevent their further immigration. We feel the force and importance of these considerations; but the remedy for the apprehended evil is to be sought from the General Government, where, except in certain special cases, all power over the subject lies.

In 1827, and since that time, the supreme court of Illinois has decided that treaty stipulations are paramount to State statutes affecting descents and disposals of property.

In Iowa the court has held in several cases that nonresident aliens can inherit property when United States treaty stipulations remove the disabilities of aliens.

Tennessee, by her supreme court, as early as 1826, declared the superiority of proper treaties over all State statutes. In the case of Cornet v. Winton the judge writing the opinion

Shall it be allowed the State legislatures, by their acts, to oppose and prevent the executing of a treaty in which the whole Union is interested? Must the whole Union, because of the misconduct of one State, be forced into a war? A treaty should be a law operating immediately and directly upon the people. If the legislatures must be applied to to pass laws for the execution of treaties which are in any respect burthensome they will never do it.

The supreme court of Kentucky in 1862 also decided that a proper treaty had precedence over any State law. The Michigan supreme court, 1859, declared that-

When a treaty has been made by the proper Federal authorities, and ratified, it becomes the law of the land, and the courts have no power to question or in any manner look into the powers or rights of the nation or tribe with whom it is made.

Even in 1788, before the present Constitution went into effect, the Pennsylvania courts upheld the supremacy of the treaties, and in 1806 declared their superiority over a provision in the constitution of that State. This was rendered in Gordon v. Carr in the United States circuit court of Pennsylvania. Massachusetts has followed the general ruling and sustained treaty stipulations where they conflict with state statutes.

I believe I have quoted in the foregoing opinions the strongest expressions that can be found in our Supreme Court reports in favor of the large and almost limitless power and effect of the treaty, but it is readily seen that the particular cases passed upon are not "on all fours" with the present Japanese controversy and rarely affected the police powers of the States.

I now wish to cite a few authorities that tend to sustain more strongly the rights of the States to govern their internal affairs in the full exercise of the police powers which are still reserved to them; and upon these grounds our Federal courts in many instances have refused to interfere with State action concerning matters under State control.

Treaties may be made on all subjects by the United States not inconsistent with its nature or its relations with the States. (Holden v. Joy, 17 Wall., 243.)

Laws and treaties of the United States in order to be binding must be within the legitimate powers vested by the Constitution in the General Government. (Daniel, Judge, License cases, 5

How., 613.)
Mr. Butler, in his work on the treaty-making power of the United States, says:

The Constitution provides that all powers not delegated to the United States nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people, and certainly the police power is reserved to the States.

In 1885 the Supreme Court of the United States declared that a municipal ordinance of San Francisco imposing regulations and restrictions upon laundries, and which ordinance was aimed directly at the Chinese in that State, was valid. The court further held that such regulations of laundries was a question which came within the rights of the municipality. The ordinance was a constant. nance in question prohibited washing and ironing in public laundries within certain territorial limits of the city within the hours of 10 o'clock at night and 6 in the morning. The court distinctly declared that this was a police regulation, and sustained it as such.

As to what subject the treaty power extends, we find Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Practice says:

(1) It is admitted that it must concern foreign nations, or it would be a nullity, res inter allos acta.

(2) By the general power to make treatles the Constitution must have intended to comprehend only those objects which are usually regulated by treaty and can not be otherwise regulated.

(3) It must have meant to except out of these the rights reserved to the States, for surely the President and Senate can not do by treaty what the whole Government is interdicted from doing in any way.

(4) And also to except those subjects of legislation in which it gave a participation to the House of Representatives.

In the United States—says Judge Brewer, in the matter of Heff (197 United States, there is a dual system of government, national and State, each of which is supreme within its own domain, and it is one of the chief functions of this court to preserve the balance between them.

In 1857 the New York court of appeals declared that an act of the legislature prohibiting intrusion on certain Indian lands within the State, notwithstanding the treaty of 1842, was a police regulation, and that the State had the right to enact such a law and could not be deprived of the right to exercise such power to preserve the peace. This case was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court. (Cutler v. Dibble, 21 Howard.)

We find in the opinion of the court, among other things:

The statute in question is a police regulation for the protection of the Indians from white people and to preserve the peace. It is the dictate of a prudent and just policy. The power of a State to make such regulations to preserve the peace of the community is absolute and has never been surrendered.

Possession and enjoyment of all rights are subject to such reasonable condition as may be deemed by the governing authority essential to safety, health, peace, and good order of the community. (Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S., 89.)

In 1893 the United States circuit court of South Carolina held that the State dispensary statute did not contravene the rights of Italian citizens to freely carry on business in this country as guaranteed them in the Italian treaty of 1871. Simonton, in his opinion, after referring to the treaty stipula-

Under these articles the complainants have the same rights as citizens of the United States. It would be absurd to say they had greater rights. The police power is a right reserved by the States and has not been delegated to the General Government. In its lawful exercise the States are absolutely sovereign. Such exercise can not be affected by any treaty stipulations. Salus populi suprema lex.

The distinguished writer on the treaty-making power, Mr. Butler, has well declared:

The Supreme Court has in regard to treaties, as it has in regard to Federal statutes, ever kept in view the exclusive right of the States to regulate their internal affairs, and have not allowed either treaty stipulations or Federal statutes to be so construed as to prevent the proper exercise of police powers.

In the License cases (5 How., 504), Judge McLean said

A State regulates its domestic commerce, contracts, the transmission of estates, real and personal, and acts upon all internal matters which relate to its moral and political welfare. Over these subjects the Federal Government has no power.

In Foster v. Kansas (112 U. S.) the court said:

These cases rest upon the acknowledged right of the States of the Union to control their purely internal affairs, and in so doing to protect the health, morals, and safety of their people by regulations that do not interfere with the execution of the powers of the General Government or violate rights secured by the Constitution of the United States. The power to establish such regulations, as was said in Gibbons r. Ogden (Wheat, 1) reaches everything within the territory of a State not surrendered to the National Government.

In Patterson v. Kentucky (97 U. S., 501) on this particular question the court says:

But obviously this right is not granted or secured without reference to the general powers which the several States of the Union unques-tionably possess over their purely domestic affairs, whether of internal commerce or of police.

Judge Miller, fifteen years after he had written his famous opinion in the Slaughterhouse cases, which opinion will ever remain a monument to his ability, integrity, and fearlessness,

The necessity of the great powers conceded by the Constitution to the Federal Government originally, and the equal necessity of the autonomy of the States and their power to regulate their domestic affairs, remain as the great features of our complex form of government.

This able jurist in his remarkable opinion in the Slaughterhouse cases, speaking of the police power, said:

This power is and must be from its very nature incapable of any very exact definition or limitation. Upon it depends the security of social order, life and health of the citizen, the comfort of an existence in a thickly populated community, the enjoyment of private and social life, and the beneficial use of property.

Judge Miller then quotes Chief Justice Marshall in Gibbons

v. Ogden, wherein Judge Marshall, speaking of inspection laws and the police powers, said:

They form a portion of that immense mass of legislation which comprises everything within the control of a State not surrendered to the General Government—all which can be most advantageously administered by the States themselves.

A statute of New York which required every master of a vessel arriving from a foreign port in that of the city of New York must report the names of all his passengers, with certain particulars as regards their age, their last place of settlement and place of their birth, was held not to be an invasion of the exclusive right of Congress to regulate commerce, but that such a statute was within the exercise of the police power of the State.

In the case of The United States v. De Witt an act of Congress which made it a misdemeanor to mix naphtha and illuminating oils for sale or to sell oil of petroleum inflammable at less than a prescribed temperature was declared void because the power to make such a law belonged to the State as a police regulation and Congress had nothing to do with such a matter, even though it undertook to make it a part of the internalrevenue law.

In the case of Railway v. Mississippi, decided in 1890 by the Supreme Court of the United States, the State statute of Mississippi providing that railroads carrying passengers in that State should provide separate but equal accommodations for the white and colored races was upheld as being entirely within the power of the State to pass such a law.

In the celebrated case of Plessy v. Ferguson (163 U. S.) it was decided that a Louisiana statute requiring railroad companies to provide equal but separate accommodations for the white and colored races, and providing that no person should be permitted to occupy coaches other than those assigned to them on account of the race to which they belonged, and further requiring the officers of the railroad company to assign to each passenger the coach to which his race designated him, and imposing penalties upon any passenger insisting on going into any other car than the one set aside for him according to his race was constitutional and not in conflict with the thirteenth and four-teenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, but was entirely within the police power of the State. Brown, in the opinion, says: Justice

We think the enforced separation of the races as applied to the internal commerce of a State neither abridges the privileges or immunities of the colored man, deprives him of his property without due process of law, nor denies him the equal protection of the laws, within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment.

The learned judge, quoting from People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y.,

When the Government, therefore, has secured to each of its citizens equal rights before the law and equal opportunities for improvement and progress, it has accomplished the end for which it was organized and performed all the functions respecting social advantages with which it is endowed.

Legislation is powerless to eradicate racial instincts—

Says the eminent judge-or to abolish distinctions based upon physical differences, and attempts to do so can only result in accentuating the difficulties of the present situation. If the civil and political rights of both races be equal, one can not be inferior to the other civilly or politically. If one race be inferior to the other socially, the Constitution of the United States can not put them on the same plane.

[Applause.]

I take it, therefore, that no lawyer who cares anything for his professional reputation will deny that if the separation of races on railroad cars is a police regulation, likewise the separation of races in public free schools is a similar police regulation—in fact, the two cases are "on all fours." One of the earliest cases declaring that the States have a right to make provision for the instruction of colored children in separate schools established for them and prohibiting their attendance upon other schools is that of Robinson v. City of Boston (5 Cushing, 198), and this opinion is quoted with approval in Cushing, 198), and this opinion is quoted with approval in Plessy v. Ferguson. The further assertion is made in that celebrated case that "similar laws have been enacted by Congress under its general power of legislation over the District of Columbia, as well as by the legislatures of many States, and have been generally, if not uniformly, sustained by the courts."

Now, we have seen that a law passed by a State legislature in the exercise of her police power is a supreme enactment, and therefore no Federal Constitution or treaty can vary, amend, or annul it any more than a State legislature could repeal the fifteenth amendment to the United States Constitution. exerci e of police powers the States are supreme and absolutely free from aggressions, whether in the form of Federal enactments or treaty stipulations. [Applause.] And in the exercise of police powers there is a large discretion given to the legislature as to whether or not their police regulations are reasonable and as to whether or not such regulations are wise or unwise is beyond the power of the Federal courts to correct. (Patterson

v. Kentucky, 97 U. S., 504; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S., 553.)
No treaty executed by the United States, within my knowledge, has ever undertaken to give an alien any rights superior to those enjoyed by our own citizens. I think a treaty which should undertake such a thing would be void as unconstitu-tional. Could, then, the State of California pass a law requir-ing separate coaches for the Japanese and whites? The State has a right to do it with reference to her own citizens, and unless a treaty undertakes to give larger rights and privileges to aliens than natives possess, most certainly such a State law would be valid. Shall it be contended that the black man of Jamaica, a subject of Great Britain, taking up residence in any of the States that have separate passenger-car laws, could force himself into white cars when an adjoining car on the same train is occupied by native negro passengers who would not have this same right?

State laws forbidding the intermarriage of certain races are held universally to be within the police powers of the State. State can forbid the marriage within her borders of any white person and negro, which would prevent a white Englishman from marrying a negro woman, no matter what a treaty might provide in this regard. In like manner, could a marriage between a white person and a Japanese be prohibited, or a white person and an Indian?

The public free school is wholly a State institution, to the maintenance of which the Federal Government does not contribute a penny. The States have the absolute right to establish public free schools or to refuse to have one within their borders. Neither the Constitution nor the Congress has any power to coerce a State into establishing a free public school system. Neither can Congress nor the Constitution prohibit a State from enacting a law requiring different native races to attend different schools. Then, if Congress and the Constitution can not force a State to admit black or brown pupils into white schools, how can the treaty-making power, which gets its force and vitality from the Constitution, compel such action? [Applause.]

The free-school privilege of California is a gift to the Japanese which they are not compelled by any law, regulation or ordinance to accept. The only condition which the State attaches to the gift is that, if they do accept it, they must do so in certain school buildings, which are as comfortable as those in which the whites attend school and in which they find training equal in quality and duration to that of the white schools, It is the height of oriental conceit to demand more; it is the climax of Japanese swellheadedness to persist in their demand. [Applause.] This insistence in demanding that they be allowed to attend white schools proves their unifiness to enjoy such a privilege. [Applause.] The sons of Nippon should be made to understand that notwithstanding their recent victory over decrepit Russia they can not compel the young Giant of the West to abrogate her laws or destroy her customs simply to meet the Japanese caprice or tickle Japanese vanity. [Applause.]

Take another view of the case. Suppose California should abolish her public free schools. Suppose, then, a citizen of Great Britain, residing in New York State, attends New York free schools under the "most favored nation" clause of the English treaty. Now, could a citizen of Japan, residing in California, compel that State to establish free schools for him to attend, on the ground that subjects of Great Britain enjoyed free-school privileges in New York? Carrying the treaty-making powers to the extent that some would have us go, a Japanese subject residing in North Carolina could compel that State to give him a ten months' school term instead of four months, because a subject of Great Britain in the State of New York has the privilege of a ten months' term.

Of course this is absurd, and shows clearly that the public schools and all rules and regulations governing their administration, even unto the separation of the sexes and races, are entirely in the control of the States that establish them, and every person, including foreigners of most favored nations, must accept such schooling under such length of term, rules, and regulations as the State of his residence prescribes. Could a Japanese girl compel the State authorities to admit her into the separate male schools, set apart for male students alone? If not, why not? The question answers itself. Does anyone contend that a white pupil of San Francisco could compel his admission to the oriental school in the face of a provision of the State statute, or even a regulation of the school board forbidding same?

My own conviction is that no treaty can grant foreigners in the United States any greater privileges and immunities than a citizen of the United States has the right to demand and enjoy under the Federal Constitution, and these privileges and immunities are: The right to life, liberty, ownership of property, and the equal protection of the laws. "Equal protection of the does not grant to everyone the right to attend any school within the State, nor does it guarantee social equality. This clause in the Constitution and the treaty stipulation in question are entirely met and satisfied when a State furnishes, as in the case of California, to the oriental schools teachers of equal competence, terms of equal length, and schoolhouses of equal comfort with those of the white schools; and this it is admitted is between the white and colored races—a distinction which is founded in the color of the two races, and which must always exist so long as white men are distinguished from the other race by color—has no tendency to destroy the legal equality of the two races. (163 U. S., tendency to destroy the legal equality of the two races. (163 U. S., 543.)

A statute which implies merely a legal distinction-Says Judge Brown-

Laws permitting, and even requiring, their separation in places where they are liable to be brought into contact do not necessarily imply the inferiority of either race to the other, and have been generally, if not universally, recognized as within the competency of the State legislatures in the exercise of their police power. The most common instance of this is connected with the establishment of separate schools for white and colored children, which has been held to be a valid exercise of the legislative power even by courts of States where the political rights of the colored race have been longest and most earnestly enforced. (163 U. S., 544.)

We consider the underlying fallacy of the plaintiff's argument to consist in the assumption that the enforced separation of the two races stamps the colored race with a badge of inferiority. If this be so, it is not by reason of anything found in the act, but solely because the colored race chooses to put that construction upon it. The argument necessarily assumes that if, as has been more than once the case, and is not unlikely to be so again, the colored race should become the dominant power in the State legislature, and should enact a law in precisely similar terms, it would thereby relegate the white race to an inferior position. We imagine that the white race, at least, would not acquiesce in this assumption. (163 U. S., 551).

No one would contend that every Japanese student would have

No one would contend that every Japanese student would have the right to be taught by one particular teacher, in one particular room, or in one particular part of the city, if his whim should so dictate, just because some other pupil of school age was so

But, Mr. Chairman, although it should be held that the third clause of Article I of the Japanese treaty of 1894 is in direct conflict with the school law of California, which I can not for a moment admit, still, sir, it is clear to me that the fourth paragraph of Article II provides that no stipulation in the treaty shall affect the police and public-security regulations of any State. The paragraph to which I refer reads as follows:

It is, however, understood that the stipulations contained in this and the preceding article do not in any way affect the laws, ordinances, and regulations with regard to all immigration of laborers, the police and public security, which are in force, or which may hereafter be enacted in either of the two countries.

It is therefore clear that those who drafted the treaty were careful to avoid an apparent clash between the treaty power and the police power reserved to the States.

It is within the police power, therefore, of every State not only to establish public schools, but to govern them by reasonable rules and regulations and provide for a separation of both Such regulations are clearly in the interest sexes and races. of the peace, health, and safety of the community and State. I predict, therefore, that when we hear from the Supreme Court—if a decision of the case pending shall be finally de-manded—California will be left undisturbed in her right to maintain separate schools, and at the same time the Japanese treaty will be held to be constitutional and the school law of California construed by that court as not to conflict there-

So I contend, Mr. Chairman, first, that there is no conflict between the treaty and the California school law; second, that if there is conflict, the treaty must give way, for the California school law is an exercise of the police power, and therefore su-preme, subject to repeal by no authority on earth save by her State legislature. [Applause.]

The good sense of the Supreme Court of our country can be depended upon to settle such cases wisely and justly and at the same time preserve our civilization and the spirit of our Government by refusing to interfere with purely local internal affairs of a State, regardless of the vehement and egotistical Jap, who yearns for and demands social as well as civil equality with our best American blood. [Loud applause.]

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, there are several bills pending before Congress which involve the relations to the public of those corporations engaged in interstate commerce. Among them is one requiring publicity on the part of those corpora-tions. In brief, this law requires such publicity of its affairs on the part of the corporation as to afford the public a knowledge of those things which concern the relations of the corporations to the public. It does not require the revelation of those business secrets which are important as between the corporation and its rivals. I desire to address myself to the principle of this law. I wish to state at the outset that a distinction should be made between those corporations which are in the nature of a partnership, whose securities are not dealt in by the public, and the larger corporations which in reality have become agencies of the State. It is only to the latter that the principle of publicity should apply.

Publicity would enable the Congress of the United States to act intelligently in reference to proposed legislation which affects corporations. Up to the present time the Congress has been largely in the dark as to the real facts which existed in the particular case. Only recently the country was startled by the charge that one great railroad company had mortgaged its property for a large amount of money, and with the proceeds of that mortgage had gone into the market and acquired control of a competing line. If this charge be true, publicity would have disclosed this danger long ago. A law, then, could have been enacted, and probably would have been enacted, requiring that no corporation engaged in interstate commerce should have the power to acquire or own shares in other transportation companies. Publicity would reveal any tendency to exceed the real power which it was intended to confer upon corporations and this tendency could be checked by law. licity would also discover any dangers of corporation development which menace the public. Without publicity the harm is requently done before any effective action can be taken.

Publicity is desirable for other reasons. The total wealth of the United States, according to the figures of the Census of 1900, is $90,000,000,000. It is stated on excellent authority that one-fifth of this total is in corporations which would become subject to the provisions of this law. There is already a vast number of our people who hold securities in these corporations. What, however, can most of them know what these securities represent, either in tangible value or in earning capacity? They must depend for their knowledge of their property upon rumors in the newspapers and quotations in the stock market. Opportunity is thus afforded to the unscrupulous manipulator upon the stock exchange to set in circulation all kinds of slanders and depress the stock. In the condition of panic which follows, he can frighten the legitimate investor in that stock into selling for whatever he can get. Then, when the manipulator has acquired all the stock he desires, he takes his hand from off the market, and the stock rises once more to its real value, or beyond it, for speculative purposes again. The result of this is not only a great financial loss to those who can least afford it, but they also lose something more, and that is, confidence in the integrity of our commercial conditions. Let this confidence disappear and havoc always comes. To illustrate, it is not only important that our banks should be safe, but that the people of this country should know this fact. A distinguished Member of this House gave me only the other day an illustration of this in the city where A woman visited one Saturday afternoon the savings he lives. bank in which she had a substantial deposit. She saw upon the door of the bank the sign, "Bank closed." She misunderstood this sign and started the report that this bank, one of the soundest in the city, had failed. A disastrous run ensued and the bank survived only through the generous aid its rivals gave. Confidence in our business institutions is the life blood of commerce. This can only be gained and held by the fullest and freest publicity. In the complex conditions under which we live, to throw suspicion upon the soundest business may bring wreck. Confidence in anything is impossible without knowledge. A Gibraltar obscured in fogs no longer seems a fortress to the world.

Many businesses, which insist on secrecy in their business, injure no one quite so much as themselves. Any corporation which conceals its assets and its earnings is popularly supposed to earn incomparably larger returns upon its capital than it actually does. I venture to say that the money invested in the average corporation a quarter of a century ago—certainly, a half century ago—if it had been invested in farm lands in the Mississippi Valley, would to-day realize more to the investor than it now does. And yet the farmer in that region, knowing nothing for certain and listening only to the extravagant stories told of its wealth, is impelled to believe that the generous returns which the land he then purchased yields do not begin to compare with the dividends the investor in corporate stock receives. The feeling of distrust he thus cherishes would never have found logment in his brain if the corporation had been simply frank with the public. Secrecy defeats its own object, It only magnifies in the average mind what it aims to minimize.

The smallest shareholder in one of these corporations is entitled by every standard of business ethics to as complete knowledge as is the most powerful "insider." Make it possible for the owner of a single share of stock to feel the same security and share on equal terms with the largest stockholder the privileges of the corporation, and the money of the people will go, not into savings banks, but into the business of the country. [Applause.] Hundreds of thousands of people therefore would become equal partners in proportion to their investments in the expanding industries of to-day. They now prefer the small interest which they receive from the banks they regard secure to an interest in a corporation, of the affairs of which only a small group has any accurate knowledge. Their money would thus, instead of earning more for those already rich, return to its owners the increment it actually creates.

Publicity of its affairs would lift the management of a corporation to a higher plane. The majority of men who are charged with the care of corporations are not different from other men. It is not true that they carry other ideas of business ethics into their corporate management than obtain with them elsewhere. It must be confessed, however, that there are men in control of corporations, just as there are in every other walk of life, whom this visitorial power is needed to keep within their proper sphere. With the latter class, publicity by itself would restrain them from much that is wrong. Equally important, however, is it to the great body of honest corporate officials. They shrink from taking rebates, but if their competitor has this advantage they can see nothing but business ruin unless they, too, give way to this pernicious practice. They know that to bribe an official to escape the payment of just taxes is a detestable wrong. At first they When they learn that their rivals have committed this offense they, too, are tempted to yield in order that competition may be upon equal terms. I might multiply these illustrations, but it hardly seems necessary. Publicity would hold the dis-honest corporate manager up to shame and fortify the honest manager in his purpose to walk within the lines of right and law

There is nothing new in the principle of this legislation. More than forty years ago, when national banks were authorized, the Government reserved the right to examine minutely into their affairs and required reports. If there is any business which is sensitive to a visitorial power from without, it is the business of the banker. And yet who can doubt but that publicity, which has been impressed upon these institutions, has been of infinite good? How often has the hand of the manager of one of these banks been stayed when tempted to use the funds of the bank for private speculations? Who can say how many panies have been averted during this time by the requirements of this law?

The corporations complain to-day that the people are so prejudiced against corporations that they can not do them jus-There is much of truth in this. But who is primarily to blame for this unfortunate condition? Is it not in a large measure the corporations themselves? I recall the fact that when the railroad first came to the West, it was welcomed by the people. Those who built it were hailed as benefactors, as indeed they were; for without the railroad the most productive portions of our country would still be on the frontier. In the early days of the railroad it was treated not only fairly, but generously, by the people. How did it repay the people for this treatment? In some instances it used its popularity and growing power to attempt to dictate the politics of a State. It intrigued for the elevation of some one to the bench whose decisions would be favorable to the railroad. I recall that when I first came to the bar it was the quite general practice for railroad companies to resist any claim made upon them, whether just or not. One frequently heard railroad officials declare that the railroad company must resist any suit brought against it; must, by technical defenses and long delays, wear out the litigant, so that in the future men would not dare prosecute these railroad companies in the courts. What was the result? The people became justly irritated. New parties arose. The granger movement swept over the West. Any economic policy, no matter how unsound, promising to overcome the abuses of the railroads was given a welcome hearing. All suffered, and the railroad companies not least of all. Receiverships came in a large number, and the railroad companies became sobered by adversity.

After a while they found that they could not win a jury case, even where the merits were plainly with them. They then discovered that their policy had been altogether wrong. Many of them reversed this policy and adopted the wiser one of settling every just claim. But the harm had been done, and the railroad companies are suffering to-day from the mistaken policy of those early years.

About twenty years ago the interstate-commerce act became a law. The principle of this law was sound; it simply aimed to prevent a railroad company from using its vast power arbitrarily to build up one individual at the expense of his business rival or one community at the expense of another. And to-day the best men in the railroad world admit the soundness of this principle. What, however, did most of the railroad companies do then? Instead of admitting the wisdom and justice of the law they set their finely organized legal departments to work to thwart, obstruct, and nullify the law in every way they could. Who can doubt but that if the railroad companies at that time had cooperated with the Commission, to the end that the law might be enforced, they would be infinitely better off to-day, and in the meantime would have been spared many a stretch of thorny road?

I remember that years ago the city of Chicago, where I then lived, passed an ordinance requiring the gradual elevation of the railroad tracks within the limits of the city. The railroad companies had bitterly opposed this ordinance. It was alleged by them that to comply with the terms of this ordinance would bankrupt every railroad company entering Chicago. Elaborate figures were prepared, which seemed to prove their The railroad companies, however, were worsted in this Recently I chanced to be riding out of Chicago with a high official of one of these roads. I asked him how track elevation had affected them in practice. He told me that, merely from a selfish standpoint, they had never made a better invest-This instance illustrates the great truth that what is best for the public is also, in the long run, best for the corpora-It is equally true that any legislation which does an injustice to the corporation must, in the end, injure the whole people. For if you render insecure any class of investment I will pass by. There is a striking illustration before us It appears that from 1895 to 1905 the track mileage of capital will pass by. the railroads of the United States increased about one-fifth, and the freight ton-mileage increased about one and one-fifth. result is that there is to-day a freight blockade which is paralyzing the commerce of the country. Nor is that all. The increase in the railroad mileage of the country was less in 1906 than at any time for thirty years, though it is perfectly obvious that never was so great a need for increase as now. Does not this come in a large measure from the fear of Government ownership of the public-utility corporations, and the uncertainty as to what the attitude of the public toward them will be in the future? Can you expect men to invest their money in an enterprise which a large body of the people declare that this Government should take over at its own price?

We are just beginning to learn that the industries of this country are so related, so mutually interdependent, that fairness and justice to every one of them is essential to the welfare of the whole. It is equally true that no interest can gain a special advantage at the expense of the public which will not, in the long run, react upon itself. The sole inquiry with reference to legislation upon this subject should be, Will such legislation benefit the country as a whole? If it will not stand this test it will benefit no one in the end.

Expediency has always been the first milestone in the painful progress of the race to a higher individual, national, and political life. Our ancestors found that life was easier and pleasanter when they decided among themselves to create values rather than steal them. Laws were enacted against larceny. What at first was only a sense of expediency in some mysterious way after a while became worked up into conscience, and a theft seemed to scar the soul. Even then the nation thought it could gain by dishonest practices. It enjoined one code of morals upon its subjects and practiced another upon its neighbors. It encouraged the people to shun falsehood, at the same time it decorated its diplomats who had lied successfully to a foreign court, and beheaded those who had been betrayed into telling the truth. But the nations learned that perfidy in their relations with one another resulted in devastating and needless Fallow fields and silent workshops, desolate firesides and bankrupt treasuries suggested an extension of the law of honesty so that it should apply to nations in their intercourse with one another, until to-day nations have almost developed Corporate interests, too, must learn that every immunity or benefit secured at the expense of the public becomes a menace, not a gain. A corporation, it may be, desires a franchise from the public. It argues that securing the franchise will result in the public good. This meritorious end is made to justify dishonest means. The people, however, have never taken kindly to this precept, which is the first principle in the devil's own casulstry. They soon come to suspect that every measure which this corporation presents contain a covert steal. Finally it can only secure what the public would otherwise gladly give by a purchase of corrupt officials whom the corporation taught their trade. It finds that at the same time it first bribed a council or a legislature, it sowed a crop of dragon's teeth which has sprung up into an army of mailed highwaymen. Corporations must learn the lesson that honesty is the best policy in their dealings with the public. Irrespective of the question of ethics, that corporation is the wisest which meets the public honestly. Any contest between it and the people in which it does not employ honest means to an honest end must ultimately result in defeat, if not destruction.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I do not commend honesty as a rule of conduct for the reason only that it is the best policy. But human nature is so constituted and self-interest is so powerful a motive that the average man will read the decalogue in a new light when he has discovered that every one of its laws leads to a higher and more perfect happiness.

Isn't it time for the senseless war between the corporations and the public to end? That abuses grow out of corporations just as they do out of every other human institution no one can deny. But when those abuses come and Congress feels constrained to act, what is the answer of the corporations themselves? They suggest nothing but that they be left alone. They hold sullenly aloof and resent any suggestion that legislation could possibly help.

In a state of war it almost always happens that reprisals are made by either side. It doubtless sometimes happens that the reprisals are made by the Government. It also happens at other times that the reprisals are made by the corporation upon the public. This is an unhappy condition in which the people suffer at both times. If injustice is rendered to the corporation, the development of our resources is checked and the people suffer. If, however, the corporations make reprisals on the public, the public suffers again. Whichever way the pendulum swings the public uniformly loses. Wouldn't it be better, intinitely better, if the public and the corporation, in lieu of this state of war, were to seek a common ground of justice and fairness to all? In the labor world we are told by experts on both sides that conciliation is rapidly coming to take the place of open war, and even arbitration. It is not possible that a like principle shall one day rule the relations between the public and corporations? Open and unchecked warfare between them must finally result in one of two things: Either the supremacy of the corporations over the Government, which means the passing of the American democracy, or the acquisition by the public of the means of production and distribution, which equally signifies the triumph of socialism. I can not believe that the American people desire either of these extremes.

A great opportunity confronts the corporations of this country. Corporate ownership is upon trial. So far, in the main, it has proven a beneficent influence in the development of our common country. If, however, the good it brings to the people as a whole shall be exceeded by the evils it bears in its train, it is doomed to perish. Under the operation of a law which supersedes all human laws, no human institution can endure unless it renders a real service to mankind. The earth is filled with giant forms of life long dead, which ceased to be because in the evolution of the universe they no longer performed functions of use to the world. The time has come when corporations must decide whether they will jeopardize the security of property for all the future in order to gain a temporary advantage for to-day. On the one hand is private property, under the law, and on the other a socialistic state, from which Americans must shrink.

Let there be light. When fair-minded men agree upon the facts they do not differ much as to conclusions. Prejudice on either side is born of ignorance. Bacon says: "Suspicions among thoughts are like bats among birds; they fly ever best at twilight." Let in the light. These agencies of the public, called "corporations," will then obey their mission. Creations of the State, they then will be made to serve the purpose of their creator.

Who can rightfully object to this publicity? Some one, perhaps, may say that it is an interference with the exercise of property rights. I answer that this is one of the functions of government. The moment man emerged from savagery he began to circumscribe man's property rights. To protect and to limit property rights are the dual office of the state. Centuries ago it was ordained, "Thou shalt not steal," and there followed as a corollary that other injunction, "Thou shalt not use thine own to another's injury." [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Sterling having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Parkinson, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 24103) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Gallinger, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 23576. An act to provide for the extension of New Hampshire avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8486. An act to amend an act to authorize the Baltimore and Washington Transit Company, of Maryland, to enter the District of Columbia, approved June 8, 1896.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I, too, am in favor of letting in the light, as is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Lowden] who preceded me, but I expect after letting in the light, having given publicity to a wrong, to be put out on a point of order. [Laughter.] I want to talk to the membership of this House in regard to one provision, one of four provisions, which proposes to cut down the pay for the transportation of mails by the railroads, namely, that provision which strikes out of the exist-ing law the word "working," seeking by the elimination of that word "working" to save to this Government in the next four years something like $5,000,000.

The bill, known as the "post-office supply bill," now before the House, makes four provisions relating to the annual compensation to railroads for transportation of mails. One is a horizontal reduction of 5 per cent of present rates on routes carrying from 5,000 to 48,000 pounds daily; 10 per cent on routes carrying from 48,000 to 80,000 daily, and a rate of $19 for each 2,000 pounds above 80,000 pounds. Another provides for reductions in pay for railway postal cars. Another provides for the elimination of return empty mail bags from weights at weighings. Another provides for the striking out of the word "working" before the word "days" in the statute, wherein it is directed that "The average weight is to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days * * * as the Postmaster-General may direct." This last provision would make a reduction of some $5,000,000 in the pay to railroads in the four In December last I introduced a bill folweighing sections. lowing the line of three of these provisions. I do not agree with the interpretation of the statute, construed briefly in 1884, which contends that the presence of the word "working" forces the use of a divisor of six on a dividend of seven days' weights, in the computation to secure, as a quotient, an average daily weight. But the Department holds by the construction given it twenty-three years ago, and the proviso in this bill seeks to change the practice by dropping the word "working," upon which that construction hangs.

The proposition to which I wish to address myself is that three hundred and thirteen days do not make a year; that forty-two days is six weeks, and not seven weeks; that the great bulk of mail goes upon routes that have Sunday trains, and that not until the last six weeks has anyone claimed that Sunday service, in the transportation of the mails, is "extra service.

As I pointed out in a speech here December 11 last, the practice of the Department is this: To weigh the mails for a certain period and including all weights on all days of weighing, Sunday and week days, then to divide this total weight by the number of days, less the Sundays, in the period. That is, the Sundays are left in the dividend, and are taken out of the divisor, with the result that the quotient is enlarged. This quotient is, in practice, the average daily weight. This average daily weight is the basis of railway mail pay. The larger the average daily weight, above 200 pounds, the larger the compensation paid to the railroads. The pay is based on a table of pay which begins with $42.75 per mile per annum for 200 pounds average. begins with $42.75 per mile per annum for 200 pounds average weight per day and ends with $171 per mile per annum for 5,000 pounds average weight per day, and $21.37 for every additional 2,000 pounds average weight per day when over 5,000 pounds average weight per day is carried.

As this matter of weighing for a period of one hundred and five days and dividing by ninety-that is, with the Sundays out of the divisor-has never before been publicly at issue, so far as I can discover, I will treat it with detail.

At the start I desire to call the attention of Members to two kinds of railway mail routes, and in order to do it briefly will cite from the records for the Post-Office Department the smallest route in mail carried that I can find, and the largest route in pay in the country. If the report of the Post-Office Department is correct the smallest route in mail carried is route No. 165065, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, from Sterling, Colo, to Cheyenne, Wyo., which three times a week carries an average daily weight of 4 pounds for 106 miles, for which the compensation is set down (at page 85, Report of Second Assistant Postmaster-General, 1906) at $4,564.41. This seems incredible, and I expect the Department does not pay that, but, inasmuch as the mail is carried but three times a week, just half that sum, or $2,282.20, it being the practice, I have been told, to permit but half pay for routes making three trips a week. Now, this is not a typical route. It is the smallest of all small routes. and is serviceable in this connection as emphasizing a class of mail routes, being one of many side lines which are no part of the great arteries of mail transmission. There are in the small class of routes some 750 in the entire country, side lines which carry 200 or less pounds daily average at a cost of only a half million dollars to the Government, about 1 per cent of all expenditure for railway mail carriage. These small side lines, they run six trips a week, get for any amount of mail under 200 pounds, according to the published tables, the same pay per mile per annum—that is, $42.75. They will not be affected by a change in the divisor in arriving at the daily average, or by a change in the divisor in arriving at the daily average, or by a change in rate of pay for railway postal cars, or by elimination of empty bags from weighings, or by the horizontal reductions of pay provided in this bill. There are 750 routes, therefore, out of the 3,100 in existence, which are not affected by the provisions of this bill.

Now, the largest route in pay in the country is No. 107011-York-Buffalo, New York Central-which carries 411,000 pounds average daily weight, and receives for this one route alone in postal-car pay and weight compensation $2,251,801. All the provisions in this bill, should they become law, will reach and reduce the pay of this route, namely, the provision for a change in divisor, the provision reducing car pay, the horizontal reduction in weight pay, and the provision for elimination of empty bags.

What I desire to emphasize is this, that all the routes in the country are broadly divisible into two classes: First, the small subsidiary side lines; second, the great through lines of mail

I have shown that these side lines, where the six-trips-a-week service abounds, where there are few Sunday trains, number nearly one-third of the routes in the country and receive but 1 per cent of the pay.

Now, three railroad systems in this country receive nearly $16,000,000 of the pay—the Pennsylvania, the New York Central, and the Burlington systems; that is 32 per cent of the whole compensation. Thirty-two systems receive thirty-nine millions, or 78 per cent of the pay. There are eighty-three contract routes in the country which receive annually for weight pay alone over $80,000 each. Altogether these routes receive $21,000,000, or 47 per cent of the pay.

In other words, the great arteries of mail transmission carry and have had concentrated upon them the great bulk of moving mail matter. The tracks followed by dense mail are clearly They are distinct from the small side lines, and unless defined. the distinction is kept in mind the provisions of this bill can not be fully grasped.

All four of the provisions reach these great arteries. do not reach the small routes. The conditions surrounding a small mail route and a large one are different. On most of the small routes commercial traffic does not warrant Sunday trains. On the great routes Sunday trains are dictated by commercial conditions in no wise induced by the dispatch of mails. All mails could be removed from the railroads and on the great routes Sunday trains would continue. It is not tenable to maintain that the eighty-three contract routes which receive over $21,000,000 annually are induced in the slightest into Sunday service by the mail.

The difference between the great routes and the small routes may be better illustrated, perhaps, by taking a single State—Kansas. There are in Kansas 100 contract routes, 64 with Sunday service, 36 without Sunday service. Ninety-seven per cent of the weight of mail in Kansas passes over routes with Sun-Three per cent passes over routes without Sunday service. The week-day routes in Kansas carry 13,322 pounds. The Sunday routes carry 472,698 pounds. The Sunday routes receive for pay $1,617,639. The week-day routes receive for pay

To recapitulate, much of the week-day service is not affected by these provisions. Sunday service is dictated by commercial conditions, and the dense volume of mail follows the Sunday routes. The passenger-traffic conditions which necessitate Sunday trains predominate, and the week-day service is ex-

Therefore I submit that a law which makes the basis of pay a computation based on 3 per cent of the traffic, to the disadvantage of the Government on 97 per cent of the traffic, is unbusinesslike and no longer justifiable.

I submit that if any of these four provisions are to be eliminated from this bill, here or elsewhere, that the change of di-visor to find the average daily weight should be the last to be

The proposition that the law shall be changed to permit the Department to follow a mathematical method, dictated by the simplest rules of arithmetic and warranted, more than that demanded by modern conditions, it seems to me is incontrovertible. An average can not be found by the use of an incorrect divisor. It is mathematically impossible. Seven days' weights divided by six does not give an average daily weight, and so long as over 90 per cent of the weight of mails goes on routes carrying seven days a week, a continuation of the practice ought not to pass without protest. A divisor of seven instead of six makes a difference to the Government of $5,000,000

I do not see how other provisions for reduction in the bill can be retained and this one provision stricken out with justification.

If it is to fall here or elsewhere, I desire to leave a history of the practice which will save others from the trouble of rebecause I am convinced that whatever the fortune of the provision here and now the correction must ultimately come. This is a history centering about the word "working," digged from dry-as-dust documents. Some one here a few moments ago spoke about the first railroad train that went into the The first railroad train that ever ran into Washington came from Baltimore, and the then Postmaster-General-Barry, of Kentucky—went down and looked at it, no doubt. A short time afterwards he tried to make the railroad comply with the regulations of the Department, which before that time had dictated the time of the arrival and departure of the stage The railroad refused, and in the report of the first Postmaster-General who ever dealt with the question of rail-way transportation the comment occurs substantially "that if the people didn't watch out, this new-fangled railroad will develop into a dangerous monopoly."

Mr. JOHNSON. He was a prophet.
Mr. MURDOCK. In 1867 the word "working" in connection with the phrase "working days" began to appear.

In 1867 the Department forced upon the railroads a weighing of the mails—forced because the pay was then partly based indefinitely on "size of mails," and some of the railroads were claiming sizes of mail not warranted by fact; an average daily weight was not then part of any law. A circular was sent daily weight was not then part of any law. A circular was sent out by the Department asking the railroads to fill out their weights for thirty consecutive working days, most of the trains then being only week-day trains. The idea apparently was to give the railroads a square deal by permitting them to show full weight. No idea of average weight was mentioned. The word "working" was included to get a test of complete size of mails. Some of the roads refused to comply, but many sent in returns. Several of the roads had heavy weights, making long, cumbersome figures. When it came to tabulating these figures some one in the Department, for convenience, reduced these figures to average daily weights. Whether or not Sunday train weights were included in any of the returns there is nothing of record to show. The average daily weight was taken for convenience. It was not part of the statutes. In 1873 the new and present law was passed. The provision of "thirty working days" was incorporated into the law. It was a departmental recommendation. I can not believe that Congress understood that an incorrect divisor was to be used because of the presence of the word "working," because to argue that Congress did so understand, that is to argue that Congress meant to eliminate the Sabbath day, and to interpret "working" day as "week" day is to argue that Congress, feeling itself helpless to stop the actual transmission of mails on Sunday, still with fine religious fervor decided to eliminate Sunday mails arithmetically.

As I believe, the word was included in the law because no one knew of its possible effect. There was a horizontal reduction of rates in 1876 and another in 1878, but so far as I can find, the word "working" was not at issue.

Notwithstanding these reductions, almost every Postmaster-General afterwards criticised the system, and without being specific, condemned it. In 1881, twenty-six years ago, Post-master-General James wrote as follows of the law, the law which has not been changed to this day:

I am satisfied that public sentiment and justice to the Department demand a reduction of the cost of the railway mail service. It is undoubtedly true that while some railroads may not be fully paid for the service they render, the great majority are overpaid. There is and always has been a disposition on the part of the railroad corporations in dealing with the Department to exact their own terms. The subject is a complex one, and while it demands immediate attention, it should have a most careful consideration. There can be no doubt that if the pay for this branch of the postal service is adjusted upon a basis alike equitable and just to the Department and the railroad companies, the result will be a very large saving.

There is no detail here. Something was wrong, and a later Postmaster-General found part of the trouble—the Department was paying in instances for apartment cars, which is against the law

In 1882 Richard Elmer, Second Assistant Postmaster-General, wrote in the same strong strain of condemnation, but without detail:

In executing the present law it has become clear to me that under its insufficient provisions an unnecessary expediture of public money might be made for carrying the mails on railroad routes. Therefore, having in view the large annual expediture for this branch of the service, I can not too strongly urge the great importance of at once perfecting the present crude and incomplete laws, so that an uncalled for expenditure would be rendered impossible.

The "crude and incomplete laws" are those on the statutes

All this anxiety led to something-a bill, recommended by a committee, whether of Congress or the Department the records do not show. This bill is printed in the Postmaster-General's report of 1884. The bill left the word "working" out, but no was not acted upon. In the latter part of 1884 Mr. Gresham was Postmaster-General. He found the word "working," and realized its importance. Up until five weeks ago, so far as I can find, there was no public record of Gresham's discovery. But on January 5, 1907, the present Second Assistant Post-master-General submitted, with other interesting and hitherto unpublished matter, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, from the files of the Department, an order Mr. Gresham made September 18, 1884.

Order No. 44.

That hereafter when the weight of mails is taken on railroad routes performing service seven days per week the whole number of days the mails are weighed, whether thirty or thirty-five, shall be used as a divisor for obtaining the average weight per day.

If Gresham had remained Postmaster-General for six months after making that order and held to it, the Government would have paid for the carriage of the mail from then until to-day the sum of $60,000,000 less than it has paid. But a little over a week later Gresham became Secretary of the Treasury. He was succeeded by Postmaster-General Hatton. Mr. Hatton at once sent a letter to the Attorney-General, now for the first time made public. In it Hatton makes no mention of the Gresham order. He submits a method of computation and two supposititious examples, which are to me and to those to whom I have submitted them utterly confusing. No such routes as he submitted then existed. The rate allowable per mile per annum cited by him as $150 was not then $150. per ton per mile of road per annum" and "pay per mile run of road per annum" are not part of the computation of pay. his letter meant I do not know. I submit it:

OCTOBER, 24, 1884.

SIR: The act of March 3, 1873 (17 Stat. L., p. 558), regulating the pay for carrying the mails on railroad routes provides:

"That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely:

"On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; etc. * * *

"The average weight to be ascertained in every case by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty * * "."

Upon a large number of the railroad routes mails are carried on six days each week—that is, no mail is carried on Sunday. On others they are carried on every day in the year.

It has been the practice since 1873 in arriving at the average weight of mails per day on these classes of service to treat the "successive working days" as being composed of the six secular or working days in the week, which is explained by the following illustrations:

Two routes, No. 1 and 2, over each of which 313 tons of mails are carried annually.

On route No. 1 mails are carried twice daily, except Sunday, six days per week, and are weighed for thirty successive working days, covering usually a period of thirty-five days. The result is divided by 30 and an average weight of mails per day of 2,000 pounds is obtained.

On route No. 2 mails are carried twice daily, seven days per week, and are weighed for thirty successive working days, and for the intervening Sundays, the weight on the Sundays being treated as if carried on Mondays, the weighing, as before, covering usually a period of thirty-five days. The result is divided by 30 and an average weight of mails per day of 2,000 pounds is obtained.

I have thought it necessary to give the foregoing illustrations in order that the practice of this Department under the law cited may readily appear, and I will thank you to advise me whether that practice is in compliance with or in violation of the statute.

If not in conformity with the law, will you please indicate the correct method by which the average weight per day should be obtained and the compensation adjusted thereon?

Very respectfully,

FRANK HATTON,

Postmaster Greenel

FRANK HATTON, Postmaster-General.

Hon. B. H. Brewster, Attorney-General, Department of Justice.

If this letter had been published, this present matter of divisor would have been at issue long ago. In answer to the Hatton letter there was received at the Department this:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, October 31, 1884.

The POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

The POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

SIR: I have considered your communication of the 22d instant, requesting to know whether the construction placed by the Post-Office Department on section 4002, subsection 2, prescribing the mode in which the average of the weight of mails transported on railroad routes shall be ascertained is correct, and am of opinion that that construction is correct, and that a departure from it would defeat the intention of the law and cause no little embarrassment.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

WM. A. Maury,

Acting Attorney-General.

This letter is the warrant the Department now holds for the present construction of the law. It was found in the files of the Department. It is also found in the regularly published opinions of the Attorney-General for 1884, but signed there not by William A. Maury, but by S. F. Philips. If this letter had not been written, we would have paid since the day it was written $60,000,000 less for the carriage of the mails.

The Department now produces from its files a letter from William F. Vilas, written when he was a United States Senator in 1895, to the then Second Assistant Postmaster-General. letter was written unofficially and without solicitation or apparent invitation and is of interest. It attempts to justify the practice. At the beginning of the present decade the Wolcott Commission, which spent months upon the subject of railway mail pay, made its report on the subject in three volumes. Clearly, its significance was overlooked, for I have examined the reports carefully and find no mention of this potent word "working." This report included a voluminous analysis by Doctor Adams, the statistician. He has told me that the manner of computing the average was not called to his attention.

In 1905 the Congress lengthened the weighing period from thirty working days to ninety working days. The word "work-g" was not at issue. It has been overlooked. Taking the history of the section, I again submit that while it is proper to make changes in rates of pay, if Congress desires, it is mandatory, because it is business, because the present method is warranted neither by conditions nor by the rules of arithmetic, to eliminate this incorrect computation.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

The gentleman has stated if that letter had not Mr. RYAN. been written that the Government would have paid the railroads from that time up to the present $60,000,000 less than they have paid for the transportation of the mails. Is the committee to understand from that that they would have paid the railroads sufficient for the service rendered if they paid $60,000,000 less?

Mr. MURDOCK. I myself think so. But, as the chairman of this committee said in a very able speech to-day, there is a division and room for difference of judgment, Mr. Chairman. upon this question in toto. I am talking about this manner of computation in particular and what it has done.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he said this word "working" day was dropped out of the law?

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, no; it was dropped out of a bill in 1884, which the Post-Office Department recommended, but which did not pass. There was no mention of the word "working," or of its omission.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, it is in the law now.
Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; it is in the law.
Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman permit another interruption, just for the sake of getting the facts right?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the present law provide for ninety days?

Mr. MURDOCK. Ninety successive working days.

Mr. NORRIS. And do they actually weigh for one hundred and five days:

Mr. MURDOCK. One hundred and five, or fifteen days more than ninety.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Are these working days then, one hundred and five working days?

Mr. MURDOCK. To my knowledge, understanding, and belief, when on Sunday there is actual service, a Sunday upon which the work is performed, it is a working day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And has the Department two ways, one of weighing the mails and another of having it divided?

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, no; I think not.
Mr. FITZGERALD. If the mail is weighed for ninety working days, how does it work for one hundred and five?

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not think that the gentleman has that correct. The mail is weighed for one hundred and five days when working Sundays are in the week.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If Sunday is not a working day, why is the weighing on that day included in this total?

Mr. MURDOCK. I think that Sunday is a working day and is properly included if you are going to weigh for one hundred and five days, but if you are going to weigh for ninety days and if Sunday is a working day, it should be included in the ninety

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the gentleman has inadvertently made a mistake when he said the mail is weighed on one hundred and five days.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, no. If I made the statement that it is weighed one hundred and five week days, I made a misstatement.

Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand it, it is only weighed ninety days

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, 750 of the roads of this country receive the maximum pay for the minimum amount of mail, most of these will not be affected by any change in the divisor.

Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand it, in the six-day-aweek route the daily weighing is on six days.

Mr. MURDOCK. Oh, certainly.

And they are divided by 90, which is all Mr. STEENERSON. the days upon which the weighing is made for that period.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; exactly, on six-day-a-week routes. on seven-day-a-week routes the weighing is for 105 days.

Mr. STEENERSON. So that when you say that it is weighed on all roads one hundred and five days, you meant to indicate the calculation?

Mr. MURDOCK. I thank the gentleman for making that emendation.

Now, what is, first, the defense of the practice and, second, the contention for its continuance?

The present Second Assistant Postmaster-General justifies the practice because of established usage and the wording of the

The contention for its equity and a resistance to any change in the statute are found in three sources—Hatton's letter to the Attorney-General, Vilas's letter to the Department, and the very recent discovery by some that Sunday service is an extra service.

Let me take up these contentions in order. First, Hatton's contention is that we pay on a basis of three undred and thirteen days to the year. This is to be inferred hundred and thirteen days to the year. from his curious letter. I call attention simply to the fact that the law provides pay per annum and not for any arbitrary period fixed by construction. If the railway mail year is fixed arbitrarily at a period of three hundred and thirteen days, why at the expiration of such period, can not the railroads demand their full annual pay? The fact remains that a year contains three hundred and sixty-five days. We pay for the carriage of the mails over 3 miles of track to the St. Louis Terminal Association $50,000 a year, $16,000 per mile per annum. there here who will contend that that pay is for three hundred and thirteen days of service? Who is there here who will contend that if the proposed change in the divisor would work an injustice here?

Second. Vilas's proposition is that working day means week day, and that the elimination of the day of rest commanded is essential. An answer to that ought to be, indubitably, that we permit the violation of the Sabbath actually, but save ourselves by observing it arithmetically.

Third and finally. The contention that Sunday trains are extra service and should receive extra compensation and its corollary contentions:

(a) The assertion that if a train which has been running six days a week becomes a seven-day-a-week train it would get the same pay for more service, or, the reverse, that if a train which has been running seven days a week becomes a six-day-a-week train, it would get the same pay for less service.

(b) The related assertion that if the six-day-a-week weights are averaged by a divisor of six and the seven-day-a-week trains are averaged by a divisor of seven, the seven-day trains would receive one-seventh less pay for more service.

(c) The related assertion that Sunday mails are treated as Monday weights, the Sunday mails being arithmetically turned into Monday weights on seven-day-a-week routes and actually turned into Monday weights on six-day-a-week routes.

In answer to the first proposition that Sunday trains are extra service, Sunday trains are the result of commercial conditions, of traffic and competition, and the railroads are compensated for them additionally, because it has been the practice of the Department for years to give those roads with the greatest frequency of trains and highest speed the most mail. Let me illustrate briefly.

The New York Central's route from New York to Buffalo is 439 miles long. It carries (on an incorrect divisor) 411,000 pounds of mail daily. The average speed of the trains is 37 miles an hour. Its average trips per week, 129. Its pay is $2,251,801 a year. Now, the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western route, New York to Buffalo, is 29 miles shorter than the New York Central's. If all the through mail were shipped via the Lackawanna, the Government, which pays by the mile, would make a great saving. But the great through mails go by the New York Central. Why? The New York Central is given special recognition because of the frequency of its trips and its average speed. For while the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western is 410 miles, New York to Buffalo-29 miles shorter than the New York Central-the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western has only an average of 55 trips as against 129 on the New York Central; the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western has an average speed of 30 miles an hour as against the New York Central's 37 miles an hour; the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western gets only 20,000 pounds daily of mail, while the New York Central secures 411,000 pounds. The Delaware, Lacka-wanna and Western gets $159,407 in pay; the New York Cen-Who is there here who will contend that tral gets $2,251,801. greater frequency of service is not additionally compensated? The answer to the first proposition can be closed with the declaration that as to volume of mail the six-day-a-week service in this country is exceptional; that the seven-day-a-week service is the normal service.

Now, as to the corollary (a), that if a train has been running six days a week becomes a seven day-a-week, it would get the same pay for more service, and its reverse as given. That is refuted in the fact that when a six-day train becomes a seven-day train it is because of commercial conditions, and that it receives more mail because it is giving more service. If a seven-day train becomes a six-day train, it does so because of commercial conditions and receives less mail.

As to the corollary (b), the assertion that if a six-day-aweek train's weights are averaged by a divisor of 6 and the seven-day-a-week train's weights are averaged by a divisor of 7, the seven day's train would receive one-seventh less pay for more service; this assumes that the normal condition is sixdays-a-week service. It is refuted by the facts and by the circumstance that on 750 six-day-a-week routes, if the divisor of 7 was used the pay would not change, because the amount of mail they carry is so small that each now receives the maximum pay. On those six-day-a-week routes carrying above the minimum weight, which would be affected by a change of divisor from 6 to 7, if a mathematical exactitude is desired, it can be found in administration by making the divisor 7 and then giving the compensation proportionally, a practice now followed in certain instances by the Department. That is, if a six-day-a-week route carried in a 105-day period 105,000 pounds of mail, the average would be found by using 105 for a divisor, which would give 1,000 pounds average daily weight. Under this law the compensation is $85.50. Correctly the six-day-a-week route would receive six-sevenths of this amount. And the Department does this very thing on three-day-a-week routes to-day. On the three-day-a-week routes the Department does not allow full compensation. It allows one-half, according to testimony given at hearings-that is, three-sixths of full compensation.

Now, on the corollary (c) the assertion that Sunday mails are treated as Monday weights, and the averages now taken by a divisor of six instead of seven brings a just conclusion, it may be answered briefly that if it is fair in finding an average daily weight to turn Sunday weights into Monday and divide ' by six to get an average daily weight, then why isn't it also fair to turn Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday weights into Saturday and divide by one to get an average daily weight? If one is fair, the other is. Neither is fair. If the word "working" forces this construction and practice, it is the duty of Congress to strike it out.

Now, to return to an example I gave in my remarks here on December 11. By the use of the diminished divisor we pay the New York Central for weight on its Buffalo-New York route $1,985,000 per year. By the use of a correct divisor, on a route carrying Sunday mails, not on one train, but on many trains, we would pay the New York Central for this route $1,728,000 that is, we are paying $257,000 in excess annually. Mr. Chairman, the sanctity in which long-established usage is held here. I know the power of departmental wont, the tyrrany of precedent. I believe that the defense will in this case gather around the claim that Sunday service is an extra service, though the statute is silent, and up until a month ago no public document voiced such a pretext. But let me say in answer to this new claim (that Sunday service is extra service) that no one can stand here now and, knowing the facts, assert that extra service, frequency of service, and speed are not fully compensated by the fact that the Department routes the mail to that route which gives the greatest frequency of trips and the day weighing period. Would you then divide by 105 or by 90?

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not want to be understood as disputing any statement of the gentleman, but suppose, for the sake of argument, that there were no Sunday trains in the United States carrying any mail. What would be the right divisor? Would you then propose 90 or 105? Take a ninety-Would you then divide by 105 or by 90?

Mr. MURDOCK. I have made up my mind on that a long while ago. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that this pay is annual pay. Mr. STEENERSON.

What divisor?

Mr. MURDOCK. Three hundred and sixty-five days, or on that basis.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does the gentleman divide by 105 or 90? I would like to have an answer of yes or no.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from Minnesota and I have thrashed all that out in the lobby and in the committee room, and we never yet have gotten together.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will take the gentleman's answer, if he will make it, but I want to ask him another question.

Mr. MURDOCK. I have only ten minutes, and I want to get brough. I think I will get to the gentleman's point.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the gentleman hasn't answered my question yet. Which divisor would the gentleman take provided there were no Sunday mail trains and they only carried mail six days in the week?

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say to the gentleman that the whole trouble on this question is that the men who confuse it-I think unintentionally and without design-always put hypothetical things in things that do not exist. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have only a short time and I decline to yield just now further. I hope that I shall answer the gentleman in the course of my remarks. On page 4 of the minority views of the Post-Office Committee is an example which shows this: That if a seven-day train and a six-day train carried the same amount of mail, and different divisors are used, 313 in one and 365 in the other, that the train running the less number of days in the week would get the most pay. Now, that is a wonderful thing as presented by the minority of this committee. What does it mean? Why, it means this: That a given number divided by two different divisors will give different results. Of course it will. Furthermore, I said a minute ago that the confusion coming to this question is by the use of fictitious instances. Now, the minority have used for illustration a route that carries 2,000 pounds per day six days in the week, and gets for it $128.25 per mile. That is the legal rate. It is a hypothetical route. There are only twelve routes in the United States that get that rate. Every one of the twelve routes averages above six trips a week.

Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota. Mr. STEENERSON. I understood the gentleman to say that his proposition would not affect the six-day-a-week route.

Mr. MURDOCK. It will not affect the six-day week routes where they carry less than 200 pounds per day.

Mr. STEENERSON. It does not make any difference how much they carry. My understanding is your proposition, as embodied in the amendment to the bill, will reduce the pay upon the six-day route and upon the seven-day route oneseventh.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me ask the gentleman a question, There is a route in the gentleman's own State.

Mr. STEENERSON. That would not make any difference.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; it does. Mr. STEENERSON. I am asking what you propose by this bill. Do you propose to reduce the rate of pay by reducing the average daily rate upon all routes, or do you claim it only affects the six-day routes?

Mr. MURDOCK. This change of method?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.
Mr. MURDOCK. I claim it does not affect the six-day route where it is carrying the minimum amount of mail and getting the maximum pay. There is a route in the gentleman's from Hastings to Cologne, which receives pay of $38.99. There is a route in the gentleman's State, the gentleman contend this change in divisor is going to affect that road?

Mr. STEENERSON. I say it does not make any difference to the road that carries the full 200 pounds.

Mr. MURDOCK. Then the gentleman agrees with me.

Mr. MURDOCK. The Mr. STEENERSON. Because—
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. Mr. STEENERSON. Because you pay the same.
Mr. MURDOCK. Concluding let me say: The present method is mathematically absurd; its practice is disadvantageous to the Government. And while the matter may be pushed aside now, it cries out for correction, and will continue to cry out until it is corrected.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sibley]

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I doubt if the bill reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads represented the real views of a single member of that committee. I do not be-lieve there is one man a member of that committee who is satisfied that in our action we have accorded strict justice. I think the difficulty has arisen because we have had no hearings to afford us evidence as a basis for intelligent action. evidence upon the question of fairness of compensation is the report of the Wolcott commission. I quoted a year ago the remarks of Mr. (now Justice) Moody, a member of that commission, who said he gave to this subject the hardest work he had ever given in his life, starting with the belief the railways were unduly compensated and finishing his labors by affirming and believing that if there was any service rendered to the Government at a fair compensation it was that of the railway mail Since that time not one word of evidence has ever been presented to the committee or the country of a contrary character, and the country and every gentleman here recognizes the great increase in the cost of operation of railways during recent years, the higher rate of wages, and the higher cost of all materials have made this service a greater expense to them.

The figures submitted in the report, which I shall ask to have printed as a portion of my remarks, show that where the earnings from a railway train carrying the fast mails amount to 98 cents per train mile, the earnings from the same line from its passenger service is $1.40 per train mile and from its freight trains $2.57 per train mile; therefore if this statement be true—and they can be fully verified by the Interstate Commerce Commission—then we can not be unduly compensating these railways for the cheapest service they perform, and earning less than 50 per cent of the sums earned in other branches of service. Now, then, in the very brief time I shall weary this committee I desire to call attention to one or two items. friend the chairman would tell this committee that what he had in mind was a cut that would reduce the railway compensation perhaps three or four million dollars. My judgment is that he has underestimated, not being a man trained in the technique of railway matters, the extent of that cut where he has reduced by 5 per cent from 5,000 pounds up to 48,000 pounds, and 10 per cent from 48,000 up to 80,000 pounds, and then at $19 per ton in excess of that instead of $21.37. I think his estimate of $3,000,000 is at least a million too low, and in his deduction for the compensation for the use of railway mail cars I think he is half a million too low. My belief is that he has made a cut of five and a half millions where he thinks he has made a cut of perhaps $4,000,000.

But in addition to these direct cuts, there is one provision in this bill that I do not believe commends itself to him or to any member of the committee, and that is the provision that the empty railway mail sacks, which is just as much a service rendered as is any other portion of the mail to be carried, shall be a compulsory service without any compensation whatsoever. The Department estimates that the empty sacks amount to 25 per cent of the entire weight of the railway mails, and if this is correct, that means $12,000,000 that you cut in this one item. Does any gentleman think that there is evidence before the committee or elsewhere to justify such summary and drastic action?

My friend from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK], an eloquent and able gentleman, and whose talents, genius, and energy we admire, has brought another case before us. He states that the provision which he has incorporated will by the change in divisors effect an economy of $5,000,000 more. In all, a total, under the present weighing period, of about $13,000,000. Three years from now, when the last weighing period shall have elapsed, we will add $9,000,000 more, or cut of, say, $22,000,000, or very nearly 50 per cent in the compensation. That is pretty radical, without any evidence whatever.

My friend from Kansas believes that there has been a great injustice in the matter of the divisor. These are the facts, plain and simple, as they impress themselves upon my mind, and as I think they have impressed themselves upon the Department for forty years. I do not think there has been any fraud or maladministration. I think we have an honest administration of our postal affairs. But in the early days when that law was passed fixing this compensation the mails were carried six times each week, a daily mail. With the growth and the development of your community and mine, with its wider industrial and commercial development, we demanded more frequent service. We petitioned the railways, and the Department went to the railways and said: "Give us this increased facility." My friend does not like a hypothetical quescreased facility." My friend does not like a hypothetical question, and so I will endeavor to make it clear, say that the total received was $100,000 a year for the transportation of that mail six days a week. The railways, listening to the demands of the people of your community and mine, gave them seven days' service without one penny of additional compensation of any kind or form or character whatsoever; and in this proviso we are penalizing those who without compensation have rendered such service in addition to the service under which the contract was made. That is the thing simplified and boiled down, and there can be no mathematical juggle about it. It is not a question of hypothetical statement. It is a question of fact. The increase in service from six days to seven days was given, and now it is proposed to penalize by 14 per cent those railways which have, without additional compensation, given this seven days' instead of six days' service, for their total is $100,000 at the end of the year just the same when they have carried it seven days as it was when they carried it but six days

And I submit to the gentlemen of this body that, in this era, when corporations have not too many friends who dare defend them even when right, when the railways have few defenders who will stand on the floor of this House and plead for equal and exact justice, none the less in my judgment if the cause can be fairly and fully presented the greatest corporation can come before this body and receive the same measure of justice, or, at least, should receive the same measure, neither more nor less than that accorded to the poorest and humblest private citizen of our Republic. Let the square deal fall where it will.

Mr. Chairman, I shall ask to incorporate with my remarks several statements, because the railways feel that in our action, as radical and sweeping as I think it is, amounting, in my deliberate judgment to more than 25 per cent reduction—I may be wrong—that they are entitled at least to ask you to carefully consider it from their standpoint that your determination shall be from a full knowledge of the facts as they exist. I submit herewith and bespeak the careful consideration of the Members of this body to the statements of the Great Northern Railway Company and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, showing precisely the cost of the service and the compensation received.

On behalf of the Great Northern Railway Company—Protest against adoption of certain provisions of H. R. No. 25,83, known as the Post-Office appropriation bill, making a reduction in pay for railway mail transportation.

THE OBJECTIONABLE FEATURES.

1. Reducing compensation 5 per cent on routes carrying over 5,000 pounds and less than 48,000 pounds daily.
2. Reducing compensation 10 per cent on routes carrying over 48,000 pounds and less than 80,000 pounds daily.
3. Reducing rates on routes carrying over 80,000 pounds daily to $19 for every additional 2,000 pounds.
4. Changing the method of reaching the daily average.
5. Eliminating from the weights empty mail sacks.
6. Reducing pay for furnishing, equipping, and hauling railway post-office cars.

6. Reducing pay for turnishing, equipments, office cars.

This company protests against the above features of said bill and each of them because any subtraction from present compensation will reduce its earnings from mail transportation sources below a fair and reasonable profit upon its expenditures on account of the services performed; and, further, because—

If the reduction proposed is enacted into law this company will be compelled to perform over a portion of its line (the land-grant portion) services for the Government at confiscatory rates, contrary to its constitutional rights, or be subject to process by the United States to show why it should not perform said services.

These objections are emphasized at this time because the committee of the House which reported this bill did so without full information on the subject (p. 5 of report), and because the reduction called for by this bill is not demanded by a fair and equitable apportionment of the cost of the mail service to its various branches.

CHARACTER OF SERVICE RENDERED.

This service is highly preferential. It can not be compared with any other class of transportation. The Post-Office Department requires for, and this railroad gives, the mail right of way and right of attention and of care over every other class of traffic. Trains carrying important mails are expedited far beyond the necessities and requirements of passengers. The running speed per mile is increased and stops are eliminated to facilitate the dispatch of mails and meet the demands of the Post-Office Department.

The schedule time of this company's principal mail-carrying train between St. Paul, Minn., and Seattle, Wash., 1,829 miles, is fifty-seven hours and fifteen minutes, being four to five hours in excess of passenger requirements. This is obtained at heavy cost of operation, represented by coal and other expense incident to high speed and by seven local-service trains designed to eliminate stops and running between the following points:

Miles.

	Diffes.
St. Paul, Minn., and Evansville	318
St. Paul, Minn., and Willmar	204
Barnesville and Crookston	164
Glasgow, Mont., and Havré	306
Spokane, Wash., and Wilson Creek	196
Skykomish, Wash., and Seattle	170
Bonners Ferry, Idaho, and Spokane, Wash	218
Total	1.576

Besides the above 1.576 miles of daily service performed, this company could, with profit to its passenger department, cease for three months during the winter operation of one of its transcontinental trains between Minot, N. Dak., and Spokane, Wash., 963 miles each way. This total of 3,502 miles daily service is performed solely to facilitate the dispatch of the mails. Except for mail considerations, it is superfluous.

Besides special speed and the above regular schedule demanded by the high requirements of the mail service, this company subordinates one of its transcontinental trains so completely to the accommodation of the mails that its departing time from St. Paul is hastened seven hours, to the recognized prejudice of the passenger business. Fast service is inaugurated frequently at a loss, especially where the arriving time is made so early in the morning as to discommode travelers, as is the case with the mails between St. Paul and Winnepeg (trains arrival would be better adapted to passenger demands and prove less costly of operation; hence more profitable.

Again, upon long runs, as from St. Paul to Seattle and Vancouver, special trains are run for the sole accommodation of the mail. The mail cars are detached from their trains and sent forward specially to insure arrival on time. When trains are run in sections the mail has the first section.

to insure arrival on time. When trains are run in sections the mail has the first section.

Every train is subject to be made a mail train on orders from the Post-Office Department, carrying with it the extra cost of such service, and on this system every passenger train does carry mail.

Lights and heat are required, and the former must be of double

Lights and heat are required, and the former must be of double brilliancy.

For every delinquency a fine is imposed.

This company is required to carry the mail between its depot and the post-office, and reverse, where the distance is not over 80 rods; it is required to care for and is held responsible for the mails when in its care: to provide catchers and cranes and exercise special care in the handling of the mail, that it be not delayed or damaged. If derelict, a fine is imposed. It transports free of charge all employees of the Post-Office Department when properly credentialed. It is estimated that this service is alone worth $125,000 per annum.

In every direction of better, safer, and particularly of speedier service the Department's demands are increasing. As the public require more improved mail facilities, the Department calls upon the railroads to respond, when within its scope of performance, and the response is almost invariably made.

Competition having been solely along the lines of superiority of service, the quality has continually improved, contrary to what must be the result if compensation is fixed below the point of profit or reaches that place by any other means.

These facts serve to distinguish the mail service from that of any other class rendered by railroads.

TO ASCERTAIN COST IMPOSSIBLE.

It was conclusively shown through the investigations of the joint commission, of which Mr. Wolcott was chairman (act of June 13, 1898), that no exact method of reaching the cost of performing mail service could be devised under the present system.

With certain exceptions, mail cars form a part of passenger trains. Just what part of the cost of the service the mail should bear can not be ascertained. The consensus of the opinion of railway and Government experts was then and is now that the value of the service—that is, the per pound cost of the service rendered—was of a higher degree of value than either passenger or express; yet it is well known that mails pay less, pound for pound, than many items of freight and most items of express.

The following comparisons will illustrate:

QUADRENNIAL PAY OF GREAT NORTHERN BAILWAY COMPANY.

The annual rate of compensation to this company for transporting the United States mails and providing, maintaining, and hauling railway post-office cars and compartment cars (for the latter there is no special compensation) is $1,457,325.71, as follows:

PRESENT RATE OF COMPENSATION ONLY OSTENSIBLE.

PRESENT RATE OF COMPENSATION ONLY OSTENSIBLE.

Because the weighings are quadrennial and because the weights of mails increase every year, the true compensation is greatly less than $221.15 per mile per annum on this system. The weighings of 1906 produced an increase in compensation over the weighings of 1906 of a fraction over 50 per cent. It is fair to assume the same rate of increase will occur during the period 1906–1910; hence at the end of increase will occur during the period 1906–1910; hence at the end of free fiscal year 1907 this company will be performing service worth $248.70 per mile per annum; at the end of 1908 it will be $276.43; at the end of 1909 it will be $276.43; at the end of 1909 it will be worth $331.72, yet during all this time the pay remains stationary at $221.15.

From the above it is manifest that this company has never received the rate it is popularly supposed to be paid. It is paid at the rate of 24 per cent less than supposed.

DEDUCTIONS.

The appropriation act of 1906 contained a provision as follows:

"That hereafter the Postmaster-General shall require all railroads carrying the mails to maintain their regular train schedules as to time of arrival and departure of said mails, and it shall be his duty to impose and collect reasonable fines for delay when such delay is not caused by unavoidable accidents or conditions."

This act made mandatory what has heretofore been discretionary with the Department, and resulted in the return to a system of deductions which had been tried and found ineffectual.

The Postmaster-General is also, under the law, authorized to impose fines for other "delinquencies."

The imposition of deductions for failure to arrive and depart on schedule time (20 per cent of the cost of the trip has been fixed), together with the fines for other delinquencies, results, as experience shows, in reducing pay over lines such as the Great Northern 5 per cent.

shows, in reducing pay countries.

In addition to said fines and deductions, when trains for any cause are annulled or reach destination over twenty-four hours late the entire price of the trip is deducted, although the train actually delivers the mail.

The above observations are applicable generally to the entire proposition of the entire proposition of the entire proposition are pay as to the special points of reduction proposed:

sition to reduce pay. As to the special points of reduction proposed:

THE 5 AND 10 PER CENT PROPOSITIONS.

The proposed legislation in this respect is essentially objectionable because it strikes the carriers at the only point where there is a profit possible. The light trains, particularly those calling for apartment cars, for which there is no compensation, offer the least opportunity to put the traffic on a paying basis; hence it is to the heavy mails resort must be had to bring up the general average. Here the rate is, by reason of the silding scale of pay, the lowest and the profit per pound infinitesimal. Here, too, the greatest ratio of cost is lodged by reason of impediment to passenger traffic, special service, greater risk of safety, heavier fines, and deductions, etc. Yet, in accordance with the recognized rule of railroading by reason of the heavy weights, a fair prospect of profit in bulk arises. But it can not stand a further reduction of 5 to 10 per cent and above. It is the small routes, requiring no compartments, and the large ones, by reason of volume, that show the nearest to a reasonable return. On this company's route between Fargo and Everett the proposed reduction of 5 per cent will show a loss of $38,831.31 per annum over present figures. The inconsistency of the proposition is manifest in this: To carry 5,500 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will cost $167.52 per mile; to carry 5,000 pounds daily will

CHANGING METHOD OF DAILY AVERAGE.

The objection to this is not that the method is not correct, but that it reduces compensation already as low as it should be and which has not been increased in pace with the demands for more expensive service. ELIMINATING EMPTY SACKS.

ELIMINATING EMPTY SACKS.

The reason for this is found in the committee's report, taken from the report of the Postal Commission:

"The practice which has universally obtained with reference to the return by carriers without extra charge of empty crates, kegs, baskets, and vehicles of like character ought to obtain with reference to the Government in respect to empty mail bags."

The fallacy of this reasoning is that the class of empties referred to constitutes almost invariably, when full, objects of express, upon which the pay for original carriage is considerably more than for the mail.

Again, empties are always returned by the line of the shipper of the original package and at the shipper's convenience. Here the empties would occupy valuable space already underpaid for and often by a carrier who reaped no return from the original.

The following are examples of empties returned practically free, with cost stated in comparison with mail:

FARGO TO SPOKANE.

FARGO TO SPOKANE.

Egg crates, chicken crates, butter, eggs, meat, and poultry, per	00

RAILWAY POST-OFFICE CARS.

The railway post-office car pay of this company is $107,301.47 per annum, subject to fines and deductions. Service is rendered amounting to 6,966.38 track miles, a car mileage of 2,531,212.22. It receives pay for 5,783.25 track miles, a car mileage of 2,100,369.77. It performs annually 430,842.45 miles of service for which it is not paid, worth at present rates $54,198.53 per annum.

The Department feels justified in calling upon the railroad for a 60-foot car from St. Paul to Minot, N. Dak., and for a 50-foot car from Minot to Havre, and a half line of 50-foot—that is, a line one way—from Havre to Spokane; then a line of 50-foot Spokane to Seattle.

This is one continuous run of a fast daily transcontinental train. Manifestly, the company can not afford to purchase equipment and maintain three sets of cars for this run, nor would the Department be inclined to sacrifice the time necessary to make the transfers of contents if the cars were furnished. In the case of the half line, the return haul is always at the service of the Postal Department. The only solution is to furnish a 60-foot car clear through at the reduced rates. This is a crying evil and should call for increase of pay rather than a reduction. This is only one instance to illustrate, and not an exception.

Railway post-office cars, weighing 45 tons and carrying a comparatively small weight of mail, offer serious obstacles to speed and economy of operation of the train of which they form a part. The working of the mails after the present advanced methods requires these cars to be filled with racks and cases, hence they can not be loaded. Storage cars for the overflow, or a part of the baggage car, are then required, largely increasing the cost of operation of the train and depriving it of passenger and express room.

This is a class of service for which this company has always felt the pay was insufficient, as it is applied.

Comparative pay for hauling railway post-office cars shows as follows:

SPOKANE TO SEATTLE,

Empty passenger cars, 15.8 cents per mile Empty freight cars, 8.6 cents per mile	$290, 95 158, 30

A QUESTION WHETHER THE RAILROADS SHOULD NOT LIMIT THE SERVICE RENDERED EVEN AT PRESENT RATES.

This company has for some time been considering whether it should not cease to subordinate its principal features of traffic to the transportation of the United States mails. It has been deferring the matter, nowever, until a fair trial at concentrating mail upon its lines could demonstrate the situation. By combining speed with schedule of departure and arrival and in many other ways it has brought its mail business to its present proportions. It appears that the mail constitutes a reasonable adjunct to the passenger and express service up to a certain point. Beyond that the mail is a source of loss. If rates are decreased as this bill proposes, the mail service on the Great Northern lines will have already passed the point of profitable consideration, and must naturally give way to a higher class of business.

Respectfully submitted.

MAIL SERVICE V. EXPRESS SERVICE.

MAIL SERVICE V. EXPRESS SERVICE.

It has been frequently alleged as an argument for a reduction in the current rates for carrying mails that they are considerably higher than the rates paid by the express companies for substantially the same service and accommodations. The facts in the case are as follows:

This company owns and operates, as required by the Post-Office Department, the following equipment, viz, sixty-six railway post-office cars and seventy-one mail apartment cars, having an aggregate length for mail matter of 5,340 feet.

This company owns and operates under conditions which it practically controls the following cars in express service, viz, fifteen full express cars and seventy-one express apartment cars, having an aggregate length for express matter of 1,866 feet. The equipment furnished exclusively for mail matter is, therefore, 286 per cent of the equipment furnished exclusively for express matter.

In addition to this special equipment there are in use for mail and express business a large number of baggage cars. The mileage made by the total mail equipment exceeds the mileage made by the total express equipment (mileage of apartment cars being credited in proportion to space allotted to mail or express traffic) by 49 per cent.

This excess of car mileage corresponds almost exactly with the difference in gross earnings from the two classes of traffic, and shows conclusively that on the basis of car mileage the rates upon mail matter do not exceed the rates upon express matter. As the express company does not compile statistics of tonnage, it is impossible to compare the rates per ton per mile, but if such comparison was available, it would be a far less accurate measure of the operating expense than a comparison of the rates per car mile.

In further refutation of the claim of greater compensation to the railway companies from handling mails as compared with express, note the following table, compiled from the annual reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission, showing that of the total

The service performed for the express company consist in hauling the cars attached to regular passenger trains, including the messengers, safes, and express matter, to and from stations at which said trains make regular stops. The railway company is not compelled to furnish more than one car on any train when the use of a second car would entail the running of an additional train or section of train.

But the mail must be transported without delay on specific trains, and, if necessary, the railway company must haul more than one car. Trains carrying mail are obliged to slacken their speed at points where the Department deems an exchange of the mails necessary, and at such points, as well as at others (about 263 in all), the railway company is required to erect and maintain devices satisfactory to the Department for receiving and delivering mails.

Railway employees are required to handle and guard the mails carefully and prevent any exposure on platforms, mail cranes, or elsewhere. For the last three years the Government has in many cases declined all responsibility for the proper handling and transferring of mails at terminal stations to connecting trains and has required this company to perform the service. No one but an expert who has been educated in the service and has a thorough knowledge of the post-offices and the railway post-office lines in the several States is competent to make the separations and transfers now required of railway employees; and where mistakes occur the railway company is held responsible and fined therefor.

In addition to the above, the Post-Office Department, requires the the service and has a thorough knowledge of the post-offices and the railway post-office lines in the several States is competent to make the separations and transfers now required of railway employees; and where mistakes occur the railway company is held responsible and fined therefor.

In addition to the above, the Post-Office Department requires the railway company to furnish men at certain terminal stations to check pouches out of one train and into another, although the Department has transfer clerks at each of these terminal stations.

There being many more clerks employed in the mail service than in the express service, there is a proportionately greater liability on account of personal injuries. The railway company is not released from loss on account of personal injury to employees of the Post-Office Department, but is so released in the case of express agents and messengers, except where the loss is occasioned solely by the carelessness or negligence of employees of the railway company.

The railway company has no liability for loss of or damage to express matter, but the Post-Office Department penalizes the railway company in all such cases. A fine of $200 was lately imposed for loss of a single pouch, and a demand made for $975 in another case, although the liability of the Government to the owner for the loss of first-class registered matter is limited by law to $25.

The railway company keeps no record of express matter handled, whereas the Post-Office Department requires the railway company to keep a record of all closed pouches handled by train or station baggagemen and to report the failure of any pouches to arrive at or depart from a station where they are usually handled.

At principal points the express company owns or leases buildings to accommodate its business and loads and unloads express matter, while the mail is transferred by employees of the railway company, and postal cars are held on very valuable ground in large cities for the convenience of the Department in loading, unloading, a

The express company carries all the remittances of agents and other

The express company carries all the remittances of agents and other company packages free. This amounts to 950 packages daily.

The number of men employed in the postal service on this company's lines is 432; the number of miles traveled per annum, 19,502,459. At 2 cents, the minimum price of mileage tickets, this would amount to $390,049.18. This does not include transportation furnished officials of the railway mail service, superintendents, assistant superintendents, chief clerks, and inspectors, nor transportation given rural free agents, which the railway company is required to furnish, as the general commissions issued to such officials cover all lines, and no record is made of them. This number of railway mail service employees does not include extra men employed by the railway company at Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul, and Minneapolis to sort, load, and unload mails and to run on trains between Chicago and Minneapolis to pile mails.

mails and to run on trains between Chicago and Minneapolis to pile mails.

The number of men in the express service is 228; number of miles traveled during same period, 12,392,617, which at 2 cents per mile would amount to $247,852.34. The free transportation furnished railway mail service employees, therefore, exceeds that furnished the express company by $142,196.84 per annum.

A great deal of extra service is performed in conducting mail transportation which is not performed in passenger or express service and which was not contemplated under the law, and the attending expense has grown rapidly year by year. For example, on the main line of this company, between Chicago and Minneapolis, in train 1 there are two 60-foot cars which are held at the passenger station in Chicago about five hours prior to the departure of the train, to be used for the distribution of mails. Similarly, two 60-foot cars in train No. 55 are held about eight hours; one car in train No. 7 about five hours; two cars in train No. 5 about three hours, and two cars in train No. 57 about eight hours. (Postal cars on these heavy mail routes are labeled for certain trains and are held over for those trains.)

At Council Bluffs the railway post-office cars for trains 15, 4, 3, and 6 are switched daily without pay from Union Pacific transfer (the end of the route) to Omaha, 2½ miles, and back. In addition to the hault the company is obliged to pay trackage for each car that crosses the bridge.

It is the custom of this company to run full railway post-office cars for some time before service is authorized by the Department. On one line of 230 miles full railway post-office cars were run for several years before pay was allowed; and there are now running a line of 50-foot cars between Marion, Iowa, and Kansas City, Mo. (300 miles), without pay; a line of 60-foot cars between Marion, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr. (264 miles), without pay; a line of 60-foot cars between Milwaukee and North McGregor (200 miles) at 40-foot pay; a line of 60-foot cars between St. Paul and Milbank (191 miles) at 40-foot pay; a line of 60-foot cars between St. Paul and Milbank (191 miles) at 40-foot pay; a line of 60-foot cars between Milbank and Aberdeen (96 miles) without pay; two lines of 60-foot cars between Dubuque and Sanborn (271 miles) at 50-foot pay; one line of 60-foot cars between Sanborn and Cham berlain (200 miles) without pay; two lines of 60-foot cars between St. Paul and Austin (100 miles) at 40-foot pay; one line of 50-foot cars between Manilla and Sloux Falls (181 miles) at one-half of 40-foot pay; one line of 60-foot cars between Chicago and Minneapolis at one-half of 50-foot pay; two lines of 60-foot cars between Chicago and Minneapolis at one-half of 50-foot pay; two lines of 60-foot cars between Chicago and Minneapolis at 40-foot pay.

An item of great expense given scant consideration in the discussion of the mail question is that of running apartment cars. The railway company is frequently called upon to furnish such a car on a run where the balance of the space can not be used, thus compelling the company to haul an extra car, not only without any car pay, but with light mails.

This company runs seventy-one apartment cars equipped with mail distributing facilities, according to Post-Office Department specifications and requirements, for which no compensation is received, as they are mails.

This company runs seventy-one apartment cars equipped with mail distributing facilities, according to Post-Office Department specifications and requirements, for which no compensation is received, as they are less than 40 feet inside measurement, viz, eight cars with apartments 11 to 15 feet long; seventeen cars with apartments 16 to 20 feet long; fourteen cars with apartments 21 to 24 feet long; thirty-two cars with apartments 25 to 31 feet long.

fourteen cars with apartments 21 to 24 feet long; thirty-two cars with apartments 25 to 31 feet long.

The number of feet of floor space occupied for mail purposes in apartment cars for which no pay is received is almost one-half as much as the space in full railway post-office cars—l. e., car pay is received for only two-thirds the car space furnished.

On new routes where mails are heavy the company is allowed only $42.75 per mile per annum, and is frequently called upon to furnish an apartment car. For example, route No. 135038, between Presho and Murdo, S. Dak. (35.43 miles), was established just after the close of the weighing period in 1906, and compensation was fixed as per statute at the figure above named irrespective of the weight of mails carried. This new route has carried several hundred pounds of mail daily; indeed, the mails have been so heavy as to require an apartment car and a postal clerk part of the time twice each way daily.

There are several routes on this company's lines where, in order to get mail service established, the railway company is required to carry the mails until the next regular weighing at only $30 per mile, although $42.75 per mile per annum is the minimum pay allowed by Congress. As the Department does not feel justified in authorizing service unless a lower rate is obtained, a $30 rate is occasionaly agreed to irrespective of the amount of mail carried.

As heretofore mentioned, apartment cars are placed in position several hours before trains are scheduled to depart, for the purposs of allowing postal clerks to work the mails. When steam and electricity are used for heating and lighting these cars in the train, stoves and lamps must often be substituted at terminals at additional cost.

At one point this company has just been required to have a mail car lighted and heated and mail delivered into car promptly at 2 o'clock a. m., so clerks can commence work at that hour, the train leaving such point at 5.30 a. m.

The tonnage in mail cars is necessarily light, as the room

a. m., so clerks can commence work at that hour, the train leaving such point at 5.30 a. m.

The tonnage in mail cars is necessarily light, as the room is largely taken up with racks and boxes. The average weight of mail carried in a mail car on this company's lines is 2,673 pounds (not including fixtures). The weight of fixtures in a 60-foot railway post-office car is 4,900 pounds. The weight of fixtures in a 28-foot mail apartment car is 1,450 pounds. It will thus be seen that the weight of fixtures necessary to the proper distribution and handling of mails, for which no pay is received, is more than the average weight of mail carried.

The number of pouches handled exclusively by train employees on this road for the year just passed was 1,432,960. It is estimated that 15 cents a package or pouch would be a fair charge for handling, recording, and caring for this matter. At that rate this extra service would amount to $214,944 per annum; but no pay is received for handling such pouches.

The number of stations on this road where this company performs messenger service is 751, of which 124 are terminals. The number of stations where the Government performs messenger service is 260, of which 24 are terminals. It is estimated that it would cost the Government $131,078.25 per annum to take care of the mails at the stations where the service is now rendered by the railway company.

At many stations where no night man is needed for the railway company's service, the Department requires it to furnish a man for the exclusive purpose of handling the mails.

The following statement shows certain items of expense incurred in handling the mail business which are not incident to the express business. The cost of any particular line of service rendered by a common carrier can not be accurately determined, but when the high and exclusive character of the service and the great responsibilities are considered, the present compensation for the transportation of the mails can not be claimed to be unreasonably high, nor in excess of the compensation derived from the express business.

DENSE ROUTES.

DENSE ROUTES.

In reply to the argument that on some of the dense routes pay is excessive, it may be stated that not only are extra facilities in the way of additional trains, higher rate of speed, extra help, etc., required on these routes, but extra cars also, to furnish room for distributing mail before placing the cars in trains; and it would be unfair to single out a route where heavy traffic may be carried at a possible profit without taking into account the routes where cars are run without pay or at a loss. On the Fast Mail Line between Chicago and Minneapolis, the heaviest of this company's mail routes, there are run over the first division, between Chicago and Milwaukee, eighteen trains carrying railway postoffice or apartment cars; on the second division, between Milwaukee and La Crosse, there are run twenty-three trains carrying railway postoffice or apartment cars; on the third division, between La Crosse and Minneapolis, there are run sixteen trains carrying railway postoffice or apartment cars.

On this line the Government has 181 postal clerks employed and the express company but 18 messengers.

At Minneapolis and Chicago mail cars are used for receiving and distributing mails from one to eight hours before departure of trains; and these cars must be heated, lighted, and otherwise equipped for the convenience of postal clerks when in use.

Fast mail trains are given the preference over trains of all other classes. To insure their making schedule time and recovering time lost in waiting for connections, all other trains, passenger as well as freight, must give a greater clearance to fast mail trains than is given to other first-class trains. With freight trains in particular the delays result in considerable expense.

The following are cited as examples of routes yielding very low revenue to the railway company:

must give a greater clearance to last mail trains than is given to other first-class trains. With freight trains in particular the delays result in considerable expense.

The following are cited as examples of routes yielding very low revenue to the railway company:

Route 139041, Elkhorn to Eagle, Wis., 17 miles. Annual compensation, $42.75 per mile—$748.55. Speed of train, 18 miles per hour. Average weight per day, whole distance, 169 pounds. Service in charge of railway employees; earnings, 60 cents per trip of 17 miles.

Route 139044. Brodhead to New Glarus, Wis., 22.79 miles. Annual compensation, $45.32 per mile—$1,032.84. Speed of train, 12.4 miles per hour. Average weight per day, whole distance, 246 pounds. Service in charge of railway employees. Compensation, 11 cents for each pouch handled and recorded.

A comparison of mileage made by 20 sleeping cars, 20 coaches, and 20 full railway post-office cars between Chicago and Minneapolis shows the following results: Coaches and sleeping cars, average mileage per car per year, 112,886.

The coaches and sleeping cars therefore made an average of 41,874 miles per annum in excess of the average mileage made by full railway post-office cars.

It has been stated that idle railway post-office cars or cars in reserve were paid for. On the contrary, the railway companies are required to keep a sufficient number of cars in reserve to meet possible emergencies, but no pay is allowed for railway post-office cars not actually run. In many cases only half-pay is allowed when they are run, and they can not be used for any other service.

The statement has been frequently made that a railway post-office car carns $5,500 (practically its cost) per annum. In some statements it is admitted that the yearly repairs east $1,200 or more, but the principal item of expense is omitted entirely from the calculation, viz, the cost of hauling the car, which is from 10 to 12 cents per mile, or more than twice the maximum pay allowed by the Government.

It would appear from the above that but for the inauguration of rural free-delivery service the business of the Post-Office Department would have shown a handsome surplus the last four years.

It will thus be seen that with the single exception of postmaster's pay the percentage of increase in the amount paid to the railway companies is much less than any other item. The actual increase in total receipts was six times, and the percentage increase two and one-third times, the increase in the total payments to the railway companies.

The claim that the method of computing the daily average tonnage of mail handled by the railway companies is erroneous has again been brought forward, regardless of the rulings of the Post-Office Department and the formal decision of the Department of Justice to the contrary. The law recognizes working days only, and the total tonnage carried in a period including ninety working days is divided by ninety, regardless of the fact that part of the service may have been rendered on the intervening Sundays. Because of a compliance with the demand of the Department to run mail cars and fast mail trains on Sundays, the railway companies are now rendering one-sixth more mileage service than the law contemplates, without any increase in the compensation.

The method of computation advocated by the critics of the Department would, if enforced, penalize the railway companies for furnishing additional facilities at the request of the Department. What valid reason can be assigned for granting less compensation, for carrying a given tonnage of mails a given distance on seven trains than would be granted if the same service was performed on six trains? Does the Government penalize any other contractor who, at the demand of its represent basis, as the compensation for any four-year period is computed on the lowest weight carried instead of the actual or the average weight carried instead of the actual or the average weight carried instead of the actual or the average weight carried instead of the amount would have been $40, 844,599. From this it is evident that the Government obtained service with the value of $3,345,699 per annum during the period named for which it paid nothing. The fre revenue received from the Railway Mail Service is considered. The rate complained of was the result of an effort of the express companies to recover a portion of the traffic which was diverted from them by the remarkably low rate made on second-class mail matter. The large increase in the amount of second-class matter from year to year forwarded by mail (41.674.000 pounds in 1906) indicates the failure of the express companies' efforts. The rates in question apply to shipments moving 450 miles or less, while the postal rates apply throughout the length and breadth of the country.

The appropriation act for the current year provides for the withdrawal from the mails of all postal cards, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps, immediately preceding the weighing period, whenever practicable. This will reduce the weight of mails and thereby the compensation of the railroads to a considerable extent.

From the foregoing facts the conclusion is drawn that, considering the character of the service, no class of traffic yields to the railway company less net revenue, and in no other direction does the Government get greater consideration for money expended than in connection with the Railway Mail Service.

Chicago, December, 1996.

THE RAILROAD MAIL PAY-MAIL RATES AND EXPRESS RATES-A COMPARISON.

The Government conducts one large business enterprise—the postoffice. It sells stamps and agrees for the price of the stamp to carry the letter or package to which the stamp may be affixed any distance the sender may desire. No question of the reasonableness of the charge is considered. Whether the article is carried 1 mile or 6,000 miles the charge is the same. Where the package consists of what are called "letters" it is required to pay at the rate of 90 cents per pound, while the package called "newspapers" or "magazines" is only required to pay 1 cent per pound. Business principles are not followed in the conduct of this enterprise by the Government. What principles are followed? Simply considerations of what Congress regards as for the general welfare—the same considerations which lead to the maintenance of courts and the Navy, without question of pecuniary profit. This business of the post-office is all transportation; it simply carries letters and packages of limited weight from place to place. In that respect it conducts the same line of business as railroads and express companies.

But instead of allowing a private company to compete with it, the Government, from considerations of public policy, creates a monopoly for itself of carrying letters and enters into direct competition with express companies for carrying packages, including newspapers and other printed matter.

Neither the Government nor any express company owns any railroad or has any facilities whatever for carrying on this sort of business over the country generally. Both the Government and the express company are therefore obliged to arrange with the railroads for transportation.

THE CONTRACT FOR EXPRESS.

THE CONTRACT FOR EXPRESS.

The express company negotiates with the railroad company a written contract for the carriage of its freight at the lowest rates it can possibly secure. To obtain this contract it guarantees to the railroad company a minimum yearly sum, regardless of the volume of business done, which is of itself a very important consideration. It agrees to accept undivided space in bare baggage cars and to place its freight on such trains as the railroad company may designate; it has no voice in the making of time schedules or connections with other roads. It agrees to handle all its freight with its own employees not only to and from the cars, but while on the cars, and to assume all liability for loss and damage not only in regard to the freight carried, but the express messengers in charge. In addition to the direct compensation, the express company handles daily remittances of cash for the railroad from each railroad station to the treasury, and transports free over all its lines all railroad packages, such as time cards, advertising, etc. This service is said to amount in value to 10 per cent of the general pay.

WHAT THE GOVERNMENT REQUIRES.

Should the Government without any contract secure for its mail business from railroad companies the same terms as the express company is able to negotiate for carrying its freight? The Government receives 90 cents per pound for carrying letters and can well afford to pay a fair rate for their transportation. Its aim is the dissemination of intelligence among the people in the swiftest and most confidential manner possible as a public function and to promote the public welfare. The Government does not guarantee to the railroad any return; there is no "minimum" in this case, regardless of the amount of pushess done.

turn; there is no "minimum" in this case, regardless of the amount of business done.

In the character of the service rendered, no comparison with express service can readily be made. That portion of the mail known as "ponch service" is perhaps 15 per cent of the whole. Eighty-five per cent of the mail is carried in post-office cars in which the space and facilities furnished in order to secure quick distribution are the all-important features. In these cars it is not a question of carrying freight, but of facilities for the distribution of letters and packages. In the pouch service, comparison with express fails because one service is the handling of freight and the other of valuable packets containing letters, registered packages, and it may be jewels, money, and things of special value. Not 4 per cent of express matter would be mailable at all. By express are sent shipments of machinery, steam engines and boilers, bicycles, automobiles, oysters, fish, fruits in carload and train load lots, horses and live animals of all kinds, fresh meats, vegetables, trees, seeds, butter and eggs, etc.

In all cars where there is no postal clerk the railroad employees handle all pouches of mail and the railroad company is responsible for their safe-keeping. Not only is the railroad company is responsible for their safe-keeping. Not only is the railroad company compelled to carry postal clerks in mail cars and hundreds of postal employees in passenger cars free, but it is liable in damages in case of injury to them the same as to passengers generally.

At all points where the post-office is not over one-fourth of a mile from the railroad station the railroad company must carry all mail to and from the post-office. This is called "mail messenger service." The report of the Wolcott Commission (1901) says: "Out of 27,000 stations supplied by messenger service, not one of the railroads."

Upon routes which have a closed pouch service, where the average upon routes which have a closed pouch service, where the average upon the con of the railroads."

Upon routes which have a closed pouch service, where the average mail pay amounts to $900 a year, the cost to the railroad for messenger service is $400 per year, calculated at $100 for each town of station where they are required to perform this service; in some instances they actually pay out for messenger service considerably more in cash than their entire compensation from the Government.

There is no such feature in the express business.

A PREFERENCE TRAFFIC.

One of the most important features of the mail is that it is a preference traffic. The Government postal authorities specify upon what trains and in what kind of cars it shall be handled; they dictate time schedules and connections with other roads, and upon all heavy routes they specify the speed at which trains shall run; all other cars and trains, including passenger trains and express cars, are sidetracked and delayed whenever necessary to expedite the mails.

THE SERVICE ON ALL HEAVY ROUTES.

trains, including passenger trains and express cars, are sidetracked and delayed whenever necessary to expedite the mails.

THE SERVICE ON ALL HEAVY ROUTES.

But the most important difference, it seems to me, results from the exceptional manner in which the postal authorities require railroads to handle 85 per cent of the mails. A large per cent is carried in what are called "apartment cars." Certain space is designated by the Government in such cars as being required for "distribution" purposes and must be fitted up according to Government specifications with racks, pigeonholes, and other necessary appliances for distributing mails en route and to accommodate the clerks in charge. In the apartment cars, and full post-office cars, in which five-sixths of the mail is carried, no pretense is made of treating or considering or handling the mail as freight in the way that express is handled. In apartment cars the space in which 6 or 7 tons of express matter is often carried is occupied frequently by 1 ton of mail. That portion of a car is set apart for a distributing post-office. What comparison, under such methods of doing the business, whether we consider the cost to the railroad or the value of the service, can reasonably be made between mail rates and express rates?

If the Government requires, for the distribution en route of five-sixths of its mails three times or even twice the space and accommodations from the railroads which the express company requires, why should it not pay double the express rate, pound for pound? A private shipper would be required to do that and more. Any man can have a car all to himself, as a passenger, if he pays full fares for the ordinary load of a passenger car, in most cases fifteen fares. The freight shipper given a carload rate pays for what is called the "minimum," say 12 tons, at the full rate, although he may only load 2 tons into the car. Can the Government in fairness do less?

This indicates that weights and rates per pound or per fon or per mile that may be figured out

In the full post-office car service, where 50 per cent of the weight of mail in this country is now carried, the contrast with the service performed by the railroad for express companies becomes still more striking. The report of the Wolcott Commission speaks as follows regarding this comparatively modern service:

"To-day the railroad post-office cars are elaborate structures, weighing between 90,000 and 100,000 pounds; built as strongly and fitted up so far as suitable to the purpose for which intended as expensively as the best Pullman and palace cars; costing from $5,200 to $6,500; maintained at a cost of $2,000 per year; traveling on an average 100,000 miles per annum; provided with the very best appliances for light, heat, water, and other comforts and conveniences; placed in position for two and one half to seven hours before the departure of the trains, and, owing to the small space allowed in them for the actual transportation of the mails, accompanied on the denser lines by storage cars for which no additional compensation is paid by the Government. "These cars are constructed and fitted up by the railroads in accordance with plans and specifications furnished by the Department, and the amount of mail transported therein is determined exclusively by the postal authorities. It results that the railroad must haul 100,000 pounds of car when the weight of the mail actually carried therein is only from 3,500 to 5,000 pounds—often very much less and occasionally somewhat more."

Upon the railroads where the mails are heaviest the Government now requires these elaborately equipped post-offices to be massed in special trains, run at great and unusual speed, and involving special expense to the railroad. It is manifestly not possible to compare either the expense or the earnings of such a train from a basis of weight per ton, or of rates per ton or per mile, with express business not provided with such cars nor furnished with such space in cars nor with such special train service. The Pennsylvania Company oper

MAILS SHOULD PAY A HIGHER RATE THAN EXPRESS.

MAILS SHOULD PAY A HIGHER RATE THAN EXPRESS.

Taking into account the greater cost of handling, including the messenger service, the unusual space required in apartment cars and full post-office cars, and therefore the excessive proportion of dead weight to paying load, and the unusual special-train service on the heavy lines, it is probably true that the average cost per ton to the railroad for carrying the mails is 50 per cent greater than the average cost of carrying express. At any rate, it is clear that the service required at this time by the Post-Office Department from railroads is of a much more expensive character to the railroad companies than the service they render for express companies; it is a much more valuable service; it involves the carriage of more important articles; it ought to receive not simply a higher but a much higher rate of pay.

It is not unusual for express companies to charge for carriage one and a half times the freight rate upon first-class goods, which, together with their rate upon single packages and articles of special value, make their average rate very much in excess of the average freight rate. That is called paying for the value of the service rendered. Upon a similar principle the Government, receiving as it does from the railroad company a more valuable service, and having transported for it a more valuable class of business, should pay a much higher rate than the express company pays.

DOES THE MAIL PAY AS HIGH RATES AS EXPRESS?

DOES THE MAIL PAY AS HIGH RATES AS EXPRESS?

As a matter of fact which class of business does pay to the railroad the higher rate? That is a matter of evidence. For single packages of nominal weight the minimum charge of all express companies is probably 25 cents for short distances. A careful examination of the results upon many routes where the railroads perform pouch service, resembling that of the express, has disclosed that the railroads receive less than 10 cents per package or pouch handled for the Government, the cost of messenger service being deducted.

The ablest and most competent witness who testified before the Wolcott Commission on this subject was Henry S. Julier, general manager of the American Express Company, who said that he had no interest in any railroad company. He stated:

"Without question the Government has the cheaper service by far. Upon the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, for the year ending June 30, 1897 (the latest year then available for comparison) the cost per ton per mile paid by the American Express Company to the railroad was 7.01 cents, while the Government paid to the same railroad over the same lines for mail carriage in the same period 6.90 cents per ton per mile, including post-office car pay (p. 520, part I).

"The Boston and Albany, in the same period, received for mails, exclusive of post-office cars, 6.35 cents per ton per mile; for express it received 7.53 cents, or 18 per cent greater compensation pound for pound from the carriage of express than from the mails."

The railroad carrying the heaviest mail west of Chicago is the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy. Mr. John H. Sturgis, auditor, testified:

"The Burlington Railroad carried last year 8.489,000 tons of express 1 mile for the Adams Express Company and 14,243,000 tons of mail for the Government, and ton for ton, pound for pound, it received from the express company more money than it did from the Government." (P. 549, part II.)

Mr. Samuel Spencer, president of the Southern Railway, testified:

"Th

was 5.6 cents." (Reciprocal service and messenger service were considered.)

"The average amount received by the Southern Railway per ton per mile for hauling express is 6½ cents."

"In other words," he says, "The Southern Railway Company, upon a fair and proper basis of comparison, obtained from the carriage of express an average rate per ton per mile 17 per cent greater than it received for carrying the mail." (P. 682, Pt. I.)

Mr. E. T. Postlethwaite, of the Pennsylvania road, testified that his company receives for the carriage of mails between New York and Philadelphia 27 cents per hundred, and for express 87 cents per hundred, and for express 87 cents per hundred, and for express 87 cents per hundred, and for express 87.2 cents per hundred, and for express load of mail in the post-office car, but with that load the average load of mail in the post-office car, but with that load the earnings of the mail car between those two points would be $22.51.

These are the actual rates in force for express and for mail between those cities, the only theoretical point being the size of the load. (P. 647, Pt. I.)

This line of evidence for other railroads can be duplicated from the testimony given before the Wolcott Commission. There was no testimony in contradiction. Similar investigation into the conditions upon other railroads would develop like results.

upon other railroads would develop like results.

COMPARISONS BASED ON SPACE.

The foregoing comparisons are of results upon specific railroads, the net results of their actual earnings, ton for ton and pound for pound, from all their business in transporting express and the mails. The railroad companies, however, almost without an exception, object to mere tonnage comparisons between mail and express, because the two kinds of service are so unlike. Some of them claim that space occupied in cars, with due consideration given to the extra cost and value of special train service and other points of difference, furnishes a better basis for comparison than tonnage. Several roads have submitted careful measurements of the space in all the cars upon all their trains set apart exclusively for mail and for express. The Northern Pacific Railway has recently prepared an elaborate statement of this character. Based upon actual measurements, it shows as to that road that to compensate the company for the space it devotes exclusively to mails at the same rate it is now being paid for the space it devotes to express would result in an increase of its mail pay from $910,000 to $1,128,000. Other investigations of a similar character upon other roads have led to like results. There does not appear to be any disposition on the port of the Post-Office Department to abandon the weight basis and adopt the "space theory," either for the purpose of fixing the mail pay or for comparing the mail compensation with railroad earnings from express.

COMPARISONS BASED UPON RATES.

COMPARISONS BASED UPON RATES.

COMPARISONS BASED UPON RATES.

The published criticisms of the railroad mail pay have come, not from the Government officials familiar with, the business, but largely from persons employed for the purpose by publishers of magazines and newspapers Interested in the continuance of the postage rate upon second-class matter at 1 cent per pound. This postage rate is a source of great profit to them for their long distance distribution. By occupying the public mind with attacks upon the railroad compensation for mail transportation they divert attention from that feature of the post-office administration which is so expensive to the Government and causes the present "deficit" in the postal revenues.

These critics have dwelt to some extent upon comparisons of mail cost and express cost based upon the "rates."

In many cases they have used for purposes of comparison nominally quoted express rates, or express rates upon which little if any business is actually done, or rates for handling newspapers for short distances. Comparisons of the results of the application of certain published rates for certain assumed distances may mislead in a business of this character.

One of the most serious errors into which Prof. Henry C. Adams, the expert of the Wolcott Commission, was led was the promulgation of a table of comparisons of mail rates paid by the Government to railroads with earnings of the same road from express, based upon a published express rate for hundred-pound shipments. There is practically no such express rate. The hundred-pound shipments by express are so few that they afford no basis for determining what the railroad actually receives per hundred on the business which it carries for an express company. The express business is a package business, and much more per hundred-pound ate. Mr. Julier, of the American Express Company, at once called attention to this mistake.

Because it illustrates in a rather striking manner the difficulty of making rate comparisons to show the earnings of the railroad from mail and from express, I quote briefly from Mr. Julier's evidence (p. 516, Pt. II):

"Professor Adams gives the amount received by the New York to Chicago as $1.25; our actual payment to them is $2.59. From New York to Indianapolis he gives the rate as $1.13; we, in fact, pay the railroad $2.57. He calls the rate per hundred from Chicago to Minneapolis $1; the express company actually pays to the railroad $2."

This same error, resulting from taking the quoted hundred-pound rate as a basis, was carried into all the computations made by Professor Adams in comparing mail and express rates.

Mr. Julier further stated that 7 pounds is the average weight of package, and therefore the earnings from carrying such packages are the true index of the rates actually received. In the case of some railroads, they receive as their compensation 50 per cent of the express company's earnings.

Mr. Julier was asked by the Commission to file statements showing from the rates in force exactly the revenue received per hundred weight from the rates in force exactly the revenue received per hundred weight by the railroad company from the express in comparison with the mail rates given by Professor Adams and accepted as correct. These two tables are as follows:

Hon, E. F. Loud was for many years a member of and chairman of the Post-Office Committee. He was a member of the Wolcott commission. After the filing of the report of that commission he made (February 6, 1901) in the House a notable speech reviewing its work. In the course of that speech he took up the question of comparing mail rates with express rates. Based upon the information at his command and the testimony before the commission, he submitted the following table, making a comparison based upon 2 tons as the average load of mail per car and 8 tons the average load of express per car:

Conclusions of the Wolcott commission and their investigations and deliberations were extended over a period of more than two years. The question of comparing mail and express rates was brought to their attention in various ways. The conclusion of the commission on this point, concurred in by all except two members, was in the following language:

"The evidence leads us to believe that if a comparison with express should be accepted as controlling it would be found that, taking everything into consideration, the revenue and services rendered to the railroads by the express companies exceed in amount and value the compensation paid the railroads for the transportation of mail."

Two members of the commission (Senator Chandler and Representative Fleming) did not subscribe to the report, but their difference was not stated to be based upon the point in question, but upon other considerations. The principal dissent was by Hon. William H. Fleming, who, however, stated as follows regarding the matter of comparing mail and express rates:

"I do not see that Professor Adams's conclusions have been impaired, except, perhaps, in the matter of his comparison of mail rates with express rates. Mr. Julier, of the American Express Company, seems to have shown that the 100-pound rate selected for comparison by Professor Adams was not a fair typical rate for that purpose."

It is unquestionably true that the railroad companies, particularly the large lines on which the mails are carried at the minimum rate and which operate special mail trains and furnish the most expensive facilities, are receiving less compensation than they receive from express companies do not pay them more than a fair and reasonable compensation, and it would follow, as the Wolcott commission decided, that the mail rates as a whole are not unreasonable. This being the case, the chief concern now, from the standpoint of the Government, should be to preserve and foster the present favorable disposition of the railroad for further extension and development of

STATEMENT OF HENRY S. JULIER.

[Made under oath to the Wolcott Commission December 8, 1898.]

[Made under oath to the Wolcott Commission December 8, 1898.]

I am general manager of the American Express Company; have been forty years with the company; am not in any way connected with a railroad company. There is no similarity whatever between the mail and express. In my judgment, not 4 per cent of the business handled by express is mallable. To determine this I had a record kept for ten days from forty different offices, which forwarded more than 5,000,000 pounds, and of this total weight there were only 52,000 pounds of mailable matter, or less than 3 per cent. We carry by express all sorts and sizes of commodities—steam engines, boilers, large and small machinery, gas cylinders, bicycles, horses, and various kinds of animals, fruit in car and train loads, beer, liquors of all kinds, cheese, butter and eggs, fresh meats, vegetables, plants, trees, etc. I know of no business with which the mail service can properly be compared. Mail cars are especially equipped and set apart exclusively for the handling of mail and can not be used for any other purpose. The business of the Post-Office Department has precedence over all other classes of business. The Department claims the right and does dictate the hours at which special trains shall depart and arrive and the speed at which such trains shall be run. These fast mail trains take precedence over all other trains, both passenger and express. A large number of mail clerks and employees are carried free, three to one, I think, as compared with the number carried free, three to one, I think, as compared with the number carried free by express companies. A large proportion of the express business is carried in baggage cars, and in these cases baggage has the preference over the express. The railroads do not perform any service for the express companies have to handle their business both into and out of the cars at all points. Railroad companies furnish facilities at terminal points for the mail service, but such facilities are not extended to the express companie matter handled by express and the additional service which the railroad companies perform for the mail, it would seem to me without any question that the Government has the cheaper service by far.

The New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, for the entire business year ending June 30, 1897, received from the American Express Company 7.01 cents per ton per mile for carrying pail 6.90 cents per ton per mile. The Boston and Albany Railroad received from the Government 6.35 cents per ton per mile for carrying mails; it received for carrying express per ton per mile for carrying mails; it received for carrying express of 1.28 cents.

On all merchandise shipments our minimum charge is 25 cents, irrespective of weight. We have in some cases special rates as low as 15 cents, but that is a very small proportion of our business. If the express companies should undertake to handle the mails under the present law governing the charges they could not by any possibility do it at the present rate paid to railroads and come out even. The Government might reduce the cost for railroad transportation by making less demands upon the railroads, accept an inferior service, and send long-distance second-class matter by freight.

Regarding the statement often made that the express companies handle second-class matter at a rate of 1 cent a pound when the average haul is 500 miles, that statement that the express companies are entering into competition with the Government in the carriage of second-class matter—absolutely none. We carry some newspapers by express, but it does not amount to one-half of 1 per cent of our gross tonnage.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIBLEY. Very cheerfully.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true, as I can not find my pamphlet here, that what he is asserting and what he is asking to be incorporated on behalf of the Great Northern Railway Company, I think it is they admit that the proposition as made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Mur-nock] is right, and that the present system of dividing is wrong, and that the only reason they ask that it be not put in force is that it will reduce their pay?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, in view of the interest that is now taken in newspaper postage, I will ask permission to incorporate in the RECORD an article taken from one of the leading dailies in my district-an editorial of February

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The article is as follows:

[From the Burlington, Vt., Daily News, February 5, 1907.] NEWSPAPER POSTAGE.

During a period of several months past a committee of Congress has been investigating the postal system of this country with reference especially to proposing a change in the second-class classification to remove certain alleged abuses and increase the revenues. This committee was composed of Senators Pennose, Carter, and Clay, and Representatives Overstreer, Gardner, and Moon, and it has made a report within a few days. This report must have been a shock to every publisher in the country. We venture to say, weighing our words, that it is the most extraordinary report, all things considered, that ever emanated from a committee of national legislators. In the first place, it opens with not only 'implied, but expressed, hostility to the papers, and it proposes a set of rules that are ridiculous, unworkable, and would be embarrassing and costly to every publisher. Instead of clearing up confusion in the Department, it would create "confusion worse confounded."

This committee sat for months and heard from scores of publishers on this question, yet they give no evidence of having the slightest inkling of the publishing business or its conduct. In fact, they give the clearest evidence that they have learned nothing about it. If a Member of the Congress of the United States from Vermont should, after reading this committee's bill, give an indication that he would vote for such a ridiculous mishmash, the News would undertake to get an order from our supreme court for a commission of lunacy to sit upon him. The proposed changes, it has been well said, "are uniformly burdensome and harassing and avowedly hostile." They are not only all that, but they are silly and complicated. They would burden every newspaper and compel an increase in advertising and subscription rates and unduly burden the Post-Office Department in their enforcement.

This extraordinary report provides that no newspaper or part or section of a newspaper must have advertistion of a newspaper or other periodical must consist wholly or substantially of fiction.

No newspaper or part or section of a newspaper must have advertising to a greater extent than 50 per cent of its superficial area.

Each part or section of a newspaper must be of the same size, form, and weight of paper.

Supplements must be of the same form as the main body of the publication, save in the case of maps and plans illustrative of the text; must contain no advertisements, and must be supplied only to complete matter left incomplete in the main body of the publication.

The number of sample copies authorized must not exceed 10 per cent of the paid issue of the paper.

With each issue of his publication the publisher must make, under oath, a statement showing the number of copies mailed to subscribers of different classes, the number in bulk, the weight thereof, and the average weight of a single copy.

The publisher is also required to furnish, under oath, "such other information with respect to the publication as the Postmaster-General may by regulations prescribe."

Newspapers must be folded as the Postmaster-General may prescribe. The present rate of 1 cent a pound is abolished save for packages weighing not less than 10 pounds.

For other copies the proposed rate is one-eighth of a cent for 2 ounces or less, one-quarter of a cent for 4 ounces or less, and one-half cent for each additional 4 ounces or fraction thereof, thus penalizing the larger papers.

Indelivered papers cent for each additional 4 ounces of fraction thereof, thus penalizing the larger papers.

Undelivered papers are penalized by a charge of double the third-class rate.

Free copies are forbidden save to exchanges, to advertisers as samples, and to agents or solicitors.

It will be seen that by these-provisions the Government would enter upon an attempt to seelously damage if not to destroy newspaper provision as attempt to seelously damage if not to destroy newspaper provision and activation of a state of facts to which the post-office scales would testify without any onth. It would also permit the Postmaster-General to put-the upublisher on earlier of facts to which the post-office scales would testify without any onth. It would also permit the Postmaster-General to put-the upublisher on earlier of the publisher on earlier of the provision of the press by restricting the publisher to what matter he shall print and in what quantity. It attempts to say that a publisher shall not give away what he chooses of his private property. It even gives the postmaster power to say that his press shall fold his papers as the postmaster orders. In short, this remarkable proposed has abridges—and is really intended to shridge—the freedom of the introduced into the United States, and it would come perilously near to volonting the constitution of most States and the United States regarding the freedom of the press.

The proposed in the case states and it would come perilously near to volonting the constitution of most States and the United States regarding the freedom of the press.

The proposed in the case shall be a basel rate of 1 cent perpound for all papers distributed within the first 100 miles from the proposed of the press. The proposed for the proposed in the class shall be a basel rate of 1 cent perpound for all papers distributed within the first 100 miles from the place of publication. The rate for each additional 100 miles or fraction thereof shall be one-tenth of a cent per pound. The price to be place of publication to the capital of the State to which the papers are addressed. Every publication regularly issued and malled to suisceribles at intervals not more than one month apart, shall be conditioned by double the receipts from that classification, probably make it pays a prof

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. McMorran having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his sectaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following

On February 15:

H. R. 24109. An act to authorize the Norfolk and Western Railway Company to construct sundry bridges across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River; H. R. 25123. An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River;

H. R. 18007. An act to authorize the appointment of Acting Asst. Surg. Julian Taylor Miller, United States Navy, as an assistant surgeon in the United States Navy; and

H. R. 22291. An act to authorize the reappointment of Harry McL. P. Huse as an officer of the line in the Navy.

On February 16:

H. R. 23578. An act to authorize the county of Clay, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across Black River at or near Bennetts Ferry, in said county and State; and H. R. 25043. An act to authorize the Atlanta, Birmingham-and-

Atlantic Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River in the State of Georgia.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois,

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, on page 6 of the bill it is provided that in cities where the gross receipts are less than $50,000 the carriers may be promoted to the fourth, or $900, I do not think this distinction should be made between the larger and smaller cities. I propose when that part of the bill is reached to offer an amendment reducing that to $40,000. I wish to insert in the Record a list of the cities that will be affected by that amendment. I also wish to insert in the Record a statement showing the effect of the proposed law upon carriers and clerks during the first five years of the service as compared with five years in the service under the present law.

As a matter of fact, the clerks and the carriers in the cities having over 75,000 population will have no more pay for the first ten years of their service than they do under the present law. In cities where the receipts are not $50,000 the clerks and carriers in five years' service will receive $100 less under the new law than under the old law, and in cities with less than 75,000 population and with offices where gross receipts are between $50,000 and $200,000 it requires six years to work an increase under this proposed plan.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. STERLING. Certainly. Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman must certainly be in error if he believes that statement that in those cities above 75,000 population the average pay for clerks in the first ten years will not be greater in the classification that we recommend than it would be prior to the new law.

Mr. STERLING. I do not think I am in error. I will insert the statement in the Record and the gentleman can estimate it for himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. STERLING. I ask leave to insert these statements in the RECORD.

RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to insert certain statements in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STERLING. Also to insert in the Record an editorial clipping from a newspaper relating to salaries of employees generally, which I think every Member should consider.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The average pay of Government clerks in Washington in 1857 was $1,460.83 a year. In 1887 it was $1,348.25, or $112.58 less than it had been thirty years before. Since 1887 the average salary in the classified civil service in Washington has been reduced, until, in December, 1903, when the last figures were taken, in was $1,072, a reduction since 1887 of over 20 per cent. The average salary in the entire classified civil service, in Washington and out, is $758.23. The lowest salary paid at the establishment of the civil service, in 1883, was $1,200. This was equivalent to at least $2,000 now, with the increased cost of living.

While Congress is considering the salary question, therefore, it has an opportunity not only to do justice to itself, but to the Government clerks, who are absolutely dependent upon it for a square deal.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. French].

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I am compelled to limit my remarks on this bill to a few words, and in the time at my disposal I shall only give an outline of a part of what I hope The Department of our Government that is in closest touch with the great masses of our people is the Post-Office Department. Inefficiency in that Department is most promptly felt by our whole country. Inefficiency can only be avoided by keeping that Department upon a plane as regards its employees as high as that of business concerns employing similarly responsible workmen.

It is a notorious fact that the salaries paid to the mail carriers on rural free-delivery routes and in our cities, and to the clerks in post-offices and on mail trains are lower than the salaries paid to other workmen of equal responsibility in private enterprises. So long as this is true, one of two things must result: The employees of the Post-Office Department must perform their work at a sacrifice, because they hope for better pay and because it is difficult to disturb home and home surroundings in order to enter upon other activities, or the employees of the Post-Office Department will be compelled to accept positions of better pay as fast as opportunity affords. No matter which of these courses may be pursued a wrong must surely follow, either to the employee or to the public. In the first place, if the employee is underpaid, he is the one wronged, and our Government is big enough and great enough to deal justly by those whom it finds necessary to do its work. It should not force men and women to serve for insufficient pay merely because of the hardship attendant upon seeking a new position-hardship to self and hardship maybe to family. On the other hand, if the employees are compelled to leave the service and take up other lines of work an injustice is done the public, by reason of poorer work that must result by the constant changing of employees and the breaking in of new help. In this connection I wish to call attention to a statement of Mr. J. R. Collins, the postmaster at Moscow, Idaho. The statement is important, because it is from the postmaster of an office the annual receipts of which are about $11,000 or $12,000 per year, and there are hundreds of offices of about this same size. They employ about four clerks, and the change of a single one is bound to produce a noticeable effect. But no matter whether the office is larger or smaller, the principle is the same. Mr. Collins says in part:

the same. Mr. Collins says in part:

When I took charge of this office, April 1, 1905, I succeeded in interesting several efficient persons in the work, and they took the civil-service examination and for about one year I had a very good eligible list to choose from. As soon as an appointment was made and an appointee had an opportunity to investigate the inducements offered and the chances for promotion, he began to look around for some other kind of work. I have lost four men during the past year because of the salaries paid elsewhere. The result is that this office has been a training school for young men.

This works a hardship on the patrons of the office as well as myself. I would urge you to use your influence in support of any measure that will tend to give us relief. Some provision for a substantial increase in salary after one year's service would, I think, help materially.

Now a word in regard to the rural carriers. When the expense of repairs on harness and cart and the care of the horses are taken into consideration (and, added to this, about $300 in equipment) $60 per month is a very small salary. I think they should have $75 per month. I would urge you to do all in your power to afford these carriers some relief.

The modifications proposed in the pending bill will work.

The modifications proposed in the pending bill will work some relief. I still think the pay proposed is not sufficient.

There is another matter in this connection to which I would invite attention, and I refer to the compensation that is allowed to third and fourth class postmasters. In few of these offices is the pay sufficient.

The pay of fourth-class postmasters is based practically upon the cancellation of stamps, and, as a general thing, so far as Idaho is concerned, the keeping of the office is a public service, which the postmaster renders the community for far too little pay. Communities must have post-offices, but it is not right that the office should be maintained at a sacrifice to the community or to the postmaster, while the highly developed free-delivery mail service is maintained in the cities of our land, where the mail is brought, not once or twice a week, or even six times a week, but two or three or maybe more times a day. There is an inequality here that it would seem it is now time to correct.

Again, the fourth-class postmaster, as his work mounts up even beyond that required of a third-class office, has no relief sufficient to meet the hardship till the work, and, I may say, the hardship shall have been borne for four successive quarters.

I have in mind a post-office in my home county where the work of the last quarter almost equals the work required for an entire year of an office eligible to enter the third class, yet this office must continue as a fourth-class office for twelve months, no matter if each succeeding month adds to the hardship already imposed.

But this is not all. A hardship is imposed upon the postmasters of many third-class offices during many months prior to their eligibility to assume rank of the second class. not have and can not have, under the law, the clerical assistance necessary to do justice to the postmasters and to the public. We should adopt a system that will relieve the injustice that is being done both classes of postmasters I have referred to, and at the same time give to the public the efficient service which is their due. The means of relief may lie in a fairer classifica-tion or in an allowance for sufficient clerical assistance. We can provide either.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25483-the post-effice appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONVEYING GROUND IN ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 1726.

The conference report and statement were read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the The committee of conference of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment, in the form of a substitute, of the House to the bill (S. 1726) entitled "An act making provision for conveying in fee the piece or strip of ground in Saint Augustine, Florida, known as 'The Lines,' for school purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows;
That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with amendments as

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Matanzas," insert the words " or San Sebastian."

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "Chief of Engineers" and

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "Chief of Engineers and insert in place thereof the words "Secretary of War."

Page 1, line 9, strike out the word "city."

Page 1, line 9, after the word "instruction," insert the following words: "of Saint Johns County, Florida."

That the title of said act read as follows:

"An act making provision for conveying in fee the piece or strip of ground in Saint Augustine, Florida, known as 'The Lines,' for school purposes to the board of public instruction of Saint Johns County, Florida."

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. O. YOUNG, ADIN B. CAPRON, JAMES L. SLAYDEN, Managers on the part of the House. KNUTE NELSON, A. J. MCLAURIN, FRED T. DUBOIS, Managers on the part of the Scnate. STATEMENT.

The original bill as it passed the Senate provided for the transfer of the property known as "The Lines," connected with the Fort Marion Reservation at St. Augustine, Fla., to the board of public instruction of St. Johns County, Fla., absolutely for school purposes, with a provision that said board might sell so much of the western portion of said strip as would enable the board to reclaim the eastern portion thereof. The House struck out all after the enacting clause and amended the same by the way of a substitute which provided that the Secretary of War might convey to the said board of public instruction, on condition that said board should lay and maintain a suitable drain from a point on Fort Marion Reservation to the Matanzas River to drain said reservation, so much of The Lines as he should deem sufficient for school purposes, provided that said deed shall contain a clause to the effect that when said property, or any portion thereof, ceases to be used for school purposes, so much of the same as is not so used shall revert to and become the property of the United States.

The Senate receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agreed to the same with four amendments and amendment to the title.

Amendment No. 1 inserts the words "or San Sebastian" after the word "Matanzas" in line 4, on page 1, so that the drain to be built may empty either into the Matanzas or San Sebastian river.

The effect of amendment No. 2 is to provide that the drain should be approved by the Secretary of War instead of the Chief of Engineers.

Amendments 3 and 4 simply correct the proper name of the board of instruction of St. Johns County, Fla.

The change in the title is merely to make it conform to the changed character of the bill.

H. O. Young, A. B. CAPRON, JAMES L. SLAYDEN, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CAPRON. I move the adoption of the conference report. The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

JOHN M'KINNON.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate concurrent resolution 48, and ask that the amendment be agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 16, 19.)7.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice-President of the United States in signing the enrolled bill (S. 1160) to correct the military record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack, be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the word "military," in line 5 of the bill, be stricken out and the word "naval" substituted therefor; also amend the title so as to read: "An act to correct the naval record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack;" so as to correctly state the service of the beneficiary, inaccurately stated in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the gentleman from Rhode Island whether the rapidity of his operation in the chair as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole is responsible for this little error?

Mr. CAPRON. I will say to the gentleman that this error is not due to the rapidity of the passage of the bill. The necesis not the to the rapidity of the passage of the bill. The hecessity for this correction was discovered after the bill was passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman finished his part correctly?

Mr. CAPRON. The procedure of the House was entirely correct, and this has nothing to do with its rapidity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad to hear that, because I was a little afraid that sometime a cog might slip.

Mr. CAPRON. I move the adoption of the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

"That the action of the Speaker of the House and the Vice-President of the United States and the President of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (8, 1160) to correct the military record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill the words 'Secretary of War,' in line 2, be stricken out and the words 'Secretary of the Navy' be inserted; that the word 'military,' in lines 4 and 7, be stricken out and the word 'naval' inserted; also that the title be amended so as to read: 'An act to correct the naval record of John McKinnon, alias John Mack;' so as to state correctly the service of the beneficiary, inaccurately stated in the bill."

The amendment was agreed to, and the concurrent resolution as amended was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration-

Mr. WILLIAMS. Monday, or some other time, I may not make any objection. I do not want to hear even what the bill is for fear I may be tempted not to object.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not made my request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Monday or some other time I will probably not object. But we are meeting at 11 o'clock; it is now 25 minutes to 6, and Members have other work to do besides the work to be done here.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Sunday, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Sunday, February 17, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.

But his delight is in the law of the Lord; and in His law doth he meditate day and night.

And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his scason; his leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper.

Our Father in heaven, once more under the dispensation of Thy providence are we met within these historic walls to pay a last tribute of respect to one who learned patience, wisdom, courage, fortitude, patriotism, and nobility of soul at the feet of our martyred Lincoln, and who served for years on the floor of this House with signal ability, and died beloved by all who knew him. Grant, O most merciful Father, that his example may be an incentive to those who knew him and to those who shall come after him to pure living and patriotic citizenship, so that when we pass from the scenes of this life men shall rise up and call us blessed.

Comfort his colleagues, friends, and kinsmen with the blessed hope of the gospel; and help us to look forward with faith and confidence to a blessed reward in some fairer life, where, with the redeemed, we shall live forever; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE HITT.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. ROBERT R. Hirt, late a Member of this House from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That, as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of these exercises, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved. That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. LOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, an old Roman once said that man was to be likened to a sentinel on duty, obliged to stay at his post until summoned hence by his commander. Perplexities might come, ill health might press him down, but he is bound, smilingly, if he can, patiently anyway, to bear the burdens of the earth until released from above. The man whose name we affectionately take upon our lips to-day, whose image is in our hearts, illustrated by his life and death this everlasting truth. More than a decade ago death was very near him, and during the time that since has intervened he knew that he was under sentence to die almost any day. And yet, never was he more useful to his country than during these years. He was, in very truth, a sentinel on guard, and serenely served his country and his time until the summons came. There is nothing which more dignifies man, which more benefits the world, than obedience to the law of service until the very end of life. The young can exhibit no triumph of mind which, in sublimity, equals that of the old man-old as the world measures age-who looks point-blank into eternity and genially and graciously helps to bear the burdens of the world. ROBERT ROBERTS HITT was fine in his splendid youth; be was finer still in his latest years. Though he knew that death had but given him truce, he lavished the best that was in him upon his country, family, and friends. He made it easier for all of us to meet old age and to meet it with a smile. Never were his perceptions keener, his charity broader, nor his affections deeper than during the very last year he walked the earth. His soul never shone more resplendent than at this time, though his feeble body was galloping to Then why shall we not believe that he survived the grave. the clay where he once abode and that we shall meet him yet again?

ROBERT ROBERTS HITT was born at Urbana, Ohio, January 16, 1834. His parents were Rev. Thomas H. Hitt and Emily John Hitt. The former was a minister of the Methodist Church. The former was a minister of the Methodist Church. When young Robert was a minister of the Methodist Church. When young Robert was 3 years of age his parents migrated to Ogle County, Ill., and settled at Mount Morris. Thomas Hitt was described by those who knew him as a man of high character and ideals, devoted to his work. The pioneer preacher in every stage of the development of this country has borne a conspicuous part; Thomas Hitt was a fine type of his class. The mother of ROBERT was a woman of great intellectual ability and beauty of character. This is the uniform testimony of those who knew her best.

Young Hirr was educated at Rock River Seminary and at De Pauw University. During his college course he grew deeply interested in the stenographic art and became a very accom-plished shorthand reporter. He preserved to history the Lin-coln-Douglas debates of fifty-eight, and it is said that Mr. Lincoln never arose to speak during that epoch-making time until he had assured himself that "Bor" Hirr was present and at his post. To us of Illinois he seemed the closest link between the martyred Lincoln and the times we call our own. fidence in and friendship for HITT which Lincoln cherished, the reverence which Hrrr felt for Lincoln, who once was ours and now belongs to the world, made Lincoln seem very near to us indeed.

Mr. Hitt was first secretary of legation at Paris from 1874 to 1881 and chargé d'affaires a part of that time. He was First Assistant Secretary of State under Blaine during Garfield's Administration. He was elected to Congress from the old Ninth Illinois district in 1882, and served continuously until the time of his death, September 20, 1906. He became chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs at the beginning of the Fifty-first Congress. He was appointed in July, 1898, by President McKinley, member of the commission to establish government in the Sandwich Islands. During the last years of his life he was also Regent of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. Hirr was married in 1874 to Miss Sallie Reynolds, a lady of great beauty, charm of manner, and cultivation of mind, who, with two sons, Reynolds and William F., survive him.

His home was a happy one. Those who were privileged to enter it found culture and hospitality so graciously interwoven that every visit there produced a delightful memory.

Of Mr. Hitt's career in Congress, his old colleagues in this House are better fitted than I to speak. I may be permitted, however, to say that the people of our district were proud of his achievements and knew that his counsel was of infinite value to the nation. In every crisis in our foreign affairs we turned confidently to Washington, for we knew that the wise, just, patient statesman we had sent you would be heard.

He was the soul of honor, and simplicity was the dominant quality of his mind and heart. Elaborate logic, too much refined, will miss the goal, where simple, unpretentious directness will win. This simplicity of which I speak was never more marked than in his public utterances. There are two kinds of marked than in his public utterances. There are two kinds of speeches—one intended to show the marvelous mental machinery of the orator, the other to elucidate the simple truth from out a complex mass of facts. Mr. Hirr's method was the latter.

Genial and gentle, he was the most levable of friends. The richness of his mind made him a center of interest in any company. Perfect naturalness seemed his. And this is why he liked men and men liked him. He was equally at home among the great and small. He knew that rank and wealth "were but thin disguises of the soul."

Almost a quarter of a century ago, on an occasion similar to this, he, whom we mourn to-day, in speaking of Major Hawk, who had preceded him as Representative to Congress, used these

He satisfied his constituents—no easy task, for that Galena district had been accustomed to being represented by men of national reputation, Baker, Washburne, Burchard, with whom he would be compared. But the people appreciated his solid qualities, his worth, his faithful services. They trusted and honored him again and again, and when he was cut off so untimely they mourned his death as a personal sorrow.

These words seem to have been as prophetic of his own career as they were descriptive of that other career then just closed. He was always proud of his district, and the district justified him in his pride. If thrift, intelligence, patriotism, and self-respect are, as I believe, the qualities which finally give superiority to men, the people of this district are second to none anywhere. He had an affection for the old district, and it loved him.

It is indeed a notable district. It was the home of Grant and Rawlins, upon whom that great captain leaned. It was once represented in the Congress of the United States by Baker, who fell at Balls Bluff while yet "his fame was in its dawn." Early in the fifties, before the Republican party was born, this district sent Elihu B. Washburn to this Chamber, where he remained until he became minister to France. Then came Horatio C. Burchard, who was a recognized authority on all questions of finance. He in turn was followed by Robert M. A. Hawk, a gallant soldier who died all too soon, the result of wounds received in the civil war. From then until a few months ago, Robert Roberts Hitt was the fitting Representative of the historic Galena district. Of the great group I have named Burchard alone survives, and the evening of his life is gently closing in about him.

I have heard many regret that Mr. Hitt's distinguished services to his country did not bring him higher place. I can sympathize with the thought which prompts the regret, but I do not join in the conclusion reached. It seems to me that to have served his country with the ability and fidelity which always characterized him, to have spent the last quarter of a century of his life in this great body, to have won its admiration and respect and now to live in its affections is a perfect public career.

On a lovely September afternoon, near the beautiful town in which he lived, I beheld the dust of ROBERT ROBERTS HITT descend into the earth. It seemed to me as I stood there that much of the brightness of this world had also gone into that grave. But what we saw was not our friend—it was only the garment of his immortal soul. Some place, we know not how nor where, that bright, bewitching, and gentle mind, that tender love, have found full play.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker,

With deep affection And recollection I often think of ROBERT ROBERTS HITT. He was as fine a gentleman as his generation could show; able, kind, generous, courteous, graceful, gentle, faithful, with a wealth of experience and knowledge equaled by few Representatives or Senators and excelled perhaps by none. He possessed the somewhat unusual faculty of imparting information without even a hint of superiority, and, therefore, without offense. He knew not only men but books, being a most diligent and enthusiastic student of the great masters in both English and French, for, among his many accomplishments, he read the language of Molière, Voltaire, Bossuet, and Mirabeau with the ease and precision of a Parisian.

King Solomon hath it that "Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver." In the rush and swirl of things here what our lamented friend Col. Charles Fremont Cochran, of St. Joseph, Mo., was wont to denominate "the old and experienced Member," sometimes fails in that thoughtful kindness and valuable suggestion which would cheer the new Member out of that feeling of utter forlornness which comes to most men upon their first appearance here. This Capitol, like "Fame's men upon their first appearance here. This capitol, like Falme's proud temple, shines afar," with an irresistible fascination to the aspiring man; but upon entering it, commissioned to sit in the seats of the mighty, he finds the veterans so busy with their own plans, labors, ambitions, and schemes that he feels as lonesome as did Alexander Selkirk on his desert isle. As I have now come to be one of Cochran's "old and experienced Members," I make free to suggest that we should always be careful to give the newcomers the glad hand. We may be welcoming statesmen unawares.

This train of thought was suggested by my experience with Mr. Chairman Hitt. At the beginning of the Fifty-fifth Congress, when I returned to the House after two years of involuntary rustication, I wanted Mr. Speaker Reed to place me on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, which he would not do, saying that I had too many rivers in my district, but that he would give me a better assignment. My friend, Senator Joseph Well-DON BAILEY, then the minority leader in the House, tried to dissuade me from my purpose to go on Rivers and Harbors, promising to use his influence with Speaker Reed to give me a good committee. I was never certain, however, where I would land until the last night of the extra session in the summer of 1897, when, just before the committees were announced, Mr. Hirr came over to my desk, placed his hand affectionately upon my shoulder, asked me if I thought he and I could get along amicably together on a committee, told me of my assignment, and welcomed me most cordially to membership on the great Committee on Foreign Affairs, composed of a rare set of men, where I served six years with great profit to myself and, I hope, without detriment to the country. From that night, by reason of that gracious action on the part of Mr. Hitt, I loved the man with something of filial affection and shall always fondly cherish his memory

If I had the entire membership of the next House before me I would feel very much like delivering a lecture on the relative value of committee assignments; it might save much of heart-burning; and the first thing I would tell them would be that membership on Foreign Affairs is much underrated generally. It is not merely a dress-parade committee, as some folks imagine. It has multifarious duties, most of them important, some of extreme delicacy, and others of far-reaching consequences. In my six year's service on it two great debates grew out of bills which we reported and on which the committee was divided.

Governor Nelson Dingley gave me some valuable information about committees out of his large experience.

I once asked him as to the comparative value of places on Appropriations and Ways and Means. He said that as a mental training they were both of the highest value in precisely opposite directions—that service on Appropriations drove a man into details, while service on Ways and Means forced him into generalization; that a reasonable service on both was of incalculable value as an education process. I have never received more suggestive information than that. In this connection it is not out of place to remark that Governor Dingley was much more of a philosopher than he was commonly credited with being. A man knowing what he thought on the tariff and what I think on that subject may be surprised to learn that he once gave me what I consider pointers of prime value as to the theory of making a tariff revision bill from my own standpoint; but that is a fact nevertheless, for which I am grateful to him, though in his grave.

Men may come and men may go, but the great Committee on Foreign Affairs will never have a chairman more thoroughly ideal in equipment, character, manner, and conduct than was

Mr. Chairman Hirr

Everybody acquainted with my mental processes knows that to talk of Col. Thomas Hart Benton has become a sort of fad with me. It is not unlikely that I sometimes bore people about him. I do not believe that "The Great Missourian" has had a fair deal in history, which I intend he shall have if I live long enough.

So one morning in the last year of Senator George Frisbie Hoar's life, he and I happened to come up to the Capitol together on a street car. I said: Senator, which knew the more, John Quincy Adams or Col. Thomas H. Benton?

With a merry twinkle in his eye, he replied:

If it had been left to them to decide, both knew the more.

Then he added:

Well, that is hardly a fair statement. They differed so much in their fields of investigation that it is difficult to compare them. John Quincy Adams knew more about our foreign affairs than any other American of his time, and Colonel Benton knew more about our do-mestic affairs than any American of his time.

A philosophic remark, surely. So, I think, it may be stated without exaggeration that Mr. Hirr knew as much about our foreign relations as any man of his time.

His whole life had been a training for that high, onerous, and delicate position. As a youth he reported for Abraham Lincoln the far-resounding Douglas and Lincoln debates—which in itself was a liberal political education. Such a privilege as sitting at the feet of Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas to learn wisdom comes to few young men. It not only brought him into close personal contact with those mental Titans, but gave him splendid coign of vantage from which to view and measure the big Illinoisans of that day, and what a magnificent array it was: Douglas, Lincoln, David Davis, General Shields, Lyman Trumbull, Dick Yates the first, Dick Oglesby, Leonard Swett, Richardson, Browning, Elihu B. Washburn, Long John Wentworth, the Lovejoys, John A. Logan, John M. Palmer, John A. McClernand, William R. Morrison, and Joseph Medill.

Besides these and other seasoned veterans whose voice has filled the trump of fame, Senator Shelby M. Cullom was beginning his long career, and, Mr. Speaker, your political star, now blazing like Sirius at the zenith, was just peeping above the was enough to send any youngster upon a political voyage.

It is apropos to state that one of the most dramatic pieces of prose in our vernacular is in The Crisis, where Winston Churchill describes the Freeport debate betwixt Douglas and Lincoln in 1858, at which time and place was settled not only the Illinois United States Senatorship for which they were wrestling, but also the stupendous issue of the Presidential elec-

Seldom in this world has there been-seldom in this world will there be-a question asked and answered on which hinges such momentous events as upon the question so carefully formulated by Lincoln, so carefully recorded by Hitt, and so promptly answered by "the Little Giant."

It seems to me that if the thousands of men, women, and children assembled in that soggy grove, in that drizzling weather, that day at Freeport, could have really comprehended the full significance of Lincoln's question and the words of Douglas, they would have shrieked with terror and would have fled appalled; but fortunately, mercifully

Heaven from all creatures hides the book of fate. Oh! Blindness to the future kindly given, That each may fill the circle marked by heaven.

And no human being there that day except Lincoln himself appears to have thought that anything had been accomplished except that Lincoln had reelected Douglas to the Senate-which he had. It seems to have occurred to no one there except to Lincoln what is clear to everybody now—that by that day's work Lincoln had not only lost to Douglas the splendid prize of the Senatorship, but had won for himself the more splendid prize of the Presidency; but such is the truth of history.

The "Bob Hill" to whom Churchill so frequently refers in those intense chapters, and whom Lincoln loved and leaned upon, was Robert Roberts Hitt.

When Mr. Churchill comes to issue a new and revised edition of his thrilling novel, he should strike out the name of

Hill and insert HITT.

After those debates, Mr. Hirr had a position in Washington which enabled him to study at short range the great men here especially the Missouri giant, James S. Greene, who had no superior in the Senate, a statesman of whom Mr. Hitt delighted to speak.

For years Mr. Hitt was our secretary of legation and charge d'affaires to the French court. This service brought him into close contact with the choice spirits of the Third Republic, Thiers, Gambetta, McMahon, Victor Hugo, and the rest; also, of course, he was thrown into the company of the diplomats from other lands.

The next step in his diplomatic education was that he served Assistant Secretary of State under James Gillespie Blaine when that brilliant man was in the flower of his years and in the prime of his splendid powers.

Thus equipped and thus educated, Mr. Hirr entered the House, where he served nearly a quarter of a century and where from the first he was considered an authority on all matters pertaining to our foreign relations. He was a model He would have made a model Secretary of State or an ideal ambassador to a foreign court.

If his health had been good, he probably would have been elected Vice-President in 1904, perhaps without a contest for the nomination, as it is generally understood that Vice-President Fairbanks did not really desire the position—at any rate was not an active candidate. It is safe to say that had Mr. Hirr been elected, he would have discharged the duties of that exalted station with such consummate grace and tact as to recall the days of Aaron Burr, who, notwithstanding the odium which rests upon his name, is still ranked by the traditions of the Senate as foremost among its presiding officers

Mr. Hirr made it a point to give one state dinner to his committee during each Congressional term, and I feel certain that all 'who served under him on his committee will bear me witness that to accept his hospitality was a delight, for we all felt that we were welcome guests-invited not on compulsion, but because he really wished to contribute to our happiness and to cement our friendship. Such courtesies may be classed among those which General Garfield once felicitously characterized as the flowers growing over the dividing walls of partisan politics."

Mr. Hitt was one of the finest raconteurs I have ever known. His mind was stored with anecdotes of the richest character about the most interesting personages of both hemispheres, and he was a rare artist in conversation. Many of his friends, including myself, begged him to write a book of reminiscences, and it's a pity-a positive loss to literature-that he did not

On March 4 I will have served twelve years here. When this Congress began, there were thirty-nine Members who had served longer. Fifteen of these will not be Members of the House in the Sixtleth Congress. Thus rapidly changes the personnel of this body—once more teaching us what shadows we are and what shadows we pursue.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, my acquaintance with ROBERT R. HITT began in December, 1883, at the opening session of the Forty-eighth Congress. His Congressional career commenced a year earlier, he having been elected in November, 1882, to fill a vacancy which followed the death of his predecessor. From my earliest acquaintance with him I enjoyed his personal friendship until the end of his life.

He completed twenty-four years of continuous service here, an honor and distinction which has rarely been accorded to any Representative. This continued fidelity of his constituents who sent him here was most creditable to them as it was honorable to Mr. HITT.

He came here after a thorough political training. As a boy at the post-office in the village store he was regularly perched upon a box or barrel to read from the New York Tribune from some published speech of a statesman like William H. Seward or an editorial from the pen of Horace Greeley to the few Republicans who in the early days of the party gathered about waiting for their mail. He said to me that he had first regarded these speeches and writings as dull and uninteresting. Later he became interested and by them were laid the foundation of his political character which made him a firm believer in the principles of his party.

Later it was his good fortune to be able to take down in shorthand the great debate between Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas, a debate that paved the way for Lincoln's elevation to the Presidency and found for him a place among the world's immortals; it likewise added new luster to the already great renown of Douglas.

Mr. Hitt's first public service was as first secretary of the legation in Paris, in which capacity he served from 1874 to 1881, and during a portion of the time, in the absence of his chief, acting as charge d'affaires ad interim. In March, 1881, he was appointed Assistant Secretary of State, which office he held until he took his seat in Congress during the following year. As a legislator his principal work was in connection with our foreign affairs. He was a member of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs during nearly all of his service here and was for an unprecedented period its chairman, the honored position which he held at the time of his

For a comprehensive knowledge of our foreign relations and a thorough understanding of every diplomatic question that has arisen Mr. Hirr had no superior. He had always at his command the details of every complication that arose between foreign countries, the history of all important matters which led up to the issue, and would often in an offhand conversation surprise the best of the world's diplomats by his thorough analysis and conclusions. He was often sought for information Though his tastes and his life work were more and counsel. distinctively connected with questions of foreign intercourse, he was equally well posted upon all questions of a national character.

He was a thorough gentleman, kind, obliging, and diplomatic, but not the least exclusive. He had an inner circle of friends, because some admired him and sought him more than others; but he had a kind word for all; was the same amable, independent gentleman to everyone with whom he came in contact. He was a good politician as well as a statesman. It was my good fortune to speak with him from the same platform to some of his people in a recent campaign. He not only showed keen knowledge of public affairs, but drawing his illustrations from business incidents in the locality, giving the names of the parties, the dates of the transaction, his appeal was one of the most forcible to which I ever listened. He was a good mixer among the crowd that gathered about him; had a good memory for names and incidents in the lives of the men whom he met. This appearance of Mr. Hirr among his own people, and the evident regard and warm friendship with which they greeted him, was proof that they kept him here not only because they admired him for his greatness of character, but because they loved him as a man.

Mr. Speaker, others will speak of Mr. Hitt as he appeared to them. I only speak briefly of him as he appeared to me without dwelling upon his great public service. He was a manly man, a high-toned gentleman in the best sense, a faithful friend, a wise and industrious public servant, a kind father, and a devoted husband. His life was an illustration of American manhood at its best.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, when it comes to the last analysis of the character of men who have served conspicuously for any considerable period in American public life, the result is usually a verdict of essential virtue.

For example, if we consider our Presidents in history, an exposé of their characters and accomplishments affords an inspiration and a realization which involves both genuine goodness and distinguished ability that challenges the world and all time for comparative examples.

If we consider our judiciary in history altogether, the record of their administration of equity and law-that is to say, of justice-reveals no blur upon the ermine of that order sufficient even to taint its shroud nor to discourage any man who feels the deeper inspiration of ability and exalted character.

When we contemplate, as we do to-day, the legislators of our nation in its history—I mean by that the men whose eyes are closed forever from our country and the world and from the mace; whose ears are deaf to praise and to the gavel's fall, and whose hearts no longer feel the thrill of action nor of noble purposes and of honest deeds, nor the faithful friendship of comrades and constituents-the conclusion in no way embarrasses the contemplation, but rather leads it further into deeper consideration of the characters involved.

Lamenting the loss of his living presence, his vitalizing usefulness, and his sympathetic helpfulness, we treasure not only for to-day, but for all time, in the records and the memories of men the accomplishments and character and the friendship of ROBERT ROBERTS HITT.

There are always two elements that make up and round out human characters, the inherent and the adventitious-that which we bring with us into the world and that which surroundings and associations give us. Mr. Hrrt was peculiarly favored by unusual endowments in both these elements. His ancestors were pioneers. They were of that stuff which produces rugged, cultured men. They helped to mark the early, toilsome trails of labor, usefulness, and civilization on our rich, young western world. They belonged to that matchless band of pioneers who feared neither the lurking dangers of the forest nor shrank from the hardships of adventure and preemption. The grandfather came to Ohio from Lincoln's native State, Kentucky, and then they went together in a colony to that wondrous region of the rivers and the hills of Illinois, early enough to feel the rich, life-giving inspirations of that virgin soil and to realize the thrift of its fertility and the virtue of its sterling manhood and devoted womanhood. They founded schools and churches and helped to civilize the wilds. They flourished with that mighty element of early settlers whose progeny continuously pressed farther, even to the western sea and setting sun.

ROBERT R. HITT, who began his life at Urbana, Ohio, in 1834, had better opportunities than most men of pioneer days for development through advantages of circumstances and associations. In the first place, the natural surroundings were of that rugged sort which forbade indulgences involving physical deterioration and which at the same time offered opportunities for education. He was schooled first at Rock River Seminary, in Illinois, which his father had aided in establishing, and then was graduated at Asbury University (now De Pauw), in Indiana. But perhaps the greatest fortune of his adventitious realizations was the opportunity which brought him into close association with that wondrous character, Abraham Lincoln, in reporting the Lincoln-Douglas debates, and in the closer associations of confidential and personal employment.

Of all advantages that may happen to a young mind capable of understanding, nothing can possibly count for so much in the way of substantial mental benefit and inspiration as intimate of all phenomena in our strange world, the only thing that holds us constantly and of which we never tire is human intellect, individuality, that personal something which manifests itself originally and in countless ways, through thought or deed or melody or dream, that something which is always and forever impossible until, like its own peculiar genius, it manifests itself.

But with all the adventitious elements that contributed to his life and usefulness the kindliest and gentlest of all aids and inspirations was the life association with that helpful and distinguished consort who survives to-day and with whom we share in mourning, offering to her and to her family our deep condolence and assurances of fondness and respect.

After the eminent advantages of such distinguished associations our friend enjoyed the opportunities of extensive foreign travel and of observation, which fitted him so preeminently for his subsequent duties as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in this great body, which position, as Representative from the State of Illinois, he occupied with unusual ability and exquisite tact for sixteen years, during twelve of which he was our chairman. It was in that distinguished position during the mighty and eventful years since 1890, crossing the threshold of the twentieth century, that his great and conservative abilities served so safely and so well the people and the interests of the American nation.

No man can calculate the value of his devoted, intelligent, and diplomatic services in that period of nearly two decades. It is neither necessary nor fitting in this brief hour of personal tributes to analyze the many international exigencies in which his superior tact and wisdom were preeminently displayed. History has recorded their results. Biography will detail and recount them, and future generations will revere the memory of him who wrought so nobly and effectively.

It was over there by the sea where he tarried in the summer days last year, beseeching God and nature for the strength to come to us again. But at last the sea failed to send him back to us, and now we mourn together.

Years and years ago I heard a black man say of Abraham Lincoln that the severest criticism could discover in him nothing that affection would conceal. For the first time, after more than a decade, that utterance flashed upon my memory when I learned that our chairman and our friend could never come to us again.

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Speaker, the character and fame of Mr. HITT as a public man are secure in the history of his country.

No critic could diminish it. No eulogist need seek to add to Mr. Hitt had been well prepared for the important post in the House of Representatives of chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

For seven years he had been secretary of the American legation at Paris. He had been Assistant Secretary of State.

Those who served with him in Congress can best speak of the sagacity and high intelligence he always brought to bear upon public questions, and peculiarly those touching our foreign rela-

My service upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs with Mr. HITT was only for a year prior to his passing away. Familiar for years past with his eminent public career, my personal acquaintance began with him with my membership in the House of Representatives in the Fifty-eighth Congress.

I shall leave to others who knew him and served longer with him to speak of his deservedly successful public career. I desire to bear testimony to those engaging personal qualities that caused those who came in contact with Mr. Hirr not only to admire but to love him.

Who that ever met him could forget his fine intelligence, and something more than that, his gracious manner, his kindly heart? He exhibited to me more than once his interest in my duties upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

More than once he made friendly suggestions, helpful to me in my service upon that committee.

With a proper firmness of character, Mr. HITT had in an eminent degree the charm of gentleness and gentle consideration for others.

An English poet wrote that he would not place upon his list of friends a man who, though graced with sense, yet, lacking sensibility, would set his foot needlessly upon a worm. The charm of Mr. Hirr's personality was his exquisite sensibility, united with fine sense.

Mr. HITT was a gentle man. He was the true, chivalric gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the very great esteem in which I held Mr. Hirr in his lifetime and in which I hold his memory now, together with the recollection of the friendly interest that he always manifested in me, lead me to pay my humble tribute to his memory on this occasion. He always seemed to me from the time when I first knew him to be a man of mark among his fellows, conspicuous for his great and varied knowledge, both of books and of men, his tactfulness in dealing with the latter, and the uniform courtesy that made his a charming personality. I never spent any time, however brief, in Mr. Hitt's company that I did not feel that I had learned something. It is not to be wondered at that his accomplishments were varied. His public career covered some of the most critical periods of our history and brought him into contact with its most famous men. From the civil war to the end of the Spanish war, from Lincoln to Roosevelt—of all the happenings of those tempestuous times he had a right to say, "Quorum pars magna fui." As a young man he reported the famous Lincoln-Douglas debates, and drank in from the very fountain head the inspiration of the principles for which the martyred President stood. To come into contact with Abraham Lincoln was in itself an inspiration. That great privilege Mr. Hirr enjoyed, and the memory of it followed him like the savor of a sweet incense throughout all the years of his life.

It was his fortune to be present at the downfall of the second French Empire, to witness the rise of the Republic, and by his tactfulness and good judgment to contribute to the welfare and contentment of his fellow-countrymen in Paris during the stormy days of the Franco-Prussian war, when he was first secretary of legation and chargé d'affaires ad interim at Paris.

It was no less his fortune to be the trusted friend and enjoy the companionship of the brilliant Blaine, whose Assistant he was as Secretary of State.

He was active, zealous, and exceedingly efficient as a regent of the Smithsonian Institution, ardently devoted to the carrying out of the objects of that great philanthropy, and rendering to the duties of his position such marked attention as has inseparably linked his name with its work and history. his portrait hanging on its wall, I am struck with the appropriateness of the place for it. The calm, scholarly atmosphere is suggestive of one phase of Mr. Hirr's character, for he loved his books and loved to be surrounded by them.

But it was as a Member of the House of Representatives that he made his greatest and best record. For twenty-four consecutive years he gave to his constituents and to his country the fruitful service of his cultivated mind, his mature judgment, his wise counsel, and his forceful efforts. idler, no fitful worker, but an earnest, honest, faithful, everyday worker in the field of legislation. He was the warm, trusted, intimate friend of that greatest of parliamentary leaders known in the history of the English-speaking people, Thomas B. Reed. As to all matters relating to international law and international relations he was the one recognized authority not only by his own party, but by all parties. He shared the confidence of President McKinley and was one of his most relied-upon advisers. A participant in the administration of his country's affairs during the period covered by the Presi-dencies of Hayes, Garfield, Arthur, Cleveland, and Harrison, he was a sharer also in the new career upon which his country entered during the Administration of McKinley and Roosevelt, the period of expansion of world power. To the new problems presented he gave his earnest consideration and to their solution his wise counsel. He was one of the commissioners to establish a government for Hawaii on its annexation to the United States

Mr. Hirr died full of years and of honors. His life is a part of the history of his time. In him were united in a marked degree the qualities of the scholar and of the man of affairs. His ideals were high; his actions loyal to them. The world is better because he lived in it. As husband, father, friend, he wore the white flower of a blameless life. And to that inner circle of his home, of which he was the light and center, he left the priceless legacy of a life of love and tenderness.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, ROBERT R. HITT'S long and honorable career in this House has been of lasting service to the country, and has left his name as another addition to the list of great and worthy men given by Illinois to the nation.

He was a pioneer in the art of stenography, and, at a time when there were but few men in the West who could take an accurate report of an extemporaneous speech, he reported and published the great debate between Lincoln and Douglas in their campaign for the Senatorship in Illinois in 1858. To this point the minds of his friends naturally turn as the beginning of his career.

It often happens that defeat is the stepping stone to higher success, and Lincoln, though defeated for the office of Senator, became an object of great national interest.

Mr. Hirr preserved Lincoln's exact words for the historian and marked an epoch in our history.

Mr. Hitt's chief service to his country in Congress was in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, where he was looked upon as the highest national authority.

His training in the diplomatic service especially fitted him for this work.

The House of Representatives is always ready to listen to the man who has something to say upon a public question which he thoroughly understands. Helpful men always get an attentive

Mr. Hitt had given earnest attention to all general and political subjects, but he had specialized upon the questions relating to our foreign affairs until his colleagues naturally turned to him for guidance. Another great Illinoisan, John Hay, was at the head of the State Department, a most worthy successor to the chair of Webster. Mr. Hirr was a very modest man, but he was always willing to give the Administration and the Congress the benefit of his constant study and clear and incisive logic.

He was a thorough diplomat, and, though he took vigorous and pronounced positions in debate, his uniform courtesy and good humor always disarmed hostility and won the respect and confidence of the membership of this body without regard to

He was always ready. Some of the best speeches made by him were delivered upon the spur of the moment. Circumstances arose in debate in which an answer or elucidation of a situation seemed imperative, and, while he had made no preparation for the delivery of a set speech, he was so full of his subject that he was prepared to present the question at issue with the cleverness, strength, and polish of a carefully revised speech.

Many instances of this faculty will occur to the memory of the older Members with whom he long served.

But Mr. Hitt was not a man of many words. Excellent as he was as a speaker, he was a worker rather than a talker. He gave full adhesion to the statement of Thomas B. Reed:

Boasters are worth nothing. Deeds are facts, and remain forever and ever. Talk dies on the empty air. Better a pound of performance than a shipload of language.

Humor is the great safeguard to sanity. To the man who has no sense of humor this hard, bleak world becomes intoler-Mr. Hirr was always ready to see the humorous side of all things. It was a great pleasure to listen to him when some of his friends would skillfully start and direct his conversation into a channel of reminiscence.

The period in which Lincoln lived was one of stern responsibility and involved the gravest and greatest of questions. But there has been no time in our national life when American humor has had freer scope than in those stirring times.

No better exponent of the life and times of Lincoln and his contemporaries has been known to the present generation than ROBERT R. HITT.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I too would lay a laurel at his feet, I met him when I first became a Member of this body. among the first to welcome me and that was one of the characteristics of the man; he had a greeting for every newcomer here. I served with him through six Congresses and came to know him in an intimate way. I was at the train when he left this city for the last time to go to Rhode Island, where he died. He had partially recovered from his illness and was in a cheery and happy mood, and seemingly confident of complete restora-

He was a man greatly beloved for his gentle and kindly qualities. He was genial and generous, sparkling with wit, and abounding in delightful reminiscences--a brilliant conversationalist and a delightful companion.

His career was a long and useful one to his country. a colaborer with the mighty Lincoln. From 1874 to 1881 he was first secretary of the legation at Paris and was later transferred to the State Department in Washington as Assistant Secretary. He was afterwards elected to the Forty-seventh Congress, and continuously reelected to each successive Congress. He was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and was an authority, the greatest in our country, on all questions of foreign relations.

He was a man of splendid ability, a great student, and when he addressed the House, although not often, he exhausted the subject with wonderful clearness and great power. He was frequently mentioned for higher offices in the gift of his State, and was at times a candidate, but always in his candidacies he maintained a high dignity and took the position that the office should seek the man. To-day he is mourned by all those who knew him as a warm and true friend. His name is honored and respected everywhere as one who brought great honor upon the State and nation which he served.

He was a man of great refinement, many accomplishments, faithful and true to the highest conception of public duty and public trust.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I accept this opportunity to pay my tribute to the memory of one who, in life, was my friend and in whose death I feel a personal loss.

Was he your friend? Then well you knew His friendship was unfeignedly true.

ROBERT R. HITT was a typical American gentleman, universally liked by those who knew him. Of him it might well be said that "Those who knew him best loved him most, and those who knew him little loved him much." He was reared on the broad prairies of northern Illinois, but a few miles from my own His parents came with him to Ogle County, Ill., when he was but 3 years of age. There he grew to manhood, was educated in the public schools and Rock River Seminary (now called Mount Morris College), and at De Pauw University. took up the calling of a shorthand reporter and was one of the few who early became proficient in that calling. He reported for the Chicago Tribune the celebrated debates between those two Illinois giants, Lincoln and Douglas, in the campaign for the United States Senate in 1858. He was afterwards appointed official court reporter for the State of Illinois.

In 1867-68 he made a trip abroad, visiting Great Britain, the continent of Europe, Egypt, and the Holy Land. In 1868 he became private secretary to Governor Morton, of Indiana. Afterwards he was for several years secretary of the legation and charge d'affaires at Paris, and in 1881 became Assistant Secretary of State under James G. Blaine. In 1882 he was elected to Congress to succeed to the vacancy caused by the death of the Hon. R. M. A. Hawk, and was reelected to each succeeding Congress until the present Congress. During the ten years preceding my first election to this House, in 1902, Mr. Hirr represented my home county, which was then a part of his district, and for twenty years he represented the adjoining county of Winnebago, now in my district. During that time I came to know him very well indeed, and the better I knew him the more I admired him for his ability and his great qualities of head and heart. In all his political career no taint attached to any official act of his; the finger of suspicion even was never pointed at him. In all the relations of life he was what has been termed "the noblest work of God," an he was what has been fermed "the noblest work of God," an honest man. I happen to know that other, and what might be called "higher," political honors might have been his had he been willing to do what some men deem legitimate in order to obtain such honors. His honor was dearer to him than any political preferment, and the consciousness of having maintained that honor unstained was his to the end of life.

Those who served with him through a longer part of the twenty-four years of his service in this House than I are better qualified to speak of his work here; I know that his work was appreciated and recognized as of the greatest value to the whole On questions relating to our foreign affairs he was an acknowledged authority. I saw enough of him here to know that, while he did not speak often, he never lacked for respectful attention when he had anything to say, and he never intruded himself upon the attention of the House unless he did have something to say. I heard his great speech in defense of the course of the Administration in the matter of the acquisition of the canal strip across the Isthmus of Panama, and the recognition by this Government of the new Republic of Panama. It was a masterly argument and one that, it seemed to me, must carry conviction to every fair-minded man who heard it. His knowledge of international law and precedent was, at least, equal to that of any other man in the nation. When such a man departs the country mourns. But in the country at large we have learned to know that the life of no one man is of very great consequence. "God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform." Millions of flags may float at half-mast to-day for the loss of one upon whom we have looked as a great and almost indispensable leader; but to-morrow those same flags will float as high as ever. The great world will move on, the progress of the nation will be stayed, if at all, only for a moment. Instinctively we turn our faces away from the tomb and take up anew the ordinary pursuits of life. However great or strong or mighty, however exalted in position or power or achievements, whatever of fame or wealth he may have possessed, death, the great leveler, reduces high and low alike to dust, and but a memory or an example remains.

The places of the departed are filled, even as the waters of the sea cover over and level the space where a ship has gone down. The greatest monument that any man can rear for himself, or leave to mark the place that he has filled in the world, is that in his time, in the age and generation in which he lived, he made the most of his opportunities; that, considering his environment, as he was given to see the right, he did the best he could. Measured by this standard Robert R. Hitt left a priceless legacy to his family and friends; a legacy in which his legion of friends all share. He lived in an age of the greatest achievements, of the grandest times the world has ever known. He knew and was intimately associated with many of the greatest men of the period in which he lived. He was the friend and associate of Abraham Lincoln, Elihu B. Washburn, John A. Logan, James G. Blaine, Thomas B. Reed, Nelson Dingley, William McKinley, and a host of other leaders of thought and action in their day and generation, all of whom preceded him to the other shore, that far-off country from which none have ever returned.

Mr. Hirr was a Republican and participated in the achievements and the glory of that great organization from the day of its birth to the day of his death. Yet he was not a hidebound partisan and his friends were by no means limited to the members of his own party, but were to be found in the ranks of all parties. He was great enough and broad enough to recognize the good in those who differed with him in political belief, and he had the respect and esteem of all who knew him, regardless of party affiliations. I remember well an incident lie once re-lated to me of an occurrence at Paris while he was connected with the American legation there. A prominent Democratic Member of Congress was visiting in Paris and expressed to Mr. Hirr his desire to meet the great French statesman Gambetta. Mr. Hirr went with him and introduced him to Gambetta. In France, especially at that time, party feeling ran high and members of one political party were not apt to be on terms of personal friendship with those of the opposing party. Gambetta expressed surprise that Mr. Hitt, a Republican, should introduce as his friend a prominent member of the Democratic party, and he said:

Mr. Hitt, I do not understand this. How is it that you, whom I know to be a Republican, introduce to me as your friend a gentleman whom I know very well by reputation as a prominent Democrat? I do not understand it at all.

Replied Mr. HITT-

in our country we do not let political differences interfere at all in matters of personal friendship. This gentleman is my friend, and although we do not believe alike on mere matters of politics we are yet alike in love of our common country and loyalty to its flag.

With a magnificent gesture of commendation Gambetta replied:

Behold, the ideal Republic!

And in that respect, thank God, it is ideal, and north and south, east and west, everywhere, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf and from the rocky shores of New England to the golden gate of the Pacific—aye, from the frozen regions of Alaska to the sun-kissed islands of the southern seas—we are one people, with one flag floating over us, glorying in a common heritage and going forward to a common destiny, which we believe, un-God, will be more grand and glorious than anything the world has ever known.

In the upbuilding of this great nation, now in the very forefront among the most civilized and progressive nations of the earth, Robert R. Hitt was a factor and did his part among the patriotic and progressive leaders of his time. He will be missed in the sphere of usefulness where his counsel and his work was of value to the nation; he will be missed in the great district he so long and so ably represented; he will be missed by the thousands of loyal friends who admired, respected, and loved him. No more will his voice be heard in this Chamber. Scholar, diplomat, statesman—his labors for his country and for humanity are ended. Kind, genial, companionable man—his virtues and his example remain with us. It is a pleasure to believe that death does not end all; that, in the language of the poet-

There's a land that is fairer than day;

That our friends have not gone from us forever, but that-In the sweet by-and-by we shall meet on that beautiful shore

Where there is no more sorrow, or death, or parting. Where all that is best in man survives and all that is unworthy is left forever behind; where the weaknesses and the jealousies and the animosities of this life fade into insignificance and are forgotten.

The seas are quiet when the winds give o'er; So calm are we when passions are no more: For then we know how vain it was to boast Of fleeting things too certain to be lost. Clouds of affection from our younger eyes, Conceal that emptiness which age descries. The soul's dark cottage, battered and decayed, Lets in new light through chinks that time has made; Stronger by weakness, wiser men become, As they draw near to their eternal home. Leaving the old, both worlds at once they view, That stand upon the threshold of the new.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):
Whereas Fort Meade is centrally located with reference to all the Indian reservations in North and South Dakota, Montana, and Wyoming, upon which reservations there are quartered about 40,000 uncivilized Indians; and
Whereas Fort Meade is the only military post in South Dakota and the only post in the whole Northwest possessing the required strategic advantages to exercise surveillance over the Indians and afford proper protection to the property and people of this rich and rapidly developing country (troops from this post having recently captured the roving Ute Indians in Montana and now have them quartered at Fort Meade); and

ing country (troops from this post having recently captured the roving Ute Indians in Montana and now have them quartered at Fort Meade); and

Whereas the lines of railroad now in operation and nearing completion will offer transportation facilities over four lines in four different directions, forming a basis for military movements, enabling troops to quickly reach any point of trouble; and

Whereas Fort Meade has a large timber reservation within the Black Hills Forest Reserve upon which there is pine timber and an abundant supply of pure mountain spring water, and also a military reservation, 2 miles by 6 miles in area, with all available adjoining land needed for the requirements of a brigade post, which, collectively, would include the level and rolling prarie, open and wooded streams of water, bluffs and brakes, bare hills and timbered mountains, offering all practical varieties of country for maneuvers; and

Whereas the hospital record shows that the pure, malaria-free, bracing climate renders Fort Meade the healthiest post garrisoned in America; and

Whereas Fort Meade is in process of rebuilding, as a two-squadron cavalry post, there having been built in the past six years brick and stone barracks for eight troops, hospital, post exchange, line and field officers' quarters, noncommissioned officers' quarters, bakery, powder magazine, stables, fire station, water system and concrete reservoir, sewer system and stable drain, macadamized roads and cement walks, electric-light wiring, and other permanent improvements modern and up to date, and costing over $600,000: Therefore, be it **Resolved**. That we favor and earnestly urge the Congress of the United States by proper enactment to designate Fort Meade as a brigade post and provide for the erection of additional barracks, quarters, and other structures ample and suitable for the proper garrison thereof; and be it further **Resolved**. That we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to employ their best efforts to compass this end.

Mr. GAMBLE. I present a joint resolution of the legislature of the State of South Dakota, in favor of the establishment of Fort Meade, S. Dak., as a brigade post. I ask that the joint resolution be read and referred to the Committee on Military

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

A joint resolution and memorial requesting the Congress of the United States to make Fort Meade, S. Dak., a brigade post, with permanent brick or stone barracks, officers' quarters, and other buildings.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives) of the state of South Dakota.

Be it resolved by the senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):
Whereas Fort Meade is centrally located with reference to all the Indian reservations in North and South Dakota, Montana, and Wyoming, upon which reservations there are quartered about 40,000 uncivilized Indians; and
Whereas Fort Meade is the only military post in South Dakota and the only post in the whole Northwest possessing the required strategic advantages to exercise surveillance over the Indians and afford proper protection to the property and people of this rich and rapidly developing country (troops from this post having recently captured the roving Ute Indians in Montana and now have them quartered at Fort Meade); and
Whereas the lines of railroad now in operation and nearing completion will offer transportation facilities over four lines in four different directions, forming a basis for military movements enabling troops to quickly reach any point of trouble; and

Whereas Fort Meade has a large timber reservation, within the Black Hills Forest Reserve, upon which there is pine timber and an abundant supply of pure mountain spring water, and also a military reservation, 2 miles by 6 miles in area, with all available adjoining land needed for the requirements of a brigade post, which collectively would include the level and rolling prairie, open and wooded streams of water, bluffs and brakes, bare hills and timbered mountains, offering all practical varieties of country for maneuvers; and

Whereas the hospital record shows that the pure, malaria-free, bracing climate renders Fort Meade the healthlest post garrisoned in America; and

Whereas Fort Meade is in process of rebuilding as a two-squadron cavalry post, there having been built in the past six years brick and stone barracks for eight troops, hospital, post exchange, line and field officers' quarters, noncommissioned officers' quarters, bakery, powder magazine, stables, fire station, water system and concrete reservoir, sewer system and stable drain, macadamized roads and cement walks, electric-light wiring, and other permanent improvements, modern and up to date and costing over $600,000: Therefore, be it

*Resolved, That we favor and earnestly urge the Congress of the United States, by proper enactment, to designate Fort Meade as a brigade post and provide for the erection of additional barracks, quarters, and other structures, ample and suitable for the proper garrison thereof; and be it further *Resolved, That we request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to employ their best efforts to compass this end.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION.

[A substitute offered by the senate for house concurrent resolution.—
Introduced by Mr. Grant.]

Whereas it is currently reported, generally understood, and manifestly apparent to everyone that there is a combination in restraint of trade between the dealers in coal and fuel and the dealers in lumber in the State of North Dakota and elsewhere; and

Whereas said combination is now resulting in material injury to the people of the State of North Dakota, is retarding the building and erection of homes, and exacting from the people of the State of North Dakota unjust tribute to this unlawful combination: Now, therefore, be it

Congress of the United States are hereby requested to use their earnest

Mr. HANSBROUGH. # CONCURRENT RESOLUTION.

[Introduced by Mr. Buttz.]

Whereas the construction placed upon the law passed at the last session of the Congress of the United States and known as "the denatured-alcohol law" by the Internal-Revenue Bureau is such that it is difficult to convert the waste and other products of the farm into denatured alcohol for use as light, heat, and power; and

Resolved by the legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota, That our representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to secure the enactment of said amendment into law; and be it Further resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, requested to forward a certified copy of this resolution to each of the Members of Congress from this State.

JAMES W. FOLEY,
Secretary of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the within concurrent resolution originated and was adopted on January 21, 1907, by the house of representatives of the tenth legislative assembly of the State of North Dakota, and was on January 29, 1907, duly concurred in by the senate.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of North Dakota, relative to the value of the waters of the upper Missouri and Yellowstone rivers for navigation purposes. I ask that the concurrent resolution be read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION. [Offered by Mr. Chapman.]

Whereas the honorable chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives is laboring under misapprehension or III advice as to the volume of water therein, and the value of the upper Missouri and Yellowstone rivers for navigation purposes;

whereas the volume of traffic on both of the navigable streams north of the forty-sixth parallel will continue to increase with the now rapidly increasing immigration and the wonderful development of the country tributary to said rivers, incident to the completion of the irrigation ditches along said rivers, now under construction by the United States: Now, therefore, be it—

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I do not know what juristic the Saveta has over matters of this kind, but it is clearly diction the Senate has over matters of this kind, but it is clearly out of order to have any communication presented here in the nature of a statement of the character of that which is contained in the first part of the memorial of the legislature of North Dakota which the Secretary has proceeded to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asked that the memorial might be read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will state that it is a concurrent resolution passed by the legislature of the sovereign State of North Dakota; and under the unwritten rule of this Senate it is entitled to be read at the desk and inserted in the Record.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say to the Senator that the State of North Dakota may be sovereign in its own jurisdiction and within its own limits, but it certainly has no right to send a communication here reflecting upon an officer or a Member of the other House. At least, I am sure we have the right, if such a communication is sent here, to not receive it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the further reading of the concurrent resolution in the nature of a memo-

I would inquire, Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota has had his attention called to the rule that no reference shall be made here in any way to any Member of the other House or to its action?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am entirely familiar with the rule, Mr. President. I was not aware, however, that there was anything in the resolution that reflected on any Member of the other House. If there is such a thing, I shall, of course, be very glad for the time being to withdraw the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution is withdrawn.

Mr. CULBERSON. I present a concurrent resolution of the legislature of Texas, in favor of the enactment of legislation relative to certain trade arrangements or agreements with foreign nations as will afford the best possible market for live stock and its products, etc. I ask that the concurrent resolution be read, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. PLATT. I submit a supplemental report from the Joint Printing Investigation Commission of the two Houses, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The report is as follows:

The Printing Investigation Commission respectfully supplements its preliminary report, dated March 26, 1906, by submitting herewith the draft of an act to amend the act providing for the public printing and binding and the distribution of public documents, approved January 12, 1895, and certain amendments thereto.

Much of the proposed act is necessarily a reenactment of existing law. Those phases of the proposed act which are in the nature of new legislation are designed to clarify inconsistencies and to dispose of what the Commission feels to be forced constructions of existing statutes, such forced constructions being justified only upon the ground of public necessity. REPRINTING OF BILLS.

such forced constructions being justified only upon the ground of public necessity.

REPRINTING OF BILLS.

For instance, under existing law no provision exists for the reprinting, in a number exceeding 300 copies, of any pending bill or resolution, no matter how great its importance or how great the public interest attaching to such pending legislation. Under existing law the number of copies of bills originally printed is limited to less than 1 copy for each Member and Delegate and 2 copies for each Senator. No provision of law exists for the reprinting of any public bill in a number exceeding 300 copies, and then only by action of the Joint Committee on Printing. It has been the practice, under what seems to the Commission to be a forced construction of section 99 of the act of January 12, 1895, for the Public Printer to reprint to any number required any public bill, on requisition of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives. This forced construction of the law has been in operation through many Congresses. Manifestly, there should exist provision of law whereby the supply of bills and resolutions in the document rooms of the Senate and House of Representatives may be replenished, and that upon requisition of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, who have jurisdiction over those offices and who are equipped to estimate properly the needs of such offices and who are equipped to estimate properly the needs of such offices and who are charged with much larger responsibilities in other matters. But, in the judgment of the Commission, such authority for reprinting should be within judicious limitations which would obviate the practice now existent which is susceptible of the greatest possible abuse. To deny, as the law at present denies, to these officers the authority to anticipate the needs of the Senate and the House, will either result in many embarrassing delays, or, on the other hand, in just such forced construction of the senate and the Public Printer, co

There is no provision for the reprinting of a public law, except by action of the Senate or the House. Such authority does not even reside in the Joint Committee on Printing or the Committee on Printing of either House. The reprinting of a public law is of frequent necessity, and in most instances the laws being mere leadets the cost of such reprinting is most inconsequential. A recent proposition for reprinting a public law consisting of but one page involved extensive debate on the floor of one of the Houses of Congress, and the cost of the reprinting desired was not in excess of $7. The Commission ventures the belief that the consumption of one minute's time of either House is of infinitely greater pecuniary consequence than the cost of the reprinting desired.

REPRINTING OF COMMITTEE REPORTS.

REPRINTING OF COMMITTEE REPORTS.

The same condition obtains as to the reprinting of committee reports. The necessity for such reprinting occasionally arises. The Commission does not believe that in ordinary cases even the time of the Committee on Printing of either House, much less the time of the joint committee, and still less the time of the Senate or the House, should be consumed by such trifles. At present such reprints may be legally obtained only through the action of the Senate or the House, the committees being powerless to relieve the situation. Under past practices it has happened that the time of the Senate and the House has not been needlessly consumed with the consideration of these trivial propositions, but under present conditions, with the existing law being properly construed and strictly applied, the Committees on Printing will be compelled to ask both Houses for consideration of many of these cases, which manifestly are inconsequential. In most cases these reports are likewise mere leaflets.

Under the forced construction of existing statutes above referred to it has been the practice of the Public Printer to honor requisitions.

which manifestly are inconsequential. In most cases these reports are likewise mere leaflets.

Under the forced construction of existing statutes above referred to it has been the practice of the Public Printer to honor requisitions of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House for reprints of bills, public laws, committee reports, and even miscellaneous documents, but manifestly the Public Printer under the same authority would be as fully justified in reprinting 1,000,000 copies of the Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture or the Congressional Record as he would be in reprinting a leaflet law or committee report or any document. It is in recognition of the practical necessity of providing a reasonably elastic method of securing such reprinting, yet with a desire to obviate the possibility of abuse, that the Commission has proposed the following amendment to the law:

"The Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives may order the reprinting, in a number not exceeding 1,000 copies, of any pending bill or resolution or any public law not exceeding fifty pages, or any report from any committee or Congressional commission, on pending legislation, not accompanied by testimony or exhibits or other appendices and not exceeding fifty pages, when the supply shall have been exhausted. The Public Printer shall require each requisition for reprinting to cite the specific authority of law for its execution."

The items of printing committed to the discretion of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House will not exceed in any one instance a maximum cost of $20, while the average cost would not be in excess of $3.

PRINTING OF EXTRA COPIES.

In excess of $3.

PRINTING OF EXTRA COPIES.

A condition practically parallel to that above cited, yet broader in scope, exists in respect of the printing of additional copies, now ordered by the Senate and the House within the $500 limit, established by existing law. The law provides that extra copies of documents and reports within the limit of $500 may only be secured by simple resolution of either House. It is believed by the Commission that the necessity of action by the Senate and the House in ordering the printing of extra copies within a reasonable limit can be very safely intrusted to the Joint Committee on Printing, thus relieving both Houses of a labor which occasionally becomes burdensome, owing to the inspiration of prolonged debate and the consumption of valuable time. The chief advantage which the Commission seeks to secure is in the avoidance of delays.

Frequently propositions coming within this class, after having been most carefully digested by the Committees on Printing, become subjects of extended inquiry on the floor entirely disproportionate to the pecuniary importance of the items involved, which in many instances do not exceed $25 in cost.

In many instances the Committees on Printing have been censured on account of delays in securing the printing of documents and reports which were needed by the Senate and the House, such delays being unavoidable by reason of the reluctance of either House to consider them, or the existence of obstructive parliamentary situations. Usually the class of printing coming within this rule is of a nature requiring prompt attention and could better and with equal safety be met by the following, the proviso alone being new legislation:

The Commission proposes as a statute covering the aforesaid conditions the following, the proviso alone being new legislation:

The Commission proposes as a statute covering the aforesaid conditions the following, the proviso alone being new legislation:

"Orders for printing extra copies, otherwise than herein provided for, shall be by simple, concurrent, or joint resolution. Either House may print extra copies to the amount of $500 by simple resolution; if the cost exceeds that sum, the printing shall be ordered by concurrent resolution, except when the resolution is self-appropriating, when it shall be by joint resolution. Such resolutions, when presented to either House, shall be referred immediately to the Committee on Printing, who, in making their report, shall give the probable cost of the proposed printing upon the estimate of the Public Printer; and no extra copies shall be printed before such committee has reported: Provided. That the printing of additional copies may be performed upon orders of the Joint Committee on Printing within a limit of $200 in cost in any one instance."

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE HEARINGS.

The present law provides for the printing of hearings of committees to the number of fifty copies, which may be enlarged upon the approval of the Committee on Printing of each House to such a number of copies as can be printed within the $500 limit, and provides, further, that there shall not be printed for the use of any committee "any hearing or other document costing in excess of $500." The intent of the law in respect of the limitations of committee printing is evidently to place the number of copies authorized to be printed at fifty and the limitation as to cost at $500, yet the Commission is aware that both these limitations are frequently and necessarily disregarded. The Commission is in possession of data showing numerous instances where necessary printing for committees has been largely in excess of the limitations imposed by law. In one instance, that of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce in the railroad-rate hearings, comprising a set of five volumes, the printing involved an original expense of $7,910, whereas the law clearly places the limitation at $500. The Commission, recognizing the paramount importance of and large public interest in the proceedings of that committee, is not disposed to criticise either the committee in question or the Public Printer, since Congress was not in session and since the practice followed by the Public Printer was an inheritance from his predecessors.

The original print of the hearings on the Government Hospital for the Insane cost $4,776, and even the hearings of the Committees on Appropriations frequently exceed the limitations now imposed by law. The Commission is prepared to admit that much of this costly printing for committees is absolutely necessary, yet, as has been suggested heretofore, the law, in affording committees reasonable latitude in the printing of their hearings, should likewise guard against the possibility of great abuses through the printing of large editions, recognizing that there is at all times authority in Congress for printing such hearings up to any number which Congress may deem necessary. It has therefore placed a limitation upon the number of copies of hearings for the use of committees, making it sufficiently large to meet all reasonable requirements, while placing an absolute limit which committees themselves shall not exceed.

While the Commission is not disposed to criticise the past disregard of law as to the cost of printing within the number authorized, it can not so readily excuse the disregard of the limitations as to the number of copies supplied for committee distribution. In certain instances hearings have been printed for committees to the number of several thousand copies, in one instance reaching the number of 10,000.

The proposal of the Commission on this phase of its suggested legislation is as follows:

"No committee of Congress shall be empowered to procure the printing of more than 200 copies of any hearing or other document for its nee, except upon the approval of the Committee on Printing of either House of Congress, and then in a number not exceeding 500 copies."

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE HEARINGS TO BE PRINTED AS NUMBERED DOCUMENTS.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS TO BE PRINTED AS NUMBERED DOCUMENTS.

No provision of law exists at the present time for the preservation of committee hearings in the form of public documents, and much valuable information, which, indeed, is the foundation upon which all important legislation of Congress is based, is ultimately lost to the world. The importance of preserving these hearings has been suggested not only by the Librarian of Congress, but by the librarians of many of the principal libraries of the country, and the Commission has no doubt that an inquiry addressed to librarians generally would reveal a practically unanimous demand for the preservation of matter of such vital importance.

Oute outside the demands which presumably reach the librarians of tically unanimous demand for the preservation of matter of such vital importance.

Quite outside the demands which presumably reach the librarians of the country for such hearings, it is apparent that Congress can not afford to permit matter so vital to itself to be lost.

Whereas many librarians suggest that certain documents now received could be properly eliminated from the depository lists without public loss, there seems to be a unanimity of opinion among librarians as to the value of committee hearings, which they are now enabled to obtain only by chance.

The Commission, in its proposed enactment, takes cognizance of those hearings which are of a strictly confidential character and makes provision for their protection.

The Commission recognizes that in the printing of the "usual number" of committee hearings it may not be important to supply the document rooms of the Senate and the House, but under the present regulations of the Joint Committee on Printing these offices would be supplied only to the extent of the demands made upon them; in other words, there exists to-day a provision of law whereby such printing can be kept at a figure absolutely minimal.

The proposed legislation providing for the printing of committee hearings as public documents is as follows:

"All committee hearings, or hearings of Congressional commissions, not accompanying reports, shall be printed as numbered documents, except when held in confidence by order of the committee or commission, in which case it shall be the duty of the chairman thereof to notify the Public Printer, in writing, of such action when the order to print is given."

PRINTING IN DOCUMENT FORM OF DEPARTMENT REPORTS, ETC.

PRINTING IN DOCUMENT FORM OF DEPARTMENT REPORTS, ETC.

Another abuse sought to be corrected, the magnitude of which can only be appreciated by extensive research, resides in the present practice of both Houses of Congress, under existing law, of ordering printing in document form of matter transmitted to it by Departments, bureaus, commissions, and boards, and miscellaneous reports referred to committees, which, under the operation of standing rules of both Houses, are ordered printed as a matter of form concurrently with their reference to appropriate committees. Under this practice occasionally printing of enormous magnitude but of doubtful importance occurs, involving an alarming encroachment upon the allotment of the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress.

While it is manifest that the right of either House to order original printing for its use should not be obstructed, yet it is equally certain that neither House should blindly order printing without full knowledge of the consequences of its action. As an illustration of the abuse likely to occur under present practices, the case may be cited of a report transmitted to Congress upon request of the Senate comprising purely statistical matter, important in itself, but worthless for circulation, and presenting little more than an exhibit of book keeping. The cost of printing this matter as a document, under the formal order of the Senate to print, would have amounted to nearly $60,000. Had not a resolution for the printing of extra copies been introduced, which resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing in each House, and which brought to said committees their first knowledge of the original proposal to print, the abuse would never have come to light. The original order was made under the automatic rule of the Senate, without reference to a committee having jurisdiction over its printing. The attention of the Committees on Printing having thus been drawn to the original order to print, resulting in a necessary estimate as to the cost edge of its scope.

Any amendment of the law calculated to reach this abuse must necessarily take cognizance of those multitudinous instances where formal orders to print must necessarily issue with comparatively little regard for cost, since the cost is trivial. The Commission in its proposed amendment of the law makes provision not only for the protection of Congress in the matter of extravagance, but safeguards both Houses against the inconvenience which would follow an arbitrary rule applicable in all cases. It would manifestly be not burdensome to any committee of Congress or to any Executive Department, bureau, board, or independent office of the Government transmitting reports to Congress, either in response to inquiries or in submission of original reports of great volume, to accompany them with an estimate of the cost of printing, that Congress, in issuing its order to print, should act in the light of such information rather than in total ignorance thereof, as at present.

In the general investigation of the problems of the public printing and binding, accusations of extravagance against Congress itself were freely made by those familiar with the general subject. The Commission is free to admit that much of this criticism is well founded, and that the efforts of the Commission to reform extravagances in the Departments can be more consistently, if not more successfully, prosecuted when Congress shall have first applied remedial measures to its own operations.

when Congress shall have first applied remedial measures to its own operations.

Hence, it is proposed that there shall be adopted a provision of law in the following language:

"Either House may order the printing of a document not already provided for by existing law, but only when the same shall be accompanied by an estimate from the Public Printer as to the probable cost thereof. Any Executive Department, bureau, board, or independent office of the Government submitting reports of documents in response to inquiries from Congress shall submit therewith an estimate of the probable cost of printing to the usual number. Nothing in this paragraph shall apply to reports or documents not exceeding fifty pages."

COST OF PRINTING CERTAIN REPORTS TO BE CHARGED TO CONGRESSIONAL ALLOTMENT FOR PRINTING.

COST OF PRINTING CERTAIN REPORTS TO BE CHARGED TO CONGRESSIONAL ALLOTMENT FOR PRINTING.

The Commission, in its investigation, found that one of the chief sources of extravagance lay in the fact that the original cost of departmental printing had been chargeable to the Congressional allotment, instead of the departmental allotments, the Congressional allotment serving as a general fund to which all Departments had free access. To cure the extravagances growing out of this system, the Commission recommended to Congress at its last session, and Congress enacted a provision of law, whereby the original cost of the composition, stereotyping, etc., on all Department publications became chargeable to the allotment of the Department or office from which such publication emanated. The Commission recognized, at the time of the enactment of this provision of law, that the application of this principle would, in sporadic instances, invite a measure of opposition on the score of possible inequalities, but an examination of the practical application of this new principle reveals fewer instances of such inequalities than the Commission had reason to anticipate, and none which can not readily be adjusted.

Mindful of the practice which led to large drafts upon the Congressional allotment in the printing of matter emanating from Executive Departments and properly chargeable to their own appropriations, the closing of which door to extravagance was accomplished in the enactment of public resolution No. 13 of the last session appropriation for printing and binding, and placing this appropriation again, in any degree, at the mercy of those who heretofore encroached upon it.

But the Commission is disposed to recognize the necessity for some equitable provision for the printing of boards and societies of quasipublic character, which, under their charters, are required to report to Congress, but to whom no appropriation or allotments of appropriations for printing are made.

The Commission therefore proposes to meet this necessity

NUMBERING OF CONGRESSIONAL DOCUMENTS AND REPORTS

NUMBERING OF CONGRESSIONAL DOCUMENTS AND REPORTS.

One of the complaints reaching the Commission from librarians and others having custody and frequent use of public documents, Congressional and departmental publications, has been on the score of duplication of and vagueness in titles. Since the opening of the Fifteenth Congress, in 1817, all documents and reports printed by order of Congress have been numbered in series, presumably for convenience of identification. The question of consecutive numbering seems to have overshadowed both the importance of either title or classification, and that which may have been in the early stages of our history a convenience has become not only an inconvenience, but grotesquely confusing.

It is conceivable that the present system was applicable to conditions existing at the time of its adoption, when but 647 documents and reports were printed during the entire term of a Congress, but when applied to present conditions, which involve the issuance of from 10,000 to 12,000 publications during the term of one Congress, the number in the Fifty-eighth Congress having been 11,189, with prospects of greater increase as the operations of the Government are amplified, it is apparent that some alteration of practice should follow.

Under prevailing practices a multiplication of designations, necessitating the employment of six different terms to describe a document without even then disclosing its title, has resulted, as in the case of "Fifty-first Congress, second session, vol. 16 of House Executive Document," which is "part 2 of vol. 5 of part 5 of No. 1 of part 2 of vol. 16."

To exclude from the numbered series all but strictly Congressional documents would obviate the confusion above noted, working no hard-ment," which is "part 2 of vol. 5 of part 5 of No. 1 of part 2 of vol. 16."

To exclude from the numbered series all but strictly Congressional documents would obviate the confusion above noted, working no hardship upon anyone, depriving no Senator or Member of any part of his quota, but meeting the enthusiastic approval of every librarian charged with the custody of public documents.

The remedy contemplated by the Commission would further enable the superintendent of documents to supply to designated depository departmental publications while the same were of current interest, instead of withholding such publications until they can receive their document number in the Congressional series. By reason of the delay in supplying the depositories due to the present practice, these depositories secure, through Department officials or through Senators and Representatives, copies of the departmental editions of current publications. In due course of time, but in many instances after such documents and reports are no longer current, these depositories are supplied with duplicate copies of the same publications under the regular depository distribution. The original copy is then returned to the superintendent of documents, who must find some other outlet of distribution for a document out of date; and, as a result, hundreds of tons of such documents returned from various depositories are lying in the warehouses of the Government, with no one willing to receive them. The expense of the unnecessary mail transportation alone is an item of which Congress may well take cognizance.

But more important than all other considerations, from the standpoint of expense, is the unnecessary cost of putting every departmental publication, including all the annual and the more important bureau reports, to press for a second time. It should be understood that before these publications are transmitted to Congress they are printed as departmental publications, and printed copies rather than manuscript copies constitute the report officially transmitted. These manual copies of the Commission cures this glaring evil.

The remedial provision proposed by the Commission contemplates the exclusion from the numbered Congressional series of all departmental publications and provides for their designation by title. It will also afford to the superintendent of documents, whose duty it is to compile these publications for purposes of binding and distribution, authority to classify them by subjects instead of as now, arbitrarily, by consecutive numbers, such numbers and arrangement being governed only by the date of their transmittal to Congress.

The arrangement suggested in the proposed legislation has been presented to the Librarian of Congress, as well as to many of the other important libraries of the country, and, without exception, it has met with their approval. In fact, the criticism of the present method and the suggestion of the proposed reform emanated from the librarians, and the importance of its adoption has been frequently urged by the American Library Association. The Commission has yet to hear of a single objection urged by any librarian or

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF DOCUMENTS.

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT OF DOCUMENTS.

The Commission is impressed with the inequity of charging against the expense of the public printing and binding the cost of administration of the office of superintendent of documents, which is distinctively a cataloguing and publishing office and in no sense a printing office.

It has been frequently charged that the cost of production in the Government Printing Office exceeds that which obtains in commercial printing establishments. It would be just as equitable to charge to the expense of printing and binding the administration of the publication offices of the various Executive Departments as to charge against the departmental allotments for printing and binding the administration of the office of the superintendent of documents, which is now actually done. The expense of the public printing and binding can much more justly be computed by the elimination of so irrelevant an item as that to which allusion has been made.

The proposed enactment to remedy this condition is embodied in the following language:

"That after June 30, 1907, no part of the expense of the administration of the office of superintendent of documents shall be charged to any appropriation or allotment of appropriation for the public printing and binding, but shall be otherwise specifically appropriated for; and the administration of said office of superintendent of documents shall be under the direction of the Public Printer, as heretofore."

DESIGNATED DEPOSITORIES AND LAND-GRANT COLLEGES.

The Commission invites attention to an anomalous condition in respect of the depository distribution. The law to-day provides for the delivery to the superintendent of documents of 501 copies of each public document, for distribution to designated depositories, and State and Territorial libraries, while the actual number of such depositories may be considerably in excess of this number and is actually to-day 539. That certain Members of Congress have not availed themselves of their right to designate depositories has afforded the only relief from what would otherwise have been a very embarrassing condition. The number of such depositories may be increased in future years as the redistricting of States may occur under laws of reapportionment. The Commission deems it most desirable that some automatic provision of law may be provided whereby the number of documents available for depositoriey distribution may be placed upon a parity with the number of depositories designated. Added to its provision for the correction of this evil, the Commission has deemed it desirable to include among designated depositories the land-grant colleges. This list of educational institutions number sixty-five, embracing many of the leading colleges and universities of the country, including such institutions as the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, the University of California, the University of Illinois, Purdue University, Cornell University, the Virginia Agricultural and Mechanical College and Polytechnic Institute, the Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, and many others, the combined membership of whose faculties number 2,672, or an average faculty of forty-one.

The total cost involved in the proposed increase in the number of depositories would not exceed $30,000, but from this sum should be deducted the cost of the volumes supplied to these institutions through personal requests on Departments, Senators, and Members of Congress, which, the Commission has reason to believe, includes fully 50 per cent of the depository publications.

The amendment to the present law to cover this phase of the Commission's investigations is in the following language:

"That upon request of the superintendent of documents the Public Printer is hereby authorized and directed to either increase or diminish the number of copies of publications furnished for distribution to designated depositories, or State and Territorial libraries, so that the number of copies delivered shall be equal to the number of libraries on the list: Provided, That the number thus delivered shall at no time exceed the number authorized under existing statutes: And provided further, That the allotment of 501 copies furnished for distribution to libraries be increased or reduced, from time to time, as the redistricting of States or the rearrangement of depository lists under provisions of law shall demand, to such numbers as may be necessary to comply with the law: And provided further, That all land-grant colleges shall be constituted as depositories for public documents, subject to the provisions and limitations of the depository law."

LAPSE OF AUTHORITY TO PRINT WITHIN TWO YEARS.

LAPSE OF AUTHORITY TO PRINT WITHIN TWO YEARS.

The final provision suggested in the measure which accompanies this report, while apparently trivial in its character, is nevertheless important and essential to the proper application and administration of the provisions of public resolution No. 14 of the last session of Congress, authorizing the printing of Government publications in editions, as the public needs may require, instead of to an arbitrary number, regardless of the demand therefor. The amendment in question provides that where the whole number of copies of any document shall not have been ordered within one year from the date of the original order the authority to print shall lapse, except upon the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing.

It is apparent that in most instances the demand for the average document not of commanding public interest will have ceased at the expiration of a year's time, and essentially the account should be closed. It is recognized that there may be, and probably will be, exceptions to this rule, which are safeguarded by the vesting of authority in a competent committee to order subsequent editions, within the original limitations, where a legitimate demand is known to exist.

The legislation proposed for the proper application of public resolution No. 14, above referred to, is in the following language:

"In the printing of any document or report or any publication authorized by law to be printed, or hereafter authorized to be printed, the whole number of copies of which shall not have been ordered within two years from the date of the original order, the authority to print shall lapse, except as orders for subsequent editions may be approved by the Joint Committee on Printing, and then in no instance shall the whole number exceed the number originally authorized by law."

It may be stated in this connection that under the operation of public resolution No. 14 aforesaid, the printing of fully 1,000,000 volumes within the current year has been saved in the Congressiona ernment warehouses and would in time have become obsolete and worthless.

The appropria ions for the public printing and binding had grown from $3,774,498.33, in the fiscal year 1896, to $6,963,255.82, in the fiscal year 1906. Under this rapid growth the appropriation for the current fiscal year would have been in the neighborhood of $7,500,000, instead of which it was considerably under $6,000,000, including specific appropriations, and the needs of the Government in this respect will have been amply supplied.

This showing is the result of some intelligent legislation, which, while vigorously effective, has been devoid of hardship or embarrassment to Congress or any Department of the Government. It can be safely asserted, on the contrary, that the public printing and binding to-day is being performed under conditions of greater facility and acceptability than ever before in the history of the Government. The Commission, as a result of its investigations and deliberations, is convinced that this enormous saving, in the face of a constantly increasing volume of matter requiring to be printed and a continuous amplification of governmental operations inevitably resulting from the growth and expansion of the country's industries, can be largely supplemented after further research by those competent to make such research, in the way of simplification of methods, reforms in distribution, avoidance of costly duplications, and cooperation on the part of those officials of the Government charged with the responsibility of publication.

DISTRICT HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, for which I ask present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire shall be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby directed to forthwith transmit to the Senate the names of all employees in the health department of the District, their several duties and titles, if any, and the amount of compensation in each case.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief observation concerning the resolution I have offered, and will ask the Secretary to read an editorial from the Washington Post of this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

AN OPEN DOOR TO DANGER.

The remarks of Health Officer Woodward regarding the necessity for giving increased authority to milk inspectors and providing for more complete inspection of outside dairies are deserving the carnest attention of Congress. Although the District has been fairly well cared for this year in other respects, the health department of Washington has been treated in niggardly fashion by Congress. The officials are underpaid, and their number is inadequate to perform the work as it should be done. The dairies furnishing milk to the people of the District are not properly inspected. Some of them are not inspected at all. Tuber-culous cows have been discovered in dairies supplying the District with milk, and in other dairies the disregard of sanitary precautions is appalling.

The health department is unable to enforce its own regulations in respect to contagious diseases. School children are not properly protected, and parents are not warned of the presence of contagious diseases in the schools. Milkmen are not promptly notified of the existence of contagious diseases among their patrons, with the result that no precautions whatever are taken to prevent the spread of disease by the circulation of bottles. The markets of Washington, although they are much cleaner than those of many other cities, are admitted to be deserving of closer inspection.

It is impossible for the health officer and his assistants to exercise the vigilance necessary to protect the people of Washington on the small allowance made by Congress. The door is open to danger, and only good fortune seems to prevent serious consequences. The good health of Washington, in other words, continues in spite of the mockery of organized protection and not because of its ministrations.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is rather a remark-

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, that is rather a remarkable pronouncement from a leading paper of the city of Washington, and I would not make a single observation concerning it were it not for the fact that similar matter has found its way into the columns of newspapers in other sections of the country.

The fact is that, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I have been laboring for sixteen long years in promoting legislation covering medical and sanitary matters in this District; and I venture to say that there is not a city in the American Union that has on its statute books as many laws relating to these subjects as has the District of Columbia, and in view of that fact, it is rather astonishing to me that the health officer of this District feels it his duty to rush into print and say to the people of this District, to the Congress of the United States, and to the people of this District, to the congress of the United States, and to the people of the country that we have neglected matters of health in the city of Washington. A few days ago the distinguished Chemist of the Agricultural Department, Doctor Wiley, felt it his duty to take a shy at the committees of Congress in regard to this matter, saying that we were neglecting legislation in reference to the public health. From various quarters has come the same cry, that adequate support is not being given to that important department of the District government, and that, as a result, we are having impure milk; that our school children are being neglected, so far as their health is concerned, and that all sorts of calamity is threatening the people of this District because of our disregard of the rights of the people.

Why, Mr. President, regarding the school children, we have physicians whose duty it is to examine them every day to ascertain whether or not they are in good health, or whether they show any indication of contagious disease, and we have legislated over and over again regarding contagious diseases at the instance of the health officer. I do not know what more we can do in that direction than we have done; and yet this editorial says that we are leaving the school children to the mercy of contagious diseases without doing anything to remedy the evil.

Now, Mr. President, I have submitted this resolution for the purpose of ascertaining precisely how many officials are employed by the health department of the District of Columbia, what their salaries are, inasmuch as this editorial says they are underpaid, and what their various duties are, so that we may be able intelligently to take up this matter, and if the health department needs more assistance, I feel sure that the committees of Congress will be glad to give it; but I want to add that I think in our legislation heretofore we have been reasonably liberal in that regard.

I trust the resolution may be passed.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. PROCTOR. I will yield to the Senator from Louisiana for the consideration of a bill, which he assures me will lead to no discussion.

ESTATE OF HENRY WARE.

Mr. McENERY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1217) for the relief of the estate of Henry Ware, deceased.

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representative of the estate of Henry Ware, deceased, the sum of $18,732; said sum to be in full payment for all injury and damage that was done to said decedent and his property due to the seizure, detention, and partial spoliation of 758 bales of cotton, the property of said decedent, and for $15,700 which said decedent was compelled to pay to said officials of the United States in order to get possession of part of said property. And there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,732.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE M. ESTERLY.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me in order that I may secure the passage of a short bill, which will not lead to debate.

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire. Mr. BURNHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 18924) for the relief of George M. Esterly.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to George M. Esterly, of Valdez, Alaska, $3,000, in payment for the loss of the gasoline launch Marilla, owned by him and accidentally burned in the district of Prince William, Territory of Alaska, on July 18, 1905, while in official use and under the rental of the United States Geological Survey, the appropriation having been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, the recommendations and the facts concerning the loss being fully set forth in House Document No. 732, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSEBUD INDIAN RESERVATION LAND.

Mr. GAMBLE. I request the Senator from Vermont to yield to me that I may ask for the consideration of a bill which has come from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do. Mr. GAMBLE. I ask that House bill 24987, which came from the House to-day, be laid before the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 24987) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus or unallotted lands in the Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect; which was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, and by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. GAMBLE. I send up two amendments to the bill. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 5, line 14, strike out the word "three" and insert "five" in lieu thereof; so that it will read: Draw interest at 5 per cent per annum for ten years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The second amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 6, after the word "act," in line 24. it is proposed to insert:

And there is hereby appropriated the further sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of making the allotments provided for herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, has this bill been reported by a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a House bill which the Chair laid before the Senate at the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. KEAN. Has it been before a Senate committee?

Mr. GAMBLE. A bill with substantially the same provisions Mr. GAMBLE. A bill with substantially the same provisions was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs to the Senate on the 13th of December. The only proposition there was that instead of a valuation or price fixed the lands should be appraised. A report was not filed for the reason that an inspector was out negotiating a treaty. The inspector succeeded in negotiating a treaty, and on the 14th of February the ratification of the treaty was authorized by bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate. This bill provides Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate. This bill provides substantially the form of the agreement, and the two amendments which I have offered make this bill conform to the agree-

I do not think the practice is a good one. There-Mr. KEAN. fore I must object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. GAMBLE. I trust no objection will be interposed. It is a matter of great importance to the people of my State.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go to the committee. I jection to the bill, but the practice is not a good one. I have no ob-

Mr. GAMBLE. I will be very glad to make myself plain to the Senator from New Jersey. This matter has been consid-ered twice by the Committee on Indian Affairs and has been favorably reported. The bill that was read here this morning and which has passed the House is in the identical language of the agreement. It is in conformity to the agreement with the Sioux tribe of Indians and with the statute, and it is a matter of great importance. The lands to be opened embrace about a million acres lying immediately west of the Rosebud Reservation, which was opened three years ago. If it is referred to the committee, the danger will be that it can not be considered at this session.

Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me Mr. LODGE. to make a suggestion?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly. Mr. LODGE. If there is a similar bill on the Calendar covering the same subject-matter, it is open to the Senator to substitute this bill for the Senate bill.

Mr. KEAN. That is correct.
Mr. LODGE. He can take it up by unanimous consent to-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the matter is of such supreme importance to anybody as the Senator from South Dakota suggests, it is very easy to refer the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs and have it reported back at once. Otherwise we will establish a precedent which would be an extremely dangerous one, especially if it is an important bill. I think it ought to go to the committee and be reported back in the usual way.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not want to be unduly persistent in the latter. Possibly I do not make myself plain.

matter. Possibly I do not make myself plain.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the explanation to be made by the Senator from South Dakota? Mr. ALDRICH. I do not object to the explanation, but I shall insist that the bill go to the committee and be considered in the usual way.

Mr. GAMBLE.

In reply to that, I want to say that this measure has been considered fully by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate. The bill that is reported by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs is in the same language as this bill. This is a House bill. It passed the House Saturday. called it up in this form so that there might be expedition in its passage. If it goes to the committee, the danger is there will not be opportunity to have it considered and will deny to it the privilege of passing at this session.

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GAMBLE. Certainly. Mr. CLAY. I understood the Senator to say that a bill identical with this was before the Committee on Indian Affairs in the Senate, and had been reported by the Senate committee and is now on the Calendar.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is not on the Calendar.

Mr. CLAY. Then this bill could not be substituted for it. That is true

Mr. GAMBLE. The report was authorized last Thursday. The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALDRICH. I thought I made my position plain about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood.
Mr. ALDRICH. It is not necessary to reiterate it.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was about to state that the bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BULKELEY.

Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.
Mr. BULKELEY. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14361) granting an honorable discharge to David Harrington, to report it favorably without amendment; and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to David Harrington, late a member of Company D, Thirty-second Ohio Volunteer In-

Mr. CLAY. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 24821) to authorize the Georgia Southwestern and Gulf Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Chattahoochee River between the States of Alabama and Georgia.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire, and then I must insist on proceeding with the agricultural ap-

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23384) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia,' regulating proceedings for con-demnation of land for streets."

Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24815) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30.1908

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, when this bill was last under discussion we had reached the Forestry Service, at the bottom of page 36, and the amendment increasing the salary of the Forester was under consideration. The Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] made some objection, and authorized me to make a statement, but as he is present he will make it much better himself.

I wish to say, while I am up, that if I said anything that seemed to detract from a proper appreciation of the services of the several Assistant Secretaries, I did not intend anything of the kind. They are hard-working, underpaid men. We have increased the salaries of the heads of Departments 50 per cent; we have increased our own 50 per cent; and I certainly think the assistant secretaries deserve an increase as much as anyone that I know of. I shall at the proper time move that the salary of the Assistant Secretary of the Department of Agriculture be made $5,000.

The reason why it was not proposed by the committee as an amendment was not because we did not favor it, for it was discussed and the general expression was in favor of it, but because we did not wish to ask for too much; and as the appointments have usually been semi-political, and the term of service not very long, we thought they might perhaps bear a manifest injustice a little more easily than men whose services were continued for years and whose services would be required for years.

I wish myself that we might have in each Department an assistant, a nonpolitical appointment, who should serve continuously and be entirely familiar with the administration of the Department. It would be of great assistance to the new head of the Department, and those changes occur very frequently.

So far as concerns a general increase of the salaries of these officers at the present session, it is not too late, I think, to make it now, and I shall certainly propose it in regard to the Assistant Secretary of this Department. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I find on looking at the salaries which are paid to the heads of bureaus in the Agriculture Department and in some other Departments, notably, the Department of Commerce and Labor, that pretty nearly all of the salaries have already been raised, and that the head of this Bureau, the Chief Forester, seems to have been about the most modest. and retiring of all of them. All save only him have succeeded in getting their pay put up, and I do not think we ought to discriminate against a modest man. He is getting no more to-day than the officer got in this place ten years ago, and I learn that he has not in any way solicited the increase; that he has not even asked for it. Under these conditions I do not think any further objection could be made to the amendment.

Mr. FULTON. Before the amendment is voted on, I ask the

Mr. FULTON. Before the amendment is voted on, I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me for a few minutes.

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, when this amendment was up for consideration on Thursday last I took occasion to suggest that if the proposed increase in salary was to be predicated on the alleged exceptionally efficient organization and administration of this Bureau, I should have to oppose the amendment. I am not concerned whether this salary shall be increased or diminished, and I do not apprehend that the gentleman who occupies the office is very much concerned whether his salary shall be increased or not. It is quite well known-indeed, it has been stated on this floor-that he is a gentleman of very large wealth, and I have seen it frequently stated in the press, and I have never heard it denied

Mr. PROCTOR. It is a mistake. Mr. FULTON. What is that?

Mr. PROCTOR. I think that is a mistake.
Mr. FULTON. What; that he is a gentleman of large wealth?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. FULTON. I have frequently seen it stated in the press, and I have never heard it denied, that he does not appropriate I have frequently seen it stated in the press, any of the salary to his own use, but to charitable purposes, for which he is indeed to be commended.

would not now further detain the Senate by a discussion of this subject were it not for the fact that immediately on my making the statement mentioned, my friend, the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Beveride], took the floor in defense of the character of the Forester, Mr. Pinchot. I was surprised that my remarks should have been interpreted as in any wise reflecting on his character, integrity, or devotion to duty. I had no such thought or purpose. I esteem Mr. Pinchot most highly; believe him to be a gentleman of high character and patriotic purpose. I do not, however, at all times, in all respects and particulars approve of his theories as applied in connection with the administration of the forest reserves. How far he is responsible for all the abuses growing out of the administration of these reserves I do not know, nor shall I undertake to say I do not believe, in fact, that he is in any degree responsible therefor, but since this question has arisen I do wish to say that, in my judgment, not only is the administration of that department unbusinesslike, but the policy itself has been, by the constant and ceaseless aggressions of the Bureau, carried far beyond the original purpose and intention of Congress in pro-viding for forest reserves. In all the statutes authorizing the creation of these reserves it has been expressly stipulated that they should not include lands chiefly valuable for agriculture or mining purposes. And yet there are to-day withdrawn for reservations, and included therein, hundreds of thousands of acres of lands in the State of Oregon that are chiefly valuable for grazing and agriculture; land on which not a stick of timber ever has grown or ever will grow. The lands within these reservations are being leased to stock men and the rental kept as a distinct fund under the absolute control of the Bureau. The last statement I saw there was something like half a million dollars in this fund.

I have not seen the statement for this year. All this money is being levied and collected without any authority of law. It is not paid into the Treasury subject to appropriation, and when it is proposed to provide by legislation for covering it into the Treasury the movement is met by the most strenuous opposition on the part of this Bureau. So much of this fund is expended by the Bureau officials as they deem necessary for such purposes as they deem proper and the balance is carried to the credit of the Bureau. The Senator from Indiana says that no Department has actually earned so much money for the Govern-The Senator from Indiana says that no ment. Of that and of the policy of converting the public lands into a permanent governmental revenue-producing proposition I shall have something to say further on. But before taking that up let me remind the Senator that through no Department has the Government lost or been actually defrauded of so much as through the administration of the forest reserves.

We have heard much of public-land frauds, and it was generally assumed that it was under the timber and stone act that these frauds were chiefly perpetrated. As a matter of fact, the Government has never lost a dollar under the administration of that act. For every acre of land for which a patent was issued under that act the Government received the price fixed by statute, namely, $2.50. The frauds under that act did not consist in cheating the Government out of the price, but in the party applying to purchase taking a false oath, testifying that he was purchasing for his own use and benefit, when, in fact, he had, in many instances, already contracted to sell to another. But the Government was paid the full price.

Under the forest-reserve statutes the boundaries of reservations have been made to include millions of acres of worthless, or comparatively worthless, lands owned by land-grant railroad These lands the companies were permitted to exchange for the finest timber lands in the world. In the Rainier Forest Reserve, in the State of Washington, hundreds of thou-sands of acres of rocks and crags and beetling cliffs were thus exchanged, but the valuable timber lands within the reserves were retained, of course, by the company. In my own State the Northern Pacific Railway Company was permitted to exchange these worthless lands, these rocks and towering peaks, and probably the eternal snows of Rainier's lofty summit, for entire townships of unsurveyed lands on which stand the grand-est forests of the world. Much of this land was unsurveyed, and hence settlers or other entrymen could not take it, but under the Department's construction the "forest-reserve scrip," so called, was applicable to it. And so by the administration of the forest reserves this Government has lost millions of dollars, and the subsidies to certain land-grant railroads have been enhanced many millions more, for the lands they located were the finest and actually worth twenty or thirty dollars per acre at the time and now doubtless worth $100 per acre, while the lands they surrendered will be worth no more on the morning of the millennium than they are to-day. It is true that Congress has repealed the law that permitted these exchanges, but that for which I condemn the Bureau is for having permitted these worthless lands to be included in reserves, knowing, as they must have known, what the result would be.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.
Mr. FUINT. I simply want to ask the Senator from Oregon whether it was not the act itself that caused the trouble, in that'the Congress of the United States permitted this selection to be made, as he states. The Administration was in no way responsible for the selection.

Mr. FULTON. Not altogether.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator permit me to make a remark at this point?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

I state here and now that the original lieu Mr. CARTER. land exchange scheme which was provided for in the appropriation bill contemplated only the relief of actual settlers whose claims were embraced within forest reserves. Had that law been confined, as Congress intended it to be confined, to individuals no substantial injury would have occurred. Originally the Interior Department held that the law did not extend to land-grant corporations. The General Land Office held to that view. The Secretary of the Interior arbitrarily, I understand, commanded the General Land Office to reverse its decision and permit this wholesale exchange by the land-grant railroad companies of their worthless lands in forest reserves, and thus this mighty rush for lieu lands occurred, to the great and enduring detriment of the people of the United States.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Montana is eminently cor-As a matter of fact, answering the question of the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], which was whether the law is not to blame for the frauds that grew up under the administration of the forestry department, I answer no.

In the first place, as the Senator from Montana has said, the proper construction of the law creating the forest reserves clearly entitles no person except the settler to exchange his land for land on the outside. That is the plain spirit of the law. It is what Congress contemplated at the time, and it was only by the construction of the Department that a different feature was incorporated into the law.

But that is not the only reason why I say this Department must be chargeable for the fraud that grew up under the administration of that law. As I have said before, it was for the Department to say when and where withdrawals for forest reserves should be made. It was for them to determine whether a tract should be withdrawn that embraced a large portion of the holdings of a land-grant railroad or not; and when they knew the construction that was being given to the law, when they knew that by withdrawing for a forest reserve millions of acres of land held by the land-grant railroads, a great portion of which was practically worthless, the owners of those lands could exchange them for the best agricultural and timber lands in the country, I say it was the duty of a faithful administrator of the law to decline to withdraw those lands and to incorporate them into a reserve.
Mr. CARTER. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FULTON. With pleasure.
Mr. CARTER. The point made by the Senator was distinctly made by Mr. Secretary Bliss. He felt that the law should not avail land-grant railroad companies, and in creating a reserva-tion in the Territory of Arizona he specified as forest reserve only the even-numbered sections, to the end that the railroad company could not by any possibility avail itself of the privi-lege of exchanging that chaparral country for the white pine and yellow pine of Puget Sound.

The present Secretary, however, departed from the policy of Mr. Bliss in that behalf. He deliberately included the even sections and made a contract with the railroad company extending their time for the selection of these timbered lands after the law itself had been repealed.

Mr. FULTON. I am under obligations to the Senator from Montana for that contribution to the subject.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I should like to ask my friend from Oregon how this reflects upon the Chief Forester or the Forestry Service? Does not the administration of it properly belong, under the Secretary of the Interior, to the General Land Office? frauds have been committed undoubtedly in levying this lieuland scrip, should not the blame, if there is blame, properly rest upon the Land Department of the Government?

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Oregon permit me to make a suggestion at that point?

Mr. FULTON. With pleasure. Mr. CARTER. The Secretary The Secretary of the Interior upon any day upon recommendation to the President might have withdrawn this imperial forest from entry by lieu-land scrip. He had the same command over the public domain that is exercised to-day, and yet, with a pliancy hitherto unknown in a Department of the Government, he witnessed the confiscation by the railroad land grant companies of the most superb areas of the globe.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President— Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.
Mr. WARREN. In reference to what the Senator from Montana has so well said, it is unnecessary to take that up as having reference to the head of the Forestry Department, because all that was done under the Interior Department proper before it was transferred to the Agricultural Department and before it was in charge of the Forester, whose case is now before us.

Mr. FULTON. When was the present Forester appointed?
Mr. WARREN. He has no control.
Mr. FULTON. He was appointed long before the transfer to the Agricultural Department, and right here—
Mr. WARREN. One moment. He was the Forester in the Agricultural Department, and he had little to do with the forest reserves under the Interior Department.

Mr. FULTON. I am not saying that he had. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FULTON. In a minute. I wish to make myself clear on this proposition, and then I will yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly; I will not interrupt the Sen-

Mr. FULTON. I will then yield with pleasure to the Senator from Indiana.

The questions and statements of Senators continually imply exactly what I sought clearly to negative when I commenced. that I am making some criticism of or assault upon the present Forester. I thought I made myself clear on that point. I do not say that he is responsible for this condition, but I do say that the Forestry Department, as a bureau charged especially with this branch of the service, must bear some of the responsibility with the Interior Department.

Now I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I do not feel like interrupting the Senator. Mr. FULTON. If I was discourteous to the Senator I did not mean to be so.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. All I was going to ask him was to direct his attention to the question of the Senator from California [Mr. Perkins], which seems to me, with my very limited knowledge of this subject, to be extremely pertinent to the particular point which we were discussing the other day, to wit, the services and their value, with the excellence of character and every other admirable quality of the Chief Forester.

Mr. FULTON. You can not pass any eulogy on Mr. Pinchot personally to which I will not agree.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. His efficiency—

Mr. FULTON. You can not say a word as to his urbanity or gentlemanliness and all that sort of thing to which I will not

Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; I have made no statement about his urbanity or gentlemanliness, which seems to amuse one Senator; my remarks were directed to his efficiency as a public servant. As to the question which the Senator is discussing with vigor and feeling, the Senator from California pointed out, it seemed to me, that that was a criticism properly directed to the Interior Department for any defect, with which this perfectly admirable public servant (the Chief Forester) had nothing to do and with which he was not chargeable.

Mr. FULTON. Very well. I am perfectly willing—in fact, I am desirous—that this responsibility shall be placed on the shoulders to which it properly belongs. I myself believe, and I say here right now, that the real responsibility did rest upon and the consequences must be borne by the Secretary of the Interior. But incidentally this Bureau shares a certain amount of responsibility. I am simply taking advantage of this particular occasion to give expression to some of the views I have on this subject in a general way.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have become more enlightened as the Senator proceeds. I was at luncheon when the Senator began.

Mr. FULTON. I very much appreciate the Senator's compliment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If that is the purpose of the Senator, and if that is the scope of his remarks, I will listen to him with increased pleasure.

Mr. FILLTON. The Senator from Indiana told us the other day that this Bureau, this great Department, as he called it for a great Department, he said, it has come to be-was contributing more money to the Treasury than any other Department of the Government. Whether that is an exactly accurate statement I do not know. I do not know that the Senator intended it for an absolutely accurate one. I suppose he intended simply to draw attention to the amount that they are actually contributing to the Government.

Be that as it may, the question arises, Mr. President-and I think it is a pertinent one—how are they raising this money? How are they creating this great fund? That is the particular question that I desire to discuss here to-day in a brief way. They are creating this fund by withdrawing from public sale and from entry under the homestead laws or under any of the laws of Congress great bodies of valuable land, valuable for timber, valuable for agriculture, valuable for grazing-taking them and converting them into great reserves within the body of a State and rendering it impossible for them to contribute in any degree or to any extent whatever to the industrial life, growth, and commercial development of the State. They are robbing the State of its resources, hampering it in its development, and for what purpose? To create a great fund for this Government. I deny, Mr. President, that it is good policy, I deny that it is a wise policy, to convert the public land of this country for all time into a revenue-producing proposition for the benefit of the General Government. I deny that it is a wise public policy that the Government shall engage in business within the limits of a State.

I submit, Mr. President, that when a new State is created there is an implied promise, if not a direct one, that the public lands shall not be retained by the General Government longer than is necessary to dispose of them in an orderly and beneficial way. I believe it is the implied contract between the General Government and the States that the States shall have the benefit of these lands being carried into their industrial life and contributing to their revenues and industries

The State of Oregon has something like 20,000,000 acres of merchantable timber, about one-third of its entire area. There are to-day incorporated within the forest reserves in that State something like 14,000,000 acres, or approximately one-fourth of the entire area of the State.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will kindly suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. Senate resolution No. 214, that a duly qualified entryman is entitled to patent for land, etc.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. FULTON. A large portion of the 14,000,000 acres of which I speak that is incorporated within forest reserves is capable of being devoted to agriculture, is fine grazing land, is of great value, and would be of great value to the people of that State, and would contribute largely toward building up the industries of that State. By what right does the General Gov-ernment exclude from the industries of the State that great portion of her public domain?

Mr. PERKINS. I dislike to interrupt my friend, but we have the same object in view

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator dislikes to interrupt me, it is offset by the pleasure I enjoy in being interrupted by him.

Mr. PERKINS. If errors exist, we want to correct them. it not a matter of fact, I ask my friend from Oregon, that the lands within these reservations are open to homestead entry and open to preemption, and is it not a fact that within the past year 2,000 applications have been filed, and did it not appear before our committee that one-half of those applications for homesteads were filed for the purpose of obtaining the timber upon the land?

Mr. FULTON. How many of the applications were granted? Mr. PERKINS. About one-half of them.

Mr. FULTON. Were one-half granted in all the public-land hates? How many were granted in all the public-land States?

Mr. PERKINS. I am not able to state correctly, but it is my impression that 2,000 applications were made, according to the statement before our committee, and that about one-half of them were granted.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair) Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator. Mr. CARTER. It is well known, I Mr. CARTER. It is well known, I think, that for several years past all of the timber and stone lands in the States of Oregon and Washington have been under suspension. The record is that all of the entries have been very carefully scrutinized, and since 1900 only seventy-two entries out of the two thousand and odd have been found fraudulent and subject to criticism because of error in the papers or in the attempt to execute the contract with the Government.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.
Mr. FLINT. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact that, as shown by the President's message to Congress February 13, after the investigation within the past few months of the desert-land entries, the homestead entries, and other entries in the West, over 50 per cent of them have been found to be either irregular or based upon fraud.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

I yield to the Senator from Montana. Mr. FULTON.

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I do not challenge the President's message. I do challenge the fact.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, a few evenings ago two boats met somewhere this side of Providence, R. I., and both were badly crippled, and one went to the bottom. One hundred per cent of the two boats of course sank on that occasion. It was a terrific failure of good navigation. Thus it is that selecting two land offices in the whole United States and a bunch of cases Thus it is that selecting collected from those the message undertakes to make an average for the 325,000 entries on the public domain. The record is shown by the Land Office to be, as I have heretofore stated it, that less than one-third of 1 per cent of the homestead entries have been found fraudulent in a period of eighteen years; that less than 1 per cent of the timber and stone entries, and less than 1 per cent of the coal entries, and less than 1 per cent of the desert-land entries, taking the country as a whole, have been found to be fraudulent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I rise just for a question, because I am entirely ignorant on this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon

yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. I can not yield for a speech. If the Senator wants to ask a question of the Senator from Montana, I will

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not necessary for the Senator to yield at all. I do not intend to make a speech; and I will not ask the question if it is not agreeable to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. I said I would yield for a question. I do not think the Senator has any occasion to get warm about this matter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator is speaking in heat, and he appears to be warming the entire Senate.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is mistaken. It is his own heat

I am perfectly cool.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I feel a very warm wave from the Senator's direction. The Senator from Montana said it had been shown that one-third of 1 per cent only of the land entries in the last eighteen years were fraudulent. How many per cent have been shown to be fraudulent within the last three years?

Mr. CARTER. The number of entries found to be fraudulent since 1900 are less than those found to be fraudulent prior to that period.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But what per cent of those that were made?

Mr. CARTER. I should in that case be permitted to explain to the Senator that there are two classes of entries. There is the mere filing, which is frequently abandoned by the individual altogether, through change of purpose or inability to live on the land. Then there is a final entry, wherein the party seeks to acquire title from the United States, and it is as to these final entries to which I have addressed myself.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I wish to say in concluding—this is no speech, I will say to my friend from Oregon—
Mr. FULTON. I will be the judge of that.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. As I listened, it seemed curious to me that all this fraud had been perpetrated by the Government under the administration of the Interior Department. Perhaps not more than the Senator have I any very great feeling of personal friendship for the Secretary of the Interior; but his reputation throughout the country is that of rather rigid honesty—extremely rigid, I may say, and I honor him for it. Well, then, it does seem strange that all the fraud is being perpetrated by that Department. The Government, it seems, is the party that is engaged in wholesale fraud, and not the gentlemen here and there who are trying to get timber and stone. That is why I asked the question.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I deprecate calling in question the integrity or the motives of any public officer. I doubt always the propriety of that practice, and I have never felt personally inclined to indulge in it. As to the motives of the Secretary of the Interior I have ventured no opinion. As to the baseless ground upon which his action has been hypothecated from time to time I have commented. If I were going into the question of the integrity of his action all along the line, I should certainly scrutinize, before passing any judgment, his dealing with the railroad-land-grant companies.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I had not intended to include within my remarks this particular branch of the subject; but let me ask a question of the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], who is the gentleman, I think, who injected this landfraud discussion, aside from the forest-reserve frauds, into this debate. He said that vast amounts of fraud have been discovered at certain land offices under the desert act and under the homestead act, and under the timber and stone act, I think the Senator said.

Mr. FLINT. No. Mr. FULTON. What acts did the Mr. FLINT. The desert-land act. What acts did the Senator indicate?

Mr. FULTON. Very well, under the desert-land act or any other act. What signifies that, Mr. President? Simply because frauds have been perpetrated under a particular act, is it necessary to withdraw the land from public entry and sale? necessary to build a fence around the entire public domain simply because we find some persons have sought to take undue advantage of the Government in securing land contrary to the provisions of the law?

Now, what I am talking about and what I am opposing is the creation of these enormous forest reserves within the limits of a State, the result of which is to cripple the development and to throttle the industries and the growth of that State.

I would have no objection, Mr. President, if these forest re-serves were confined to the summits and sides of the mountains, to that portion of the land that is unfitted and unsuited for settlement and cultivation, or to reservations necessary to protect the sources of streams. I would have no objection to that; aye, more, I would approve it. I believe there are certain portions of the timber area that may be properly, profitably, wisely converted into reserves. But what I am talking about and that of which I am complaining is the vast area of valuable agricultural lands and grazing lands that are being incorporated into these reserves contrary to the spirit of the law, contrary to the intention and the purpose of Congress when the laws were enacted.

Indeed, the law to-day says that agricultural lands shall not be incorporated in the reserves; and yet the senior Senator from California [Mr. Perkins] has shown that it became necessary to provide for taking up homesteads within those re-serves, because agricultural lands were, notwithstanding the provisions of the law, incorporated into the reserves in violation of the law.

But, Mr. President, I am speaking of the continual aggression, the continual expansion of this particular Bureau by rea-son of its own efforts. Not only has it ignored the law in reson of its own efforts. Not only has it ignored the law in regard to the character of lands that are to be incorporated within forest reserves, but there is a graver question, I submit to the Senate, and particularly to the members from the West, to be considered than any I have yet mentioned.

However, before passing to that I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that it does not follow simply because a tract of land is heavily timbered that it is unfit for agricul-ture; and yet that is what is held by this Department. They say that a tract of land is chiefly valuable for timber if it has timber on it; that the only condition in which it is not chiefly valuable for timber is when it has no timber on it; and yet every person who has had any experience from living in timbered region knows that some of the finest agricultural land in the world is land that in its native state is covered with even a heavy growth of timber.

Take the States of Ohio and Indiana, for instance. In their original state they were heavily timbered; there were large forests and valuable forests; and yet those forests before the settler's ax have disappeared as the mist before the rising sun. First succeeded the settler's cabin; then the settler's clearing; then the farmer's dwelling, and the American home, and the American farm, and the American village, and the city, and, finally, all the resulting industries that make those two States to-day one of the centers of our splendid industrial and commercial life.

Now, let me ask the Senator from Indiana before he retires

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I shall not retire for long.
Mr. FULTON. Would be be willing to tear down these farmers' dwellings, to wipe out these farms, to dismantle these cities, to do away with these great throbbing industries that have lent such character and reputation to his State, and reforest the lands, or reforest one-fourth of them, at the expense of the splendid industries that have been built up by reducing the timbered lands to cultivation? Would he be willing to do that? I know he would not; and hence he ought to be able to appreciate somewhat the feelings of the people of the West, whose territory is being so seriously circumscribed by laws of this character administered in this manner.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Why, Mr. President, the Senator asked me a question, and from the fullness of his question he might just as well have asked me, or any other Senator, whether we would be in favor of the San Francisco earthquake. Mr. FULTON. That is exactly what I thought, Mr. Pres-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Has the Senator had any city that has been dismantled in Oregon? Has he had any city whose "throbbing industries" and "giant enterprises"—

Mr. FULTON. There will not be room for many such if there are any more forest reserves created.

Mr. BEVERIDGE (continuing). Whose "giant enterprises"

Mr. BEVERIDGE (continuing). Whose "giant enterprises" have been pulled down; and has he seen cities whose palaces and temples and marts of trade have been razed to the ground and forests reared on their sites of industry, beauty, and human ippiness? Of course not. That is absurd.

Mr. FULTON. No; but I wish to say right there—

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator asked me a question. I am not familiar with this matter, and the Senator is very familiar with it; but I will venture to say there has not been a genuine homesteader, who has applied for a homestead in any forest reserve where an acre of the soil was land that was fit for a homestead, whose application has been rejected. Can the Senator tell us of one?

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator from Indiana were going into agriculture, does he imagine that he would like to live within a forest reserve, that he would like to take his family off 20 or 30 miles from any settlement, without the possibility of school privileges or the possibility of any of the advantages of civilization? Because there is not a large rush of settlers to take up isolated tracts of agricultural land, does the Senator from Indiana think that is an argument against the possibility of any agricultural lands having been included in such reserves?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator asks me what I would do if I were in agriculture. I was in agriculture for a good portion of my life, and I will say to the Senator I had rather estab-lish a home, provided the land were fit for the purposes of agriculture—which the Department is better able to judge of, scientifically administered, than some person who wants to take stone and wood out-of it for the real purpose of agriculture than I would to settle in the haphazard way of former times

Why, Mr. President? Because if I were in the edge of such a forest reserve; if I were in one of those mountain meadows where no trees are, I would be certain of one thing at least, that my home would not be swept away by a forest fire. I would know, at the very least, that I would have all the protection of a carefully organized system of range guardianship; I would know that I might not expect to find my home in ashes and my family burned to death while I was tilling the field. That is an answer to the Senator, even from my limited knowledge.

Now, will the Senator from Oregon answer-because he ought to know-whether he can cite one instance where a bona fide homesteader, who wanted to build an American home, applied for a homestead in any forest reserve where an acre of soil was such that it was fit for agriculture, that his application has been rejected?

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Oregon put another question to the Senator from Indiana? Will the Senator from Oregon permit me to

Mr. FULTON. Certainly Mr. CARTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana

if he knows of a single application which was granted? Mr. BEVERIDGE. I asked the Senator from Oregon a question before the Senator from Montana asked me this question-I not being informed-and I ask him to answer my question, he being informed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I will cheerfully answer and say that in the State of Montana, with its 146,000 square miles and practically one-third of the whole area in forest reserves, of the agricultural grazing lands, on which a tree does not grow and will never grow, I do not believe a single applicant has been accorded the privilege of making a homestead in a forest reserve.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now, what kind of homes are these which the Senator from Oregon speaks of?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I have yielded to the Senator for a question, but I can not yield for a speech, and must go on with my remarks.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Oregon will have to yield to me now as much as possible, because I was called out of the Chamber and was about to go out, but remained at the personal demand of the Senator from Oregon, openly expressed, and the Senator, just as I was walking in front of him, advanced and halted my progress out of the Chamber, and he is now responsible for the fact that I am here.

Mr. FULTON. I want to say that the Senator has imposed a terrible responsibility on me. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; I am aware of that; but in view of the fact that the Senator seems to be inviting a larger responsibility than I should want to assume, I should not think he would care to bear this slight extra burden. [Laughter.]

Mr. FULTON. I thank the Senator. I will undertake to travel along under the load.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will have to. [Laughter.] Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana has told us that he started out as a farmer and that he has been an agriculturist. I assume that it was on the beautiful land, the beautiful valleys, and the lovely hills of the State that he so ably represents. And yet, notwithstanding all that splendid environment, we find the Senator deserting the farm and leaving behind him all the beautiful and attractive influences which he has described and plunging into the pool of politics, and landing finally in the United States Senate. [Laughter.] Now, then, how long can we expect the Senator, if he has abandoned that character of farming, would remain on a farm away off in a forest reserve, 20 miles from any neighbor, where no one could hear his voice [laughter] and where he could not hear the voice of anybody else.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon

yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. For a question, as usual. Mr. BEVERIDGE. No; the Senator will have to yield for more than a question.

Mr. FULTON. Well, then, Mr. President, I will not yield. Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then I will say this to the Senator: As the Senator asks me a question, he must give me time to an-

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. At least I will insist upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. I have asked the Senator no question since questioned about reforesting his State, and he has fully exlained his position as to that.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was going to say that I would be willing to take up a homestead 20 miles away if I could get away from the voice of the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is out of order.

Mr. FULTON. For a man who so dearly loves the sound of his own voice I can well understand that he would wish everybody else to be silent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I will not take time to say that I would go 20 miles to get out of the sound of the Senator's voice. Laughter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, there is just one other question I want to suggest which I started in to suggest a short time ago, which I think is the most important one to be considered in connection with the administration of the forest-reserve policy, and that is this: Not only are these vast areas of valuable agricultural grazing and timber lands to be withdrawn and converted into forest reserves so as to render it impossible for them to contribute to the industrial life or development of the State, but we are told now that the waters, the streams, the rivers, and the lakes with the forest reserves are to be hereafter administered and are to be hereafter used and enjoyed only in conformity with the rules and regulations of this Department, and not according to the laws of the States where they are situated. Why, Mr. President, I am told that to-day you can not get the privilege of taking water from a stream in a forest reserve for commercial or industrial purposes; that you can not apply the power of a stream for commercial or industrial purposes, unless you shall first get the license and the leave of the Forest Reserve Bureau, and pay an annual tax to swell the fund of which the Senator from Indiana has told us. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FULTON. I do.
Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this very bill provides that all the remaining lands fit for grazing outside of forest reserves are also to be put under the Forestry Service.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly. Whatever little there is left goes, but there is very little of it. But, Mr. President, by what authority, let me ask, is it proposed that the General Government shall determine the policy of an individual State touching the manner in which the waters and the water power of that State shall be employed, diverted, and appropriated? I am well aware, Mr. President, that in these later days there has sprung up a new school of philosophy, and that out of this school has been born a new class of constitutional interpreters. I understand, according to the doctrine of this school and according to the tenets of these philosophers, that the old State lines are absolutely wiped out and the reserved rights of the States that are guaranteed by the Constitution, that were recognized by Washington and Hamilton and Jefferson and Webster and Kent and Clay have fallen into "innocuous desuetude" and are not to be again revived.

Mr. President, I am not a strict constructionist. ways believed, and I believe to-day, that by implication the General Government possesses all the necessary powers to protect its life and its existence and to administer and carry into effect its expressed or enumerated powers. I am not a disciple of Jefferson; rather do I belong to the school of Hamilton; but I say to you to-day that if the shade of Alexander Hamilton, the immortal, were to be brought unexpectedly up against a chunk of some of this modern constitutional logic the result would be something like the experience of Bret Harte's hero, who, we

Smiled a sickly smile
And curled upon the floor,
And the subsequent proceedings
Interested him no more.

Sir, throughout our entire history as a nation the right to determine its own policy as to the use and application of the water of the streams within its borders, subject to the commerce clause of the Constitution, has been uniformly conceded to the States respectively. And it has ever been believed that he who harnessed the forces of nature and devoted them to supplying the power for industrial life and activity was a benefactor to mankind. He was esteemed as one who has caused a field of grain to grow on what had ever before been barren soil. But now we are told by this Bureau that a tax for the use of the General Government, a tax that will contribute to swell this extraordinary fund of which the Senator from Indiana tells us, must be levied upon the young and infant industries of all the public-land States. Are the Senators from Massachusetts, or from Ohio or Indiana, or from any of the Eastern, Southern, or Central States willing that this Bureau shall control the water power within their respective States? Are they willing that before fheir towns and cities can supply themselves with water for domestic purposes they must secure the consent and pay the annual tax imposed by this Bureau? Are they willing that before a plant can be established to supply or generate the power for a factory, a mill, or a lighting plant a charter must be secured from this Bureau and a tax must be paid to swell the revenues of the General Government? That is exactly what the people in the forest-reserve States are being compelled to do to-day. I deny the power of this Government to impose any such restrictions on the people of Oregon. as a State on an equality with the original States, and I deny the right of the General Government to impose exactions on us not imposed equally on the original States. I deny the right of the General Government, or of this Bureau, to withdraw permanently from settlement and sale the public lands within my

The truth is, this Bureau is composed of dreamers and theorists, but beyond and outside the domain of their theories and their dreams is the everyday, busy, bustling, throbbing world of human endeavor, where real men are at work producing substantial results. I know something of the importance of the home builder to the State. I know far better than does this bureau chief the obstacles the home builder will overcome and the hardships he will endure to secure for himself and family an abiding place. While these chiefs of the Bureau of Forestry sit within their marble halls and theorize and dream of waters conserved, forests and streams protected and preserved throughout the ages and the ages, the lowly pioneer is climbing the mountain side where he will erect his humble cabin, and within the shadow of the whispering pines and the lofty firs of the western forest engage in the laborious work of carving out for himself and his loved ones a home and a dwelling place. of him I think and for him I take my stand to-day.

On some more convenient occasion I will propose an amendment to the existing law that will confine this Bureau within the limits to which it was originally designed by Congress that it should be confined.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy more than a few moments in relation to the matters that have been discussed this morning and some matters which were dis-cussed at the last session of the Senate. It is gratifying to find that the vein of levity and good cheer with which the annual criticism of the agricultural appropriation bill is made in the Senate has given place to a somewhat sober and considerate discussion of the practical questions involved in it.

I think it ought to be said on behalf of the Committee on Agriculture that the committee has for many years sought by degrees to raise the rank of the great bureaus of the Department of Agriculture and to give to those in charge of them salaries more commensurate with their learning and their usefulness in the public service. So in this bill the chiefs of the five great scientific bureaus of the Department of Agriculture have been put upon a uniform salary of $5,000. That, it seems to me, is wise and just to all these men. The chiefs of the Weather Bureau, the Forestry Bureau, the Chemistry Bureau, and the Bureaus of Animal Industry and Plant Industry are men famous throughout the world for their contributions to practical science, and I believe it is not only an economy on the part of the Government to recognize the value of their services, but that it has become a necessity to do so if the Department is to retain the services of such men.

I think the criticism which has been directed against the Bureau of Forestry is especially to be deplored. I represent a portion of the country that by reason of its position can look without much prejudice upon the problems that confront the Government in its relation to the newer States, to which allusion has been made. I am certainly not without sympathy for the men and women who are laying the foundations of homes in the great States which have been in part covered up by forestry reservations under order of the President. I have taken the pains in traveling through these States to find out, if I could, what the basis of the antagonism that has grown up against the Government in the administration of the Bureau of Forestry actually is. I find very few intelligent men in any of these States who do not speak in enthusiastic terms of the Government's policy of reserving the great forests and the areas which they occupy. On the other hand, in all these States I found an undertone of criticism directed against the Department of the Interior and directed against the Bureau of Forestry, apparently based upon the idea that this far-reaching effort of our Government to preserve these lands for the future welfare of the people in some way contradicts the rights of the good people who are trying to make homes in these regions.

I make the suggestion here to the honorable Senators who have been pouring the vials of their wrath upon the Department of the Interior and upon the Bureau of Forestry that I do not believe the administration of these great Departments would refuse to consider a fair public showing of any injustice that has been done in the location of any of the forest reserva-tions or to correct any errors into which the Government has by chance been misled; and I feel that some word ought to be said here at least to indicate that there is no unanimous disposition of the Senate to condemn men who, like the Secretary of the Interior and after him the Secretary of Agriculture, have been going forward in the midst of many difficulties to perfect this great scheme to preserve those resources of nature upon which the permanence of civilization in these prosperous communities depends.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I trust the Senator did not un-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I trust the Senator did not understand me as criticising the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I did not. I had in mind a rather alarming concert of criticism which has from time to time been given expression here from the very beginning of this Congress. interest in the public-land question is entirely national. As a citizen of the State in which I live, I certainly have no prejudices against the portion of our country farther west; but I undertake to say that whoever impeaches the integrity with which the Department of the Interior has been administered under Secretary Hitchcock ought at least to go in such details as will enable those of us who are without information to judge more accurately.

No man connected with this Government, in my recollection, has won a more unique recognition than he. Institutions of learning, the greatest in our land, have decorated him with honorary degrees, not because of his learning in the law, but because of his integrity-his dogged effort to interpret the Ten Command-On the other hand, here in the Senate and in the other House of Congress we find a petulant stream of criticism directed at the integrity of his motives and the wisdom with which he has undertaken to administer the great trust which has reposed upon him during the last eight years. However, it is no part of my purpose to defend him; but I undertake to say that he has by his public service piled up a mountainous presumption of plain honesty which is not to be overcome by speeches upon the floor of either House of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Iowa upon reflection will recall that the criticism which has been directed against the Secretary of the Interior has not been as to his integrity, although there has been much criticism-and probably more may yet be expressed—as to the wisdom and judgment of the Secretary of the Interior in matters such as these.

Of course it may be that the great institutions of learning situated in the Eastern States on the shores of the Atlantic know more about the Secretary of the Interior and his actions in the Western States than the Senators on this floor who represent those States, but I should always accept the judgment of those in the States where the results of the administration of the Secretary of the Interior are most in evidence.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, that is my disposition also, and I should be glad to do it in the case of this forestry controversy if it had not fallen in my way to dig a little under this testimony of debate into certain testimony that was laid before the Committee on Agriculture in the course of a very recent investigation. You would suppose from such an utterance as was made by my honored friend from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] that the administration of the Forestry Bureau had operated to destroy the opportunities, to handicap the resources, and to prevent the growth of business in the great areas that have been affected by these forest reservations.

The other day there strolled into the Committee on Agriculture about as lively a group of typical Americans as I have ever had the opportunity to meet here or anywhere else. They were representatives from all these States affected by the forestry reservations. They were farmers; they were cattle raisers; they were horse ranchmen; they were sheepmen, and they were men of brawn as well as of brain, fully aware of the industrial conditions that surround them in the great communities in which they live.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator yield to me a moment? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that one of these representative citizens admitted that he had 500,000 acres of land under one fence, and that he had a large area besides in the Territory of Arizona and another large area in the Territory of New Mexico. Another one of these representative citizens, speaking for the homesteaders, of course the actual settlers, had with his associates an area 300 miles in length and 100 miles in width under fence in the Territory of New Mexico, and he was up here pleading for the maintenance of his fence and, of course, for the maintenance of the homestead.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Not at all. He was pleading for the application to the desert pasture lands of the United States of the exact administration that has for years been in operation in respect to the forest reservations. While a good many of those gentlemen who came before the committee were great cattlemen, there came also men from the small ranches. I recall a small dealer from a mountain fastness in Colorado, whose little ranch was upon a creek and whose pasture was upon the mountain side, and he spoke, I think, as a representative of practically the whole system of cattle raising of the mountain regions of the United States. His name was Gray. Among other things, in answer to a question suggested by me, referring to the regulation of these mountain pastures, he said:

Senator Perkins. And you think an act of Congress permitting the Government to lease you the land is in the interest of law and order and good government?

Government to lease you the land is in the interest of law and order and good government?

Mr. Grax. We in that section of the country prefer what is known as the permit system. I want to explain that point, and I am very glad you brought it out. The permit system will work very much better for this one reason: We have to turn our stock out away down on the low foothills in the spring of the year, because the snow has not yet gone off high up on the mountains. We have to turn them all out together. Our ranges are bounded by valleys. We turn them out there; and as the snow goes off—gradually clears away—up in the mountains, in July, August, September, and October, our cattle get clear up to timber line, often going as high as 12,000 feet. If you adopt a lease system in that country—if you leased to each individual a very long, narrow strip up through the mountains, it would be impracticable to use it. We would prefer a community interest, where fifteen or twenty or twenty-five of us could have a permit to run so many cattle in there, bounded by natural streams—

Senator Long. And no sheep men allowed. [Laughter.]

Mr. Gray. Well, there are not any there, as has been said a number of times; the altitude is too high.

Senator Long. It is not healthy.

Senator Dolliver. But that can be regulated by the Department?

Mr. Gray. It can be regulated by the Department. It is regulated upon the forest reserves, and it was a godsend to us when we got the forest reserves, and it was a godsend to us when we got the forest reserves, and it was a godsend to us when we got the forest reserve there.

Senator Polliver. I wish you would get somebody to make a statement to that effect in the Senate.

Mr. Gray. Well, I can do it. [Great laughter.] I am doing it right here.

Senator Perkins. I wish Senator Heyburn was here.

Mr. Gray. I know these conditions, because I have been there for over thirty years.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment? The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.
Mr. NELSON. I have been something of a farmer myself, all my life.

I know something about forests in a general way, and my experience, and I think the experience of all my neighbors in Minnesota, has been that the worst thing you can do to a forest is to pasture it with cattle and sheep. If you want to raise timber, if you want to raise a good forest and have it grow rapidly and do well, you do not want to pasture it with sheep or cattle at all. And here, by permission of the Forestry Bureau, we are just loading these forest reserves with sheep and cattle. I do not see how that can help the production of timber on the forest reserves.

Mr. DOLLIVER. If my honored friend, the Senator from Minnesota, will permit me, I will call his attention to a statement made on that subject by a gentleman by the name of Jastro, from Bakersfield, Cal., who lives upon the edge of one of the great forest reserves of California.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me, that is the 500,000-acre gentleman to whom I referred.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes, sir. And he seems to have a certificate of very high moral character from my honored friend from California.

Mr. CARTER. He was entitled to it, of course. His morals are exceptionally good.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Now, hear what he says:

I believe that pretty much every man in California would be willing to see the public ranges controlled by the Government; and I say this for the reason that our experience with the forest reserves that we created in California has been that since the formation of the forest reserves in the State of California our rivers have given us nearly 25 per cent more water to irrigate lands with. It has kept these roaming herds of cattle and migratory bands of sheep out of the mountains and out of the plains. They have not tramped our country up; they have not destroyed our native grasses, so that our country is being reseeded; and to-day California carries more stock than she did before there was any forest reserve. That is, I am speaking now of the amount of stock she carries outside of the places where forage is provided for stock.

Mr. PERKINS. I only want to say, if my friend will permit me, in answer to the Senator from Montana, that this gentleman who was referred to by my colleague said that he had formerly resided in Montana, had pastured his sheep on land in that State, and had finally come to the golden State of Cali-Therefore he brought his certificate of character from fornia. Montana.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman referred to stated that he was driven out of California by the drought, and came to Montana and pastured his sheep.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I have the testimony of a gentleman from Wyoming to which I should like to call the attention of my friend the Senator from Wyoming. I have the greatest confidence in him, but my confidence in him is in his capacity as a statesman and not as a ranchman or a man practically interested in the business.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask a question for information. Is the Government of the United States engaged in sheep farming as a means for the preservation of forests?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that in these forest areas there are, in the very necessity of the case, large vacant spaces good for pasture, and under regulations, under a lease system, sheep are pastured and cattle are pastured in such numbers as not to destroy either the forest or the pasture, but to preserve both and to help everybody connected with the proposition. As will be shown by this testimony

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator, I think, does not fully explain that rent is charged by the General Government for the pas-

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.
Mr. FULTON. In other words, exactly the condition that the interrogatory of the Senator from Rhode Island suggested prevails—the Government is engaged in the sheep-pasture business. The Government is engaged in business in these States.

Mr. DOLLIVER. The Government owns these lands

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask for information whether the Government owns the sheep?

Mr. FULTON. No; but the Government is engaged in pas-

Mr. DOLLIVER. The Government is engaged in the land business, but is not in the sheep business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of Senators to the rule that before interrupting a Senator they must first obtain recognition by the Chair.

I will ask the Senator if he will yield to me-Mr. LODGE.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand it, the Government rents certain available pasture lands in the forest reserves for the purpose of pasturage.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Yes, sir; and it takes the money to keep up the reserves—to build little improvements.

Mr. LODGE. The Government is not engaged in business.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.
Mr. HEMENWAY. How long has the Government taken this money to keep up the reserves?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think it has been doing it for several

Mr. HEMENWAY. Prior to 1905 all of this money went into the Treasury of the United States and Congress appropriated directly for the care of the reserves.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is true, and I do not know that I question the wisdom of that proceeding; but I am now talking about what appears to me to be a concerted scheme to discredit and disparage what I regard as one of the great practical scientific operations of the Government.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to contribute a fact, to the end that statements may be made accurately here. The Government does not lease any area of land in forest reserves.

Mr. DOLLIVER. That is true.

Mr. CARTER. It grants to owners of various kinds of stock permits, which allow those owners to graze stock in the reservations at so much months each year. CLAY, Mr. Presidenttions at so much a head throughout a stipulated number of

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. DOLLIVER. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me call his attention to one provision of this bill? I can not believe that the Senator from Iowa can approve this provision of the bill, found on page 71:

And hereafter, for the purpose of restoring, protecting, and increasing the grazing value of the public domain, and promoting the agricultural use thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture may organize grazing districts and regulate and control grazing upon the unappropriated, unreserved lands of the United States, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, may issue permits or grant leases for periods not exceeding ten years, and charge and collect reasonable fees for grazing thereon, the receipts to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the special fund obtained from charges for timber, grazing, and other resources of the national forests and provided for by section 5 of the act of February 1, 1905.

I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this is the broadest feature I have ever seen in a bill. Under these provisions the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized, if he desires to do so, to lease to a dozen persons the entire forest lands of the United States and the grazing lands outside of the forests, and he is also authorized to lease them at such prices as he may deem proper. You place in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture the power to employ a million men, if he desires to do so, and to fix their salaries. You authorize him, if he desires to do so, to lease all of these lands to a few people.

If you are going to authorize these lands to be leased, by all means, I say to the Senator, we ought to provide how much shall be leased to one person, and what shall be the prices, and we also ought to provide that there should be an accounting to Congress every session of how much money had been received and how the expenditures have been made.

I am frank to say, Mr. President, that I have never read a looser piece of legislation than this on page 71 of the pending bill. This is absolutely getting to be a Government of one-man power. Congress has ceased to act, and is leaving the entire administration of the law, and practically the making of the law, to a few persons. Congress itself ought to act in a matter

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do not intend to take up the question raised by the section of the bill to which the Senator from Georgia has alluded, although it is proper for me to say that I am in favor of exactly that thing, and I hope, in cooperation with others, to convince not only my friend, the Senator from Georgia, but everybody else that that is a proper disposition of these semiarid lands of the United States.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that he believes in allowing the public lands, including those embraced in forest reserves, to be leased for grazing purposes, the money to go into a fund and be permanently appropriated, which the Secretary of Agriculture may absolutely control without Congress making annual appropriations for that purpose?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will not debate that question. That is a very interesting question of detail as to the administration of the fund, which I think we can get some agreement upon later.

But I desire now, in brief, if Senators will permit me, to add the testimony of C. E. Ayer, esq., of Dixon, Wyo., who is not only a stockman, but, as he testified, a sheep man, residing in one of these wonderful little valleys. He says:

one of these wonderful little valleys. He says:

Last year we had the Park Range Forest Reserve that has been organized, and this last summer we got permits to graze our cattle on that forest reserve, and we are well pleased with the manner in which it was done. But the whole territory not being forest reserve, it does not protect us in the spring and in the fall and in the winter; and while we could get along fairly well as far as the winter part of it is concerned, the spring and fall range we must have, because we can not feed our cattle on the forest reserve in the spring and in the fall. We can feed them in the winter time; and these large herds of steers will come in there, ten or twelve thousand head, belonging to one man or one company, and they are just about as blg a detriment to us as the large herds of sheep. We have had some trouble with the sheep men, but I am glad to say that in the last summer, owing to the control of the Park Range Forest Reserve, we did not have any trouble at all; and we are well paid for what it cost us for our permits, 20 cents a head, in not having to have any scraps with the sheep men.

Here is the statement of Mr. Bell, a cattleman, and also a

Here is the statement of Mr. Bell, a cattleman, and also a sheepman, from Wyoming.

Mr. PERKINS. He is a farmer.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Undoubtedly; in which he pays to the administration of the forest reservations, under Mr. Pinchot, a very appropriate and just eulogy in recognition of the efficiency of the service:

Senator Latimer. We are just trying to find out what you want. Mr. Bell. Well, God bless you, then—we are just willing to you, if you will let us. That is the idea. I simply want to tell you that you would naturally infer from some statements made here that the cattlemen want it because the sheepmen do not want it. I want to tell you, as a sheepman and a cattleman and as a farmer, that at a reasonable price—at a reasonable price, such as we can make a living at, and a sufficient number of acres—I am frank to say to you that I indorse a proposition of this kind. That is, I indorse it if you could just get it in that way and put it in the hands of men who are big enough in mind, who are fair enough to do justice to all of us. The fact of the business is that I have learned to like Mr. Pinchot so much that I have been accused of falling in love with him and asking to have him adopt me. Now, I would be willing to have him adopt me if—

Senator Perkins. But you are not willing for him to fix the rate he should charge you. [Laughter.]

Mr. Bell. Yes, sir; if he will go through my section of country and find out the conditions there I would be perfectly willing for Mr. Pinchot to fix the rate.

Senator Perkins. Then we are all satisfied. We are going to leave this to the Secretary of Agriculture, to whom you have paid such a high tribute, after you learned his name [laughter], and he is going to bring our friend Mr. Pinchot in to assist him in advising you as to the rate you shall pay; and Mr. Pinchot is going to ask you and your other neighbors what is right, and then he will draw his own judgment and conclusions.

Mr. Bell. Well, Mr. Pinchot has been fair to our particular part of the country. We paid 5½ cents for sheep, and we have understood that they will let us go in there for 4 cents this year. We appreciate that, and we think that they are now 2 cents too high. I really believe that, too. But we appreciate what he has done for us.

Senator Frazier. The lower he fixes the price the more you like him. [Laughter.]

[Laughter.]

Mr. Bell. I am frank to say, gentlemen, that I am mortal, and a man can do more with me by being extremely friendly than he can by abusing me. There is no question about that; and the evidence of that is that if Mr. Pinchot does favor me justly—I am not asking him to give it to me—why, of course it would not make me dislike him, would it? There is nothing wrong about that, is there?

Sepator Frazier, No.

Let me also call attention to the testimony of Mr. T. J. Walsh, one of the most interesting and most able men in the State of Montana, who was delegated to come here by the National Woolgrowers' Association. He was not exactly pleased with the forest reservation regulations in respect to the charge made for the grazing of sheep, but he speaks in terms which seem to contradict the opinion that the forest regulations have impeded the settlement of the State of Montana. He says

There is no portion of the State of Montana. He says:

There is no portion of the State of Montana that is cropped to death; and manifestly it is just as good range for the man who takes up the homestead as it is for the stock of the cattle company that is engaged in grazing there. If it will furnish feed for the cattle company's stock it will furnish feed for the homesteader's stock. And so it is, sir, that the land is being constantly taken up; and you can refer to the statistics of the land officers of our State, and confirm the statement that more homesteads are being taken up within the last four or five years than, I believe, ever before in the history of the State. Congress within that period has created two new land districts in our State, at Great Falls and Miles City.

He adds a few words which fully explain his conjugate.

He adds a few words which fully explain his grievance against the forestry law:

Senator Dolliver. Has the forest-reserve system of leasing worked well in your section of the country?

Mr. Walsh. It has been entirely unsatisfactory, for the reason that I indicate to you. Now, understand, in our community there is not the slightest opposition to the preservation of the forests. Any assistance that any of us can give toward that end will be cheerfully given. But we do, sir, object to being called upon to pay for the privilege that everybody else from time immemorial has had without paying, and we do object simply to putting in the hands of these officers the power to say whether we shall or shall not carry on our business.

I have thus hylefty referred to this testimony because I

I have thus briefly referred to this testimony because believe it will do us good to get a gleam of light from these hills which is not dimmed at all by the atmosphere of debate and controversy which goes on in the two Houses of Congress

I will add another word. There must be some deep-seated reason for the difficulty which the Secretary of the Interior has had in administering the land laws of the United States. While I deprecate any disposition to indict whole communities, whole States, and charge their people with fraudulent attempts to evade and nullify the land laws of the United States, I believe the time will come when these faithful officers who have called attention to the violation of the law will receive a better recognition for the services which they have rendered the people than they have thus far received in the Senate. For among these witnesses, representative men appointed by great cattle associations who came before the committee, at least one of them dropped the suggestion that in one favored section of the cattle country a majority of the people who were coming in to settle upon lands were not entitled to the honorable distinction of being homesteaders, laying the foundations for homes and for civilization, but he said they were settlers who had come from various cities in near-by States for the purpose of entering those lands with a view of afterwards selling them, and were in reality speculators, using the land laws of the United States to work a fraud upon the Government. While I should be the last one to lay a charge against whole communities, I desire it to be understood that if it becomes necessary to defend the motives and the integrity of responsible public officials, the question will not be decided until the real facts appear as to how in all these years the land laws of the United States have been used by speculators, big and little, for the purpose of covering transactions so nearly akin to fraud as to warrant the vigilance and attention of more than one department of the Government.

Mr. PROCTOR obtained the floor. Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa if it is not a fact that ever since there have been public lands and public land laws men have taken ranches and sold them afterwards and taken farms and sold them afterwards? I want to say that when I was engaged for a time, in the year 1868, in the State of Iowa, which the Senator so ably represents, I found men coming from the New England States and elsewhere and taking up homesteads with the avowed purpose of some time selling them and going back to their own homes.

Mr. DOLLIVER. They made a great error if they did that. Mr. WARREN. Just so. Not so many of them went back as expected to in the first place, owing to the satisfaction they found in Iowa. But it is true, nevertheless, and it will always be true as long as we have any land laws, that a man will take up a homestead for the purpose of owning his own home, or trading it for another, or selling it when he gets ready, or occupying it, as he sees fit, and it never has been considered fraudulent to do so.

There has been fraud ever since there have been land laws, and there always will be. The only difference has been that the frauds of earlier years were prosecuted by the officers of the Department without so much fuss and notoriety through the newspapers, and it has not always been understood that a man was a thief until he had proved himself innocent. Things must have come to a pretty pass when it is assumed in a great Department that every man who undertakes under the law to take up land agreeably to the law must be considered a thief until he has proved himself innocent; must live on a homestead all of his natural life before he can be recognized as an honest man. There has not been more fraud in the last few years than there was in the previous ten years, or the previous twenty years, or the previous twenty-five years, considering the total number of land claims offered for proof.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I accidentally ran across an old Iowa friend in a far western State with a homestead located in a forest where there were trees 5 or 6 feet in diameter and so thick that you could not get among them with a wagon. And he was proving up under the homestead law.

Mr. WARREN. He had a right to.
Mr. DOLLIVER. And he wanted me to intercede for him in the Department because they held him up for examination.

Mr. WARREN. A great many men in Iowa, Michigan, Illinois, and other States have proved up upon their homesteads when they had to cut out the trees of the forest before they could plant crops.

Mr. DOLLIVER. But they did not have to tackle tre as those on my old friend's farm in the Pacific country. But they did not have to tackle trees such

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PROCTOR. After I have made a few remarks.

Mr. President, the question before the Senate is the salary of the Chief Forester.

Mr. President-Mr. CARTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PROCTOR. I must decline to yield to anyone for the moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont declines to yield.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is the salary of the Chief of this Bureau. I do not see that there is any great question but that the head of this Bureau should receive the increased salary. If he does not do his duty, or if a Cabinet officer does not do his duty, we do not reduce the salary. We have other ways of reaching the difficulty. We can cut off the appropriation or make any new law that will remedy the evil.

There are other amendments and other sections in the bill to which the arguments we have heard would apply with more force and directness than to this question of salary. merely going to suggest that unless the reservoir of eloquence is inexhaustible, as I must confess it rather seems to be, it would lead to a repetition perhaps of a good deal that is now being discussed, and I should be glad, if Senators agree with me, if the matter could be left until we reach the sections especially applying to this service.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is just for a word. I do not want to make a speech.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont vield?

Mr. PROCTOR.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I fully agree with the point made by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor]. I think it is apparent that the whole discussion should have arisen on an amendment which will occur later in the bill, but it did arise partly upon this. In view of what has been said during the day, it will become necessary for me, when that amendment has been reached, to say what it had been my purpose to say immediately. I think it must be clear to all that rather than upon the mere question of the salary of the Chief Forester, as to which practically everybody is agreed, it would be better to postpone the remainder of the argument, as it would have been far better in the first place to postpone all the argument until we reach those amendments upon which it more properly arises

Therefore I shall not ask to say anything at this time, but shall wait until those amendments are reached.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to say a few words on the subject of the salary before the Senator from Vermont has his last word in his appeal to the Senate to vote on the amendment. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly, I yield to the Senator from Colorado to discuss the question before the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to some matters connected with the administration of the officer whose salary is now under consideration. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dolliver] stated that in traveling through the West he found here adverse criticisms and there strong approbation of the Forestry Bureau and of the administration of its affairs in the western country. So far as I am concerned I do not intend to indulge, and I never have indulged, in widespread or unlimited adverse criticism either of the forestry system or of the administration. I am inclined to think that the adverse criticism made has been against what we may term the overzealousness of the head of the Bureau and of those who are under him rather than to his intentions and purposes and the end that is sought to be attained.

The trouble with the administration of the Forestry Service is that it enters into the business and affairs and the very home of every man who has anything to do with the forest regions and who is engaged in business of any kind that carries him to those regions. He is met on almost every hand by an agent of this Bureau. He is required to pay tribute in the meanest, smallest, pettiest sums, as well as in very large sums, to this Bureau, under the pretense that the Government is entitled to compensation for what anybody uses which belongs to the Gov-ernment, and that it is a wrong inflicted upon the Government to tread even upon the public domain within the forest reserves without giving compensation for the privilege.

As an evidence of the zeal with which these petty persecutions are carried on by the very great or almost numberless crowd of local timber agents, I desire to call attention to a matter which was recently called to my attention through the mails. I have here a very short letter written from Winfield, Colo., addressed to me, which is as follows:

Inclosed please find letter to me from timber agent, forest reserve, which speaks for itself; looks like graft. It also appears that these officers have wonderful discretionary powers giving even opportunity to rake offs in adjusting the sums to be paid, and I hear of some of my neighbors who were told by the agent they did not have to pay at all. It is not true that I am one of only three who refused to sign, as stated in the letter; only three have signed it here, and then under

With my neighbors thanking you sincerely for the interest and stand you have taken in this matter, I remain,

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM WALLACE.

I call the attention of the Senate to the letter which he inclosed to me from W. H. Hazzard, who signs himself deputy forest ranger. In this letter he inclosed a printed form for a lease or permit, to be signed by the gentleman who wrote me the letter. The thing that he wanted to lease to the writer was a cabin, an abandoned cabin on the public domain, which was taken up by the writer, who is a prospector. In all probability it was a small, rough, dirt-roof cabin, such as are scattered throughout the entire mining sections of the country. They are built by prospectors when they intend to remain in some locality for a period of time. If they move, the cabins are abandoned. Somebody else succeeds them and he takes possession. The mountains are filled with just such cabins, and here is a forest ranger, one of the employees of the head of this Bureau, who demands that this prospector shall pay to the Government of the United States three dollars and a half for the privilege of occupying this cabin, or the holder will be evicted under the rules and regulations of the Bureau. The miner will be compelled to move on and some fellow willing to pay the paltry sum of $3.50 will be permitted to take his place.

There are things in this letter which is written by this forest ranger which indicate to my mind that the charge of graft contained in the letter of my correspondent is not altogether without substance

Mr. TILLMAN. What becomes of the three dollars and a half?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have yielded, and the Senator from South Carolina is through. I will talk about that in a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.
Mr. GALLINGER. I want simply to inquire who appoints these rangers and deputy rangers? Are they appointed here in Washington by the Bureau?

Mr. PATTERSON. I suppose so; by the head of the Bureau.
Mr. Wallace had received a letter a month before he received is. He inclosed one of the leases in the first letter under which he was to pay the Government $5 a year to occupy this He wrote a letter to me and I answered it, and I appealed to the Department here at Washington. To that appeal have no recollection of having received a reply. Mr. Wallace wrote that fact to Mr. Hazzard, and the letter I now read was written by Hazzard on receiving that information:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE, Winfield, Colo., November 15, 1906.

Mr. WILLIAM WALLACE, Winfield, Colo.

Mr. William Wallace, Winfield, Colo.

Dear Sir: I am again presenting to you an application for special-privilege agreement for the cabin you are occupying at Winfield. You will note that I have reduced the charges from $5 per annum to $3.50. I do this because you occupy but the one cabin and utilize same wholly as a personal enterprise.

I have been advised by the Leadville office to post notices on all cabins at Winfield and elsewhere, where parties refuse to take out a privilege for same, stating they are Government property. Therefore I will be at liberty to grant a privilege for the cabin you are occupying to anyone that may make application for same. As to the protest that has been sent in to Washington, I do not know what action, if any, will be taken. However, your signing the inclosed agreement will in no way bind you to pay the charges stipulated therein, as we intend to treat everybody alike in this matter. If the Washington office recommends no charges for cabins at Winfield, you will not have to pay.

You are only one of three that have refused to sign the agreement, We are anxious to send them all in to the Washington office. Kindly procure the names of two witnesses to the agreement, signing same, and return to me.

Very truly, yours,

W. H. Hazzard,

Deputy Forest Ranger.

W. H. HAZZARD, Deputy Forest Ranger.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?
Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.
Mr. TILLMAN. Do I understand that Winfield is a mining camp or something like that, or did the Government build these cabins'

Mr. PATTERSON. The Government never spent a cent, and no agent of the Government ever performed a minute's labor upon them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Some prospectors running around hunting minerals built the cabins and moved on, and now the Government wants to rent them?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes. The agent of the Government wants to rent them, and posts notices upon them that if the occupants do not pay the rent they will be compelled to get out and somebody else will be given possession.

Mr. TILLMAN. Suppose a man built a cabin of his own, would they demand rent for that?

Mr. PATTERSON. Of course, upon the theory that, being on the Government domain, they have a right to compel him to pay rent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is better for them to rent-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

It is better for them to rent cabins than Mr. BEVERIDGE.

to have the cabins rot, is it not?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the cabins are built under common usage in that country by the prospectors, and when they move on a cabin is left for anybody who will to occupy it as though he had been the original builder. It is a thing with which the Government has no right to interfere. It is a mean, little, pestiferous kind of persecution, and it ought to carry mortification to every Government officer rather than to receive

But I call the attention of the Senate to this singular postscript that is at the end of this letter:

In taking out this privilege you will be exempt from paying any Pray, by what authority was a Government ranger authorized to write to the occupant of a cabin on the public domain, that was built either by the prospector or by others, and say, "If you will pay the three dollars and a half, you will not be compelled to pay any county tax?" Does it not give color to the charge which was made in the letter by my correspondent that it looks like there was graft in the matter; that other than a zeal to help the Government inspires these agents to make such demands?

Of course, as to whether that conclusion is right or not, I do not know. I make no charge, but I do not hesitate to say that the manner of the administration of the forest reserves has done more to bring the whole system into disrepute than any-The rules and regulations of Mr. Pinchot have been in effect in Colorado now, I think, a year. The cattlemen and the sheepmen entered into an understanding with Mr. Pinchot in good faith to try the system, to meet the demands that were made upon them by the Government in the shape of license fees for ranging their cattle and sheep in the forest reserves. Within the past week I have received resolutions from three or four cattle organizations denouncing the entire system, declaring that they have received no benefit whatever from it, and that they feel that the manner in which this reserve proposition is enforced is an imposition upon the cattlemen as well as the citizens of the State generally.

The truth of it is, Mr. President, this whole Forest Reserve Bureau sprung up from a statute about four or five or six lines in extent. It simply provided that the President might declare forest reserves, and that they would be created for a special purpose—for the purpose of conserving the waterfall, to save the waters for the benefit of the agriculturists, and also to conserve and preserve the timber. There was not a word in the statute about leasing the forest reserves to cattlemen or to sheepmen. There is not a word in the law about executing The law to-day is absolutely bald of any leases or permits. such authority or permission.

And yet we find the Department claiming the power that has been devolved upon Congress by the Constitution in two important particulars. Congress alone may levy and collect taxes, and Congress alone may dispose of the public domain.

Yet, Mr. President, we have this Bureau levying and collecting taxes in the shape of license fees, and shutting men out, with their cattle and other live stock, from the forest reserves unless they pay these taxes to the agents of the Government; and we find the Department executing permits or leases, which is pro tanto a disposition of the public domain, and such disposition belongs entirely to Congress

Congress has delegated to this Bureau neither the right to levy taxes, whether they may be in the shape of licenses or otherwise, nor to dispose in any way of the public domain.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure. Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator whether there is any portion of the land included in the forest reserves of his State that will be available for other purposes than graz-Will it be available, for instance, for farm purposes or other industrial purposes?

Mr. PATTERSON. There is no doubt about that in the world. There is no great area of the State that does not contain a greater or less amount of good farming land and good grazing land, but they include within the boundaries of the forest reserves all lands within them without reference to the uses to which they can be put.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. But, Mr. President-

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator understand that the administration of this Department is restricted to the leasing of these lands to people who occupy very large areas?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. ALDRICH. But as a matter of fact do they lease them to small farmers who want to lease, say, 30, 40, or 100 acres?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, it is not a leasing in fact.

It is a privilege that is granted to stock owners to allow their cattle to range within certain areas at so much per head, and the cattle of a number of the companies or individuals may graze within this area and intermingle.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator has asked a question— Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask, in this connection, another question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator a question for information. I do not ask, of course, for the information unless he knows himself. I ask if a small farmer would desire the privilege, for instance, of farming 30 or 40 acres of this land, does he understand it would be possible for him to secure that privilege?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think it would be, but I think the rules and regulations do not contemplate arrangements of that kind between the Government and farmers.

For industrial purposes also, I suppose? Mr. PATTERSON. No; they only exercise this privilege for grazing purposes

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think the statement should be made to the Senator from Rhode Island, in connection with his question, that the whole forest reserve or any part thereof is open to the homestead privilege, and that the homestead privilege is granted where, in the opinion of the Bureau or Department, the land is properly adapted to agriculture and where the proof of the claim is not fraudulent. Further than that, with reference to the grazing, I call the Senator's attention to the following language of the bill, page 2-

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not discussing the grazing feature. BEVERIDGE. But the Senator from Rhode Island asked the question.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not want to have my remarks interrupted for the purpose of discussing the grazing feature of the bill. We will take that up when we reach it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not want to be discourteous at all, but I do not want the grazing controversy to enter into this.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Nor do I.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado

yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will yield to the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado yields to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I did not think there was any particular question about that. Then it should be stated to the Senator from Rhode Island, who asked the question about these vast grazing privileges and asked it repeatedly, that the preference is given to the homesteaders by the language.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to hear the language read.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am really very glad that this question of privilege of taking up homesteads within the forest reserves has been broached.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do.

Mr. CARTER. The statement of law, as made by the Senator from Indiana, is not the statement of the law, but it is the statement of a proposed law embraced in this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am glad the question of the right in the citizen to take up homesteads in the forest reserves has been brought up during my remarks. The right is only one in form and not one in substance, and I will tell the Senator from In-The cattle and sheep men are a pretty stern, exacting lot of citizens. They are away off on the frontier and in the mountain fastnesses, and they are pretty nearly a law unto themselves in dealing with the ranges. They fought with the utmost determination the encroachment of the settlers upon the grazing lands of the plains. For years and years they were able to check the settlement of the plains by those who desired to take up lands under the homestead and other laws. erage peace-loving citizen does not want to take up his home in a section where he will be regarded with hostile eye by those who believe that the range is theirs and that the erection of every fence and the building of every home within the range area is an encroachment upon their vested rights.

Mr. President, you may grant the privilege to take up homesteads in the forest reserves, but I want to say to the Senate it will be the nervy men who will take advantage of the privilege. It is in fact the equivalent of putting a stop to homestead entries when the lands are placed within forest reserves and then leasing the forest reserves to the cattlemen and the sheepmen of the mountains and plains. It is in part for that reason that the Senators from the West raise so loud a cry against the administration of this forest-reserve system, and, without referring now to the proposed new grazing law, it is the equivabarring from settlement every forest reserve that is declared by the President, not in terms but in results, for, as I suggested before, the peace-loving settler will hesitate to enter within the limits of forest reserves when they are, under the license system, occupied by the cattle and sheep of the stock growers

Mr. TILLMAN. He takes his life in his hands when he does it.

Mr. PATTERSON. They feel that way, whether they do or of. Therefore the men of the West—

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado

yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PATTERSON. In one moment. Therefore, Mr. President, a very great many men of the West are uttering an earnest protest against the whole forest-reserve system. I do not mean the cattlemen who get the advantage of the system, but I mean those who are not cattlemen and who depend for the improvement of their worldly condition upon the settlement of the country and the use and occupancy of the land for other purposes than that of grazing. Now I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether he is opposed to any system of forest re-

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I am not opposed to a wise system of forest reserves.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator is an experienced man in the West, and I should like to have his views regarding a proper system of forest reserves. We know, of course, that in almost every system there is some abuse connected with it. In my belief abuses of the forest-reserve system have been largely eliminated and are being gradually eliminated. I should like to have the Senator's views upon the subject of a proper reserve system.

Mr. PATTERSON. There are, I think, in the neighborhood of 15,000,000 acres in Colorado in the forest reserves. the same as taking 15,000,000 acres out of the State from settlement. Those 15,000,000 acres embrace hundreds of thousands of acres of good, tillable farm land.

Some system, Mr. President, that will exclude the farm lands and lands that are more valuable for other purposes than for timber from the operations of the forest-reserve laws might be safely adopted, and it would meet the approval of the people of Then we want these little, petty prosecutions

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. MEWLANDS. Assuming, Mr. President, that we have a forest reserve such as the Senator has described, would be not deem it wise to have some control over the grazing within that forest reserve? As I understand it, the uncontrolled grazing in the forest reserves by cattle and sheep results in the destruction of all the young plants and trees. Besides that, the uncontrolled grazing results in constant conflict between the owners of the herds of cattle and the owners of the flocks of sheep. of that, does the Senator deem it wise to have no control? Does not some control necessarily involve some system of permits and the payment of certain fees that will result in paying the expenses of that control?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, measurably the Senator from Nevada is right. In some things his deductions are not good. As I have said, I have no objection. Indeed, I would welcome a wise and efficient reserve administration. But, Mr. President, I would not turn this Government into an exacting I would not turn this Government into the absentee landlord of Ireland, who, when he can not get that which he demands from his tenant, will eject him and turn somebody else into his holdings, especially when the property over which the Government exercises control as landlord, except the bare, naked land itself that belongs to all the people, has been improved without costing the Government a dollar or without any Government agent lifting a finger to improve it.

The trouble about it all is, Mr. President, there is too much administration, too much zeal, too earnest a desire to collect money, too earnest a desire to show financial results.

I desire to speak about the salary of the head of this Bureau. My opinion is that skilled as he may be, learned as he may be, his administration of the forests has not been such as to commend him to the people of the country to the extent of raising his salary. I have no doubt but that the Department and the President are moving solely under the advice of Mr. Pinchot. He sets himself up to be the expert par excellence of forestry and the administration of the forest lands. He makes the recommendations, he visits conventions of cattle and sheep men and appeases them with his representations about the wonderful things to be done for them under the system.

I have no question but that most of the evil in the administration of the reserves is the result of overzealousness of the head of this Bureau, and that instead of increasing his salary and thereby encourage him to continue in the objectionable way he has been going, we should check him suddenly and effectively.

I believe, Mr. President, that it would be a wise act upon the part of Congress to say, by refusing to increase Mr. Pinchot's salary, "when you show you are worthy of commendation by a wise and conservative administration of these great interests under your control, then, and not until then, will you receive the Government's approval in the way of increasing the salary that you receive."

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator answer me a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. I shall try to. Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado

yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PROCTOR. Perhaps the Senator from South Carolina has in mind what the Senator from Colorado said, that these foresters were appointed in Washington. They are all under the civil-service law, which requires that they shall be appointed, so far as possible, from the States and Territories where they serve. Anyone applying for appointment, applies to the Civil Service Commission, and is notified when and where there will be an examination.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I discover that in the administration of the civil-service law those that are at the heads of Departments and bureaus get pretty nearly all those who have taken the civil-service examination that they want. had occasion not long ago to make application for a young lady, who had taken the civil-service examination and was at the head of the list, and yet she waited and waited and waited, and she received no notice that her services were required. I wrote to the head of the Civil Service Bureau for an explanation, and I was told—I may not get it exactly, but some Senators who are familiar with the workings of civil service will correct me if I am wrong—that out of the first three, the Department could select anyone that it chose.

Mr. PROCTOR. That was right.

Mr. PATTERSON. And that after selecting one from the first three, then they went to the next three.
Mr. PROCTOR. That is the law.

Mr. PATTERSON. And that the two next to the first got

Mr. PROCTOR. I will say that the two not selected still remain on the list for a certain time.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont must be mistaken. They do not remain.

Mr. PROCTOR. Oh, yes; they do.
Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no. I am familiar with this case. I say "Oh, no," with great respect, of course, and only speaking of my knowledge of what the rule was in its operation upon the particular person I have in mind. She was not selected, although she was at the head of the list. I think it may be that they were permitted to take two out of three, and having taken two out of three, then they could go to the next two and skip the one that was left.

Mr. PROCTOR. The law, as I have it in mind—the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] is more familiar with it—ex-The law, as I have it in mind—the Senator pressly provides that when one is taken from the first three the other two remain and are carried at the head of the list, another one being lifted. The one of the three that was not taken, but had been passed over a number of times—I think it was three times—is not further considered.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then this is the operation of it: Take the first group of three; out of that group they select one. The two of the three that are left, with the next one, form the next group; out of this they may take any one, and the two that are left compose, with the next, a group of three. They may take one of that group of three, leaving two for the next group, and so on, and the person at the head of the list they take may never be selected.

Mr. TILLMAN. And after they have been certified three times they go dead.

Mr. PATTERSON. And after they have been passed over three times they go dead.

Mr. TILLMAN. What is the civil-service examination but a humbug'

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not here at this time for the purpose of discussing that.

Mr. TILLMAN. But you branched off on it.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; I was brought to it by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor]. I simply referred to it for the purpose of showing that those who are at the head of these bureaus can get pretty nearly whomsoever they please, and they can so manipulate the civil-service lists as to take those who are twenty or twenty-five from the head of the list and give them places in preference to those who, by their examinations, were at the head of the lists and were entitled to be and ought to have been taken first.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly. Mr. McCUMBER. I think, Mr. President, that I can show the Senator the difficulty. He will probably ascertain that there is some parent living here in the city of Washington whose ancestor at some time had spent a few days in Denver or some other place in Colorado, who possibly may have come to the city of Washington thirty years ago and have raised a family of children and grandchildren, and they are all of them going into the Government service as residents of the State of Colorado, although, as a matter of fact, none of them ever were or are to-day residents of that State.

The Senator understands as well as I do that anyone can claim his residence almost anywhere he sees fit. It is a question of intent. A parent or a grandparent who left the State of Michigan or the State of Iowa or the State of Colorado thirty years ago—himself and his whole family—are holding these positions, all claiming residence in the State from which the ancestor came. They are on the ground, and the moment there is a call for a position of this kind they understand where to go; they are alert; they get their examination and they are put in the service immediately, while the others will drop out at the end of the year and none of them can secure these posi-That is the beautiful working of this wonderful system of civil-service reform.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, naturally the Senator from North Dakota has more intimate knowledge of the workings of this system than I, a minority Senator, have. I learned during the first year of my term in Washington that no Democrat need apply. I recollect going to the head of a bureau to speak about some friend who I desired should receive a place. I wanted to know how it came that no Democratic Senator could receive an appointment. "Well now," the official said, "I will let you into the secret if my name is not to be given." I said "Certainly not." He said: "About 95 per cent of all officials are under the civil-service rules, and the other 5 per cent constitute a body so small in number that it is not sufficient to go around among the Republican Senators and Members. Therefore, if we were to give a Democrat an appointment it would be as good as being given a sentence of execution.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. PERKINS. I only want to say to my friend from Colorado that the Civil Service Commission, as at present constituted, is composed of a majority of Democrats. There is only one Republican on that Commission. Therefore, if they have not been just to the Senator, it is not the fault of the Republi-

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the little incident I was giving had nothing to do with the Civil Service Commission, but it had to do with those positions that may be dispensed outside of the Civil Service Commission. But the Civil Service Commission only executes the law. Congress made the law and the Commission is not responsible for it.

Mr. President, I will occupy the time of the Senate but a few minutes longer. I simply wanted to give the reasons why it would be prudent at this time not to make the proposed increase of salaries,

And just one word more: We are engaged in increasing the salaries of what some of the other employees of the Government denominate the "big bugs" of the Government—the President, the Vice-President, the Supreme Judges, Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, the Cabinet officers, and the heads of various bureaus, everybody with a high title, those who usually have a reasonable amount of this world's goods, have received a very substantial increase in salary, while the great mass of the employees of the Government are left where they were and where they have been for many years. I do not believe we ought to increase the salaries of the high officers in the civil department of the Government until we are ready to take up consideration of the entire question covering an increase for the privates as well as for the colonels, the brigadiers, and the majors-general in the civil departments, so that the gulf between the salaries that are paid shall not be so great, and that the mass of employees, who work as hard and are as devoted to the public service as are the high officials, though occupying humble places, shall receive such increase as the mass of the employees of the Government deserve.

I want to say, Mr. President, that there are men and women of mature years who render splendid and efficient service to the Government, who to-day live from hand to mouth, utterly unable to lay by a dollar for future emergencies in case of sickness or otherwise; and under the civil-service law and from the very necessities of their existence they will continue in the service until they are incapacitated by old age, and then, unless they have sons or daughters or charitable friends who will take them under their wing, they will be sent to the poorhouses or be forced to drag out a miserable existence upon the charity of others.

Let us put a stop, Mr. President, at this time to this increase in salary for the great officials of the Government. Let Con-gress, after proper investigation through its committees, determine what increases there should be, and then, in the increase made, let it be an increase all along the line.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this proposition brings up to some extent the whole matter of the salary question; and while I do not intend in the five or ten minutes that I shall devote to this matter to go into that subject, I do want to call to the attention of this Senate some of the discrepancies that we are not only meeting in this bill, but that we are to meet in every one of our bills, which we are compelled to meet, and will be compelled to act upon before another session of Congress is closed. There is a genuine demand for an increase of salaries all along the line; and before another year this Senate and the House of Representatives will vote a general increase. question, then, that will present itself to the Senate is whether or not this increase will be intelligently voted or whether we shall simply take up those cases that we think ought to have an increase, without any comprehensive view of the entire ques-

We are starting again in a system which we have continued for twenty years of raising salaries by piecemeal, without reference to whether the particular salary raised is commensurate or proper when compared with other salaries that are being paid for like services in the Government employ.

Why, Mr. President, I take up this very bill which is presented to us, and there is not, I believe, one Senator out of a dozen who can give any good reason for the salary in one instance being fixed at one rate and in another at another rate. call attention to this: In the bill which the committee has reported they raise the salary of the Chief of the Weather Bureau to $5,000.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator will allow me, the salary of the Chief of the Weather Bureau is not proposed to be raised by this bill. It is already $5,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was going to correct that. The salary of the Chief of the Weather Bureau is $5,000, while that of the Chief of the Bureau of Soils is $3,500. I do not know, and I am very doubtful if the majority of the Senate know, why the Chief of the Weather Bureau should receive $5,000 and the Chief of the Bureau of Soils should receive but $3,500.

I take up the next. We have the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, whose salary is to be increased to $5,000, while the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics and that of the Director of the Experiment Stations is $3,500 in each case. What is there in the work of the Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry to put him above the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics or the Director of Experiment Stations? There may be reasons for it. I am not criticising it upon the ground, Mr. President, that there are not reasons, but upon the ground that we do not know the reasons, and therefore are scarcely competent to vote on it. I am admitting that the members of the particular committee may understand the reasons for the difference between the salaries of bureau chiefs as fixed here, some being $3,500 and others $5,000.

Let us take the next. The salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry is fixed at $5,000 and that of the Chief of the Bureau of Biology at $3,000. There is a spread again of $2,000 between the salaries of those two chiefs. Why? Is not the character of the work practically the same? Does it not require the same scientific knowledge in the one as in the other? Is not the importance of the work to the Government about as great in the one case as it is in the other?

I take, then, the next—the Chief of the Bureau of Forestry. His salary is raised from $3,500 to $5,000. I go on down to the Chief of the Bureau of Accounts and Disbursements, whose salary is only $2,750. I do not understand, Mr. President, why there should be this great spread between the salaries of the chiefs of these different bureaus. When I go to the next one I find that it is proposed to increase the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry from $3,500 to $5,000, while I find the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Entomology is $3,250. I do not know that the importance of the one to the Government is particularly greater than that of the other. I go now, Mr. President, beyond that to other salaries proposed by the legis-I want to call attention to two or three

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.
Mr. PROCTOR. Before the Senator takes up the legislative

Mr. McCUMBER. I will be very brief with it. Mr. PROCTOR. I want to say to him that the reason for the salaries of some bureau chiefs being put at $5,000 is because they are at the head of very much larger bureaus. If the Senator will look at the amount of the appropriation, he will see that it runs all the way from a million up to a million and a half dollars, while for some of the bureaus which he has cited the appropriation is less than $100,000, and the number of employees and their duties and responsibilities are correspond-

Mr. McCUMBER. One bureau may have a greater number of employees than another, but the scientific knowledge required and the services performed in a smaller bureau may equally as great as in the larger bureau. But what I insist upon is, if one position requires equally responsible work, requires the same scientific knowledge, the same general intelligence and capacity as another, it should be practically paid the

Let us take the legislative bill. I find by that bill that the Assistant Secretaries receive $4,500—that is, the Assistant Secretaries of State, of the Navy, of War, and so forth, receive only $4,500. Mr. President, in some respects the President himself has but a little more responsibility than the Assistant Sec retary of State. He does a great deal of the work of that great Department. We are required to pass upon his acts as much as upon the acts of any other officer. He is given the sum of $4,500; and I find that the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives is also paid $4,500. So the Doorkeeper of the House and the Assistant Secretary of State both receive exactly the same salary.

If I take the case of the Public Printer, I find that he is receiving a salary of $6,000, while the Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures, certainly as important a position and certainly requiring as much expert knowledge and intelligence, receives but $4,000. I find that the general superintendent of the railway mail service, a very important position, is given but $4,000, while the Director of Standards, whatever his services may be, receives a salary of $5,000.

I for one, Mr. President, am wholly unable to see the reason for the head of an apparently less important office receiving more than the head of a more important one. There may be good, honest, and just reasons for it, but the whole trouble comes from the fact that we have followed, year in and year out, this system, until the great army of employees has grown so enormous that we are absolutely incapable of dealing with them individually. Not only are we incapacitated from considering the whole subject as it ought to be considered, fully and comprehensively, but no Senator or Representative, with his manifold duties, is capable of giving the requisite attention to that

To meet that very thing there has been introduced during this session, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, a bill providing for the appointment of a nonpartisan commission, so that we may get as nearly exact justice as possible, whose duty it would be during the next six or seven months to go comprehensively into this whole subject, and to bring before the Senate and the House some data upon which we can act. I hope, Mr. President, that the committee will consider this or some similar bill that will result in bringing before us the proper data upon which can be exercised the enlightened judgment of the Senate and the other House in fixing all these salaries.

Mr. President, I tried to get some of the information that is requisite to enable me to act intelligently in the determination of what any particular salary should be. I ask of the proper department, especially of the Civil Service Bureau, if they can tell me, of the clerks who are in the city of Washington, how many are men and how many are women? They do not know. Of the men, how many are married and how many are single? They do not know. Of the women, how many are married and how many are single? I am unable to get that information. In how many instances are both husband and wife employed in the Government service in the Departments here? I can get no information on the subject. In how many instances are there two or more members of the same family employed, giving the number employed in each family? No information is forthcoming upon that subject. Every one of these questions has a direct bearing upon what salaries should be fixed in these cases.

I want to know also how the salaries of the clerks of the Departments in the city of Washington compare with the salaries of clerks performing like services in other large cities in the United States. There is not a Department that can give me that information, not even the Keep Commission, which seems to have been appointed for that purpose. I want to know how the salaries compare with the salaries of clerks performing like services in the smaller cities and the rural districts of the country; but, Mr. President, I am unable to get any information upon that subject.

I interrupted the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] only a few moments ago upon the question that he was then discussing. We have here, Mr. President, a civil-service law and rule. That civil-service rule prescribes this one proposi-We have here, Mr. President, a civil-service law tion, that every State in the Union shall have its proportionate share, according to its population, of all of the Federal positions in the United States. Is there any Senator who has the audacity to announce that this is carried out in spirit to any extent whatever? To the best of my knowledge-and I make the statement from my own inquiry-four-fifths of the entire clerical service in the city of Washington is performed by actual and bona fide residents of the city of Washington, whose ancestors or whose relatives at some time lived in this State or that State—in the State of Indiana or somewhere else—and their descendants are still claiming residence there, although their parents have been in business here for twenty or thirty or forty years, and every one of their children goes into the Government service. We have every morning and evening in the newspapers cartoons depicting the poor clerk that has to support a family in this city. If they were a correct picture of the real facts, there would be a great deal more in the demand for an immediate increase of salary than there really I am in favor-I am emphatically in favor-of the raising of all salaries below at least $1,000 to what they should be. But here are the facts as they absolutely exist: Here is a man who has a family of two boys and three girls. He is in the civil service, drawing perhaps $2,000 in Government employ; two or three daughters are drawing $1,200 and above that, and the two sons are drawing $1,800 and above that. That makes a pretty fair salary for one family.

I take into consideration another fact. The civil service was intended to give a square deal and an honest opportunity for every person in every State, to give a chance for the young men to secure positions and to secure the proper education connected with those positions, and the additional salary that is paid by the Government, because everyone of us knows that the Government pays a greater salary than is paid in any line of private business. Here the young men come as members of this family in the city of Washington, and they marry possibly somebody else in the service. Does either one of them go out? Not by any means. We continue the married woman and the married man in Government employ; we continue everyone of them in employment. They live together, but certainly are not conforming to the demand of the President of the United States for what he believes to be for the interest of this great Government in the way of an increase of population. [Laugh-There are no additions to the family whatever. They hold their Government positions and remain here, and other people are kept out of Government positions.

Mr. President, there is no fraud in the United States that will compare with the operation of the civil service of the United

Instead of there being an opportunity generally, as was designed by that law, the District of Columbia supplies practically all of the service that is required in the Department. That is no argument against the raising of a salary to an honest compensation, but we ought to have that information and we ought to have a rule and a law that the moment any man holding a position in a Department marries a woman holding a position in a Department she should step out and give an opportunity for a man to earn a living for himself and his family. I should like to see the other rule applied also, that where a man or a poor girl desires a position to support an aged mother or a widow, or somebody dependent upon him or upon her, from the family of whom five or six are in office at least one member shall go out of the Government service that another person may have an opportunity to go in. That is the square deal which we ought to get in this whole civil-service matter, and that is the square deal which we are not getting and we never did get.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope Congress will take hold of this matter and investigate the question of salaries, appoint a commission or otherwise that can give it the proper consideration, and then let us at the next session of Congress revise the whole salary list from the President down to the day worker and get as near justice as we possibly can. That is the only method, in my opinion, under which we can secure anything like a correct basis for fixing salaries.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] stated that it was his purpose to call for a yea-and-nay vote on this question.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator from Colorado did not hear the statement of the Senator from Maine. He withdrew his objection to the amendment, and said that in view of the modest salary which this gentleman receives he favored the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. If it is not too late, I ask for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will regard the amend-

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, in the session of 1905 I opposed the transfer of the Bureau of Forestry to the Agricultural Department. At that time I predicted that if the transfer was made we should enter upon an administration of extravagance. From the report made upon the bill, which was approved February 1, 1905, I desire to read a brief extract. The report was made by Mr. Mondell, of the House.

It is believed-

He said-

that the transfer will result in increased economy and efficiency of administration and place all the forestry work of the Government on a practical basis.

I wish simply to call the attention of Congress to the fact that in 1905 the appropriation for the administration of this service was $375,000, that being the largest sum that had ever been appropriated for this purpose. At that time the money received from the sales of timber and the money received for rentals of grazing lands was all covered into the Treasury of the United States. The bill which was approved February 1, 1905, provided that for a period of five years the sales of timber and the receipts from grazing lands should be covered into a fund and permanently appropriated, and the Secretary of Agriculture could check on this fund in administering the forest I find to my surprise that in the agricultural approreserves. priation bill passed last year the limitation of five years on this fund was stricken out, by this language:

That the forest-reserve special fund provided for in section 5 of the act approved February 1, 1905, entitled "An act providing for the transfer of forest reserves from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Agriculture," shall continue until otherwise provided by

So, under the present law, all the money received from the sales of timber and all the money received for grazing rentals goes into a fund which the Secretary of Agriculture may use as he sees fit, without Congress being consulted. It is what they call in the Department "short-circuiting Congress." They speak of a peculiar way in which they can short-circuit Congress and expend the money of the Government without Congress ever being notified or consulted.

I am one Member of Congress who believes in publicity. believe it should apply to the Departments of the Government just as thoroughly as it applies to any branch of private business, and I see no reason why funds belonging to the Government of the United States should be collected and expended by a Cabinet official or the head of a Department without Congress being consulted. The Members of the lower House have to go to the people every two years and account to them for the management of the Government affairs. The Members of the Senate go back every six years, and are held accountable. But here is a Department of the Government given complete power to sell millions of dollars' worth of timber, to take the receipts from grazing lands, and to expend the money under this short circuit which they have arranged, and Congress and the people of the United States are not permitted the privilege of knowing how the money had been expended, how much, or where, or

Mr. PROCTOR. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if he has looked at the whole of the section which he quoted in part? He will see that the concluding part of it provides:

But after June 30, 1908, it shall not be expended except in accordance with specific estimates of expenditures to be made from said fund for the succeeding fiscal year, to be submitted by the Secretary of Agriculture with the estimates of appropriation in the annual Book of Estimates.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then I can not understand why the language should be used here "shall continue until otherwise provided by law;" for section 5 of the act of February 1, 1905, reads as follows

SEC. 5. That all money received from the sale of any products or the use of any land or resources of said forest reserves shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States and for a period of five years from the passage of this act shall constitute a special fund available, until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the protection, administration, improvement, and extension of Federal forest reserves.

This provision strikes out, in effect, the five-year limit, and says it shall continue until otherwise provided by law.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—

Does the Senator from Indiana The VICE-PRESIDENT.

yield to the Senator from Wyoming??

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. May I call the attention of the Senator from Indiana to page 42 of the pending bill, which strikes out the House provision that hereafter a detailed estimate of the service appropriated for shall be submitted to Congress? I wish the Senator would speak of that,

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am coming to that in just a little while. Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator will allow me, I acknowledge that it is peculiarly worded, and it is not my wording, but I would interpret it to mean that while it continues as a special fund it can not be used except under an estimate and by an appropriation by Congress. That is the only way the two clauses can be reconciled

Mr. HEMENWAY. After the year 1908?

Mr. PROCTOR. After the year 1908. Mr. HEMENWAY. I can not understand why it should be delayed until 1908.

I wish to call attention to the fact that my prediction has proved more than true, much to my regret. While this item was carried upon the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is handled by the Committees on Appropriations of the House and the Senate, $375,000 was the largest sum appropriated for this service, and at that time, as I have stated, the sales of timber and the receipts from grazing lands went into the Treasury of the United States. The agricultural appropriation act of last year increased this amount to $1,000,000. From $375,000 the sum went up to a million dollars, and in addition to that there was used from the money derived from sales of timber and from grazing lands some forty-odd thousand dollars.

Now, in this year's bill reported for our consideration the appropriation has been increased by asking for a million dollars, and that $250,000 of that sum be immediately available.

Mr. President, I want to sound a little warning. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] hands me a copy of the bill, which shows the total to be $1,900,000. But I want to be absolutely fair. The recommendation of a million dollars was not carried in the last bill, but there is a recommendation in this bill of a million nine hundred thousand dollars, all told, asking that $250,000 of that amount be made immediately available. I can not understand-

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly. Mr. CARTER. The Senator stated that in addition to the appropriation of last year the sum of $43,000 had been received for grazing permits.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That sum has been expended out of the funds received for grazing.

Mr. CARTER. The aggregate sum collected amounted to $767,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But if there has been any of that expended other than $42,000, I am not informed. There may have been more of the money expended, but as far as my information goes only $42,000 of that sum has been expended.

I call attention to the fact that in addition to the sum on hand—some $700,000, if the Senator from Montana is correctan appropriation of $1,900,000 in addition to that sum is now requested by the bill which we are now considering.
Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly. Mr. HEYBURN. I only rose to say to the Senator from Indiana that upon request made last evening I received the exact figures of the amount on hand now. There was $869,809.44 in this special reserve fund yesterday.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then add to the $1,900,000 the $800,000 and over that is now on hand, and it makes an appropriation of $2,700,000, in round figures, besides the receipts of this year, this appropriation being made for the fiscal year commencing July 1 next, when this sum will have largely increased. You have $2,700,000, and with the receipts for the year commencing July 1 they would have on hand to expend in administering the forest reserves a sum no doubt running up beyond three and a half million dollars, as against a total expenditure of only $375,000 for the fiscal year 1905.

Mr. CARTER. I beg the Senator's indulgence while I read from the address of Chief Forester Pinchot in a convention of foresters recently held in this city, in which this statement is

During the year of the transfer, in which we had charge of the reserves for five months only, the income was $75,000, there being then no grazing fee. The next year the receipts were $767,000, or during the past calendar year something over a million, and during the present fiscal year we shall take in about a million and a quarter.

So the $1,900,000 specified in this appropriation is to be supplet inted by this million and a quarter dollars to be collected from citizens of the country for temporary grazing.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; and the $800,000 on hand, as sug-

Mr. President, I can not understand and I do not understand and no information is furnished by the Committee on Agriculthre that would lead this body to understand the necessity for this increase in the appropriation, running, as I say, from $375,000 for the fiscal year 1905 to over $3,500,000 for the fiscal vear 1908.

We are now drifting rapidly into extravagant expenditures, and this Congress will mark the high-water line. I am told that when Congress adjourns we shall have appropriated over a billion dollars for this one session of Congress. We are entering upon a whole lot of duties that do not properly belong to the Government of the United States, and in this period of prosperity we are fastening upon the Government expenditures that are going to give trouble to us when we do not have so much prosperity, when our revenues are not so great as they are now. It means a deficiency next year, I am admonished by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. President, in view of the fact that I opposed this legislation at the time it was enacted, in view of the fact that I pointed out what, in my judgment, would follow, I felt it was my duty at this time to call the attention of the Senate, and as well the attention of the country, to this rapid increase in the expenditure of the Government's money. We are told that it means that great sums will come back to the Government. When this legislation was pending in the other branch of Congress, when I had the honor of being a Member of the other House, we were told that large sums of money were to be brought into the Treasury of the United States as the result of this policy. But we find that not only the money collected, but large sums out of the Treasury of the United States, are required to administer the Forest Service.

I had hoped that with an appropriation of from $375,000 to $500,000, and with the money received for grazing purposes and from sales of dead and down timber, even this department of the Government could administer the forest reserves. But I find instead they are using all the receipts from dead and down timber, all they receive for grazing purposes, and now are asking that $1,900,000 in addition be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, I do not believe that this appropriation ought to be granted. I do not believe that any fund should be placed in the hands of any Cabinet official or other official as a continuing appropriation. I believe that the Congress of the United States has a right to know at the beginning of each session of Congress, through the estimates furnished by the different Departments of the Government, the amount of money that they desire to spend for the ensuing fiscal year. I believe we have a right to know how it is to be expended. I believe we have a right to have reports through the estimates at the be-I believe we ginning of every session of Congress, that Senators and Members of the House may know what the money is to be used for.

I do not believe that the head of any Department of the Government is better qualified to direct the expenditure of the money of the Government than the Congress of the United The heads of Departments were not intended for that purpose. It is the duty of the Congress of the United States to regulate the expenditures of the Departments.

I had the honor, aided by the members of my committee, to suggest a provision of law which was enacted by the Congress of the United States, requiring that the Departments should stop making deficiencies and that they should confine themselves to the money appropriated by Congress. If Congress does not appropriate a sufficient sum of money, we are answerable to the people for it, not the head of the Department that has the money to expend. Under that provision we have in a way prevented the enormous deficiencies that they used to send down at the beginning of each session of Congress. We want pub-We want it applied to the Departments of the Governlicity. We want the people to know and Congress to know what ment. the Departments do with the money of the Government; and there ought not to be a single dollar of Government money taken in that does not go directly into the Treasury of the United States and stay there until Congress, upon proper annual estimates, provides for its disbursement by the different Departments of the Government.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I have listened to the statement of the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] as to the manner in which money should be appropriated for this particular purpose and the criticism which he has made as to the manner in which this fund is now being disbursed. I am in entire accord with the proposition that we should have an estimate made and sent to Congress before an appropriation is made for this purpose. But as far as the management of this fund is concerned, I desire to say that I understand that the Keep commission examined the accounts of the Forestry Bureau, and they state that this fund has not only been properly disbursed, but that the system of bookkeeping in the Forestry Service is one of the best in use by the Government of estry Service the United States. Will the Senator-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FLINT. I do.
Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator advise us who constituted the Keep commission?

Mr. FLINT. I do not now remember the names of the com-

Mr. ALDRICH. I was going to say that the Chief Forester was a member of the commission.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that the Chief Forester was a member of the board which examined these matters

Mr. FLINT. I understand that one of the members of the commission, not the Forester, testified before the Littlefield commission a few days ago that the system of bookkeeping in the Forestry Bureau was perfect. As a matter of fact, an estimate of the expenses of the Bureau each year is made by the Forester and sent to the Secretary of Agriculture, and it is only proper and right that the same estimate should be sent to the Congress of the United States. There is no objection to that.

But as a matter of fact the expenses of the Bureau have not increased in proportion to the acreage that has been added to the reserves throughout the United States. An estimate was made by the Forester some years ago as to how long it would take before the reserves would be self-sustaining; and the reason why the expenses have increased was not that the re-serves had been extravagantly managed, but there was more acreage, and by reason of the fact that there was a greater acreage there was a greater expense. The Congress of the United States is not asked to appropriate a dollar more than was estimated by the Forester when he made his estimate that in a certain number of years the reserves would be made selfsustaining.

I have a statement here which sets forth the amount which has been received from the various reserves and the amount of the estimated appropriation, and also the total amount of expenses and the total amount of receipts. This statement shows that in three years the appropriation that will be asked for will be $400,000, and that will be the last appropriation that will be asked from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FLINT. I do.
Mr. LONG. In order that we may understand clearly the Senator's statement, do I understand that to be for the running expenses of the reserves? The Senator certainly does not wish to include the $6,000,000 that the Forester asks of Congress to improve the reserve, one million of which is in this bill?

Mr. FLINT. I do not include that. I propose to answer the question propounded by the Senator from Kansas in a moment. There are two propositions that we have to meet in the management of the forest reserves. One is the general expenses of the reserves, the expenses in conducting the business, and to meet the expenses an appropriation was made for 1906 of $875,000, for 1907 of $1,000,000, and the estimate for 1908 of $900,000, for 1909 of $700,000, and for 1970 of $400,000. During these years the expenses of managing the reserves increases each year by reason of the fact of the increased acreage, which requires additional expense by reason of the necessary superrequires additional expense by reason of the necessary supervision of this vast tract of land. The total resources of all kinds during these years, for 1906, was $1,542,219.96; and is estimated, for 1907, $2,250,000; for 1908, $2,600,000; for 1909, $3,100,000, and for 1910, $3,400,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to inquire of the Senator from California if he can tell us for what purposes this sum of money, the million dollars that we are asked to appropriate, is to be expended?

Mr. FLINT. I will in just a moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. What is the class of expenditures? Mr. FLINT. If the Senator will permit me to finish the state ment, I will answer that question. While the expenses of the reserves have increased each year, the estimate is made by the Forester that in the year 1911 no appropriation will be asked for, and yet the receipts from all sources will be $3,600,000 and the amount of expenses estimated will be $3,500,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask at this point, which is germane to the inquiry and necessary to give us a full enlighternment upon it, what is the character of the expense included within the appropriation asked of $1,000,000? For what general purpose is it to be expended?

Mr. FLINT. For building roads, for building trails, for building fences and telephone lines, and other works of that kind in the forest reserves.

Mr. HEYBÜRN. Not including pay of rangers or foresters?

Mr. FLINT. No, sir. Mr. HEYBURN. But for building roads, trails, and telephone lines, and that class of public improvements?

Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. For the private use of the forest reserve office?

Mr. FLINT. For the public use of the officers of the Government in conducting the business of the reserves.

Mr. HEYBURN. For the use of Government employees in conducting the business of the reserves?

Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. Can the Senator tell us what business will be conducted that would authorize an expenditure of $1,000,000 for roads, telephone lines, etc.?

Mr. FLINT. I can.
Mr. HEYBURN. What would be the business?
Mr. FLINT. If the Senator will permit me one minute, I desire to finish the part of my statement in reference to these expenses, and I will then devote my time to the million-dollar appropriation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will be glad to have an explanation.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me right there to make

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FLINT. I do. Mr. FULTON. I Mr. FULTON. I think many of these roads are necessary to enable the people to cross the reserves. I should like to have the Senator explain it, so that we shall understand it fully. I myself know that there is great necessity for roads, public highways, across these reserves; and if they are to be maintained as reserves under the control of the Government, the Government must certainly expect to construct roads.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Right on the point to which the Senator is now addressing himself—that is, the increase of the expenditures with the decrease of appropriations-I understand the Senator that the necessary expense will gradually increase until it reaches something like $3,500,000, but that the appropriations by Congress will decrease until they reach the minor point showing a profit in the operation of the reserves. I understand it further to be the fact that so far as grazing upon the reserves is concerned the Forestry Bureau estimates that that privilege is extended as far as it should be; in other words, that the reserves are now carrying all the stock they should carry

Then, are we to assume that the increased revenue from which all the expenses are to be curtailed, $1,000,000, is to come from the lumbering operations that are to be carried on, the sale of lumber, by the Forestry Division of the Gov-ernment? I ask where the expenses are to come from rather than to be appropriated from the Treasury?

Mr. FLINT. I say the income from the forest reserves consists, first, of grazing, then the sale of dead and down timber, and standing timber, and for privileges that will be granted in the reserves

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What privileges does the Senator refer to?

Mr. FLINT. Any privilege that is authorized by law. Mr. CARTER. Does not the Senator understand that one of the privileges claimed under this bill is the right to charge the residents of the State for the use of the water power passing from a stream on the reserve?

Mr. FLINT. I do not. Mr. CARTER. Is not that right now claimed for the Forestry Division?

Mr. FLINT. I do not so understand it.
Mr. CARTER. Is it not true that in a certain case in California, or possibly in Nevada or Arizona this side of the California line, the Forestry Bureau insist that they have a right to charge citizens of the country 75 cents per horsepower for permitting water from a stream to run through a wheel?

Mr. FLINT. In answer to the Senator from Montana I desire to say that I understand that the question whether the Forester has the legal right to charge for conserving the waters within the forest reserves and granting rights of way to operate the electric light and power plants therein has been submitted to the Attorney-General for his opinion, and until the Department renders a decision in that matter no action will be taken. In the event that the Attorney-General of the United States advises the Forester that he has the right to make a charge for the privileges granted, I presume that he will make a charge; but I desire to say that I am not in favor of any exorbitant charge being made. I favor a charge for these privileges that would be reasonable, a charge that would make the reserve self-sustaining.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me-

Does the Senator from California The VICE-PRESIDENT. yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. CARTER. It is not the question of the amount of the charge, but the question of the right of any arm of the Federal Government to charge the citizens of a State for the use of the running water in the streams of a State.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the proposition being discussed now is rather a startling one to me, and it has been repeated two or three times to-day. We are endeavoring to get a forest reserve in New Hampshire to conserve the waters of the State. We have a river in New Hampshire that carries more spindles than any river in the world. It did a few years ago, and I think it does now. Is it possible that the forest service can step in, if we establish a forest reserve, and compel our citizens who have manufacturing concerns to pay tribute to the Government.

Mr. HALE. On the Merrimac River?

Mr. GALLINGER. On the Merrimac River. I should like to know that, because if that be so, we want to abandon the proposition to have a forest reserve. We are not proposing to put our interests in the hands of the Government, so far as our manufacturing establishments are concerned. I should like to know exactly what has been done in that direction.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California

yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator from California, subsequent to the suggestion made by the Senator from New Hampshire, if he sees any reason why communities should not be built up and developed and industries established in this great empire which has been set apart and belongs to the Government. I can not understand why this vast area which is larger than ten or twelve different States should be segregated from the rest of the country, and why it should not be developed and used and settled as other parts of the country are

Mr. FLINT. I will answer the Senator from Rhode Island by saying that our experience in the West, or at least mine from my investigation, has been that the vast tract of lands in the mountains have not been taken by settlers, but they have been taken up and are now held in vast tracts, and it has resulted in an absolute monopoly of the timber business, and unless the forest-reserve system is carried on there will be an absolute control of the lumber business of the United States in the hands of a few lumber companies.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator from California a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the Senator if that theory is not a complete abandonment of the original forest-reserve theory which we passed through a law, to wit, that the forest reserves should be at the headwaters of streams to prevent floods and hold back the water?

Mr. FLINT. I will endeavor to meet and discuss that question. I desire for a moment to turn to that part of the statement in reference to the expenses of the reserves.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am entirely ignorant of the working of this forest-reserve system, but in traveling around the country a little, as I have been doing lately, I was in Montana and near one of these forest reserves. Talking with the everyday people you meet in a hotel, who may or may not have known what they were saying or may or may not have been telling the truth, I got the impression (those Senators who live in that part of the world can tell me whether it is correct or not) that all the great lumber barons—the "lumber trust," as it is called, those having the large mills and whom the Senator alluded to a moment ago—would be apt to gobble up the entire forest area that was fit for lumber. I was told, as I said, that these men were now getting the privilege of cutting the timber in the forest reservations, and getting it at such a small sum that it was worth six to ten times what it was being sold for, and that the people had to pay the same price for lumber regardless of this supply and under that dispensation; and we were reserving these forests for the purpose of letting the lumber barons or the lumber trust enjoy the opportunity to just take it in as they needed it to add to their already overgrown fortunes

Now, if that is true or if it is not true, I should like the Senators from that part of the country to tell us. We have no forest reservation in my part of the world. Somebody was talking about trying to get one in the Appalachian Mountains down there, but if we are going to have the ills and the other accompaniments which we are guessing at from what we hear, I do not want any forest reserve in mine. I should like the Senator to tell me whether the story I heard in Montana is a myth or whether it has some foundation in fact.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from California kindly yield to me?

Mr. FLINT. I yield to the Senator from Montana. Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I have no doubt it is the honest intention of the forest-reserve management to give everybody an equal show in the purchase of the timber; but the fact is, the man running a small sawmill is outbid for this timber and driven out of business, whereas the large mill owner, having an equipment enabling him to reduce the logs to merchantable shape more cheaply, is enabled to bid a larger price for the stumpage. It thus comes to pass in the State of Montana that the price of lumber has gone up, because of no competition on the part of small sawmills, from an average of $11 a thousand to an average of from $17 to $40 per thousand.

I have a letter on my desk from a ranchman in the upper part of the Bitter Root Valley announcing that the commonest kind of lumber in that country now costs $17 a thousand, and they are surrounded by forests, by superb trees; that there is but one sawmill left of any consequence in that valley, and that belongs to one of the wealthiest corporations on the American

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from California will permit me, the forestry arrangement that we are now working under permits the timber supply which has been reserved for the people to go through the fingers and turn into the pockets of the millionaire lumber manufacturers, with all this forestry, just as they need it, while the people who want to buy lumber at a reasonable price can not get it.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield further to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. CARTER. Our people are in favor of forest reserves for the purpose of conserving the waters. They are in favor of forest reserves for the purpose of perpetuating the forests. But their objection rests in the extravagant and unreasonable proportions to which this Bureau has spread the forest scheme on a slender basis of law. We have a mighty mass of rules and regulations, many of them utterly indefensible and oppressive, which so far militate against the well-being of the country as to be well-nigh intolerant.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, answering the question of the Senator

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. Before the minds of the Senate get off from the points that have been raised I wish to say that I fully agree with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] in regard to the propriety and the necessity of having all receipts of money go into the Treasury and have the expenses duly esti-mated for and the appropriation made by Congress. I have drawn an amendment that I think I showed to the Senator which fixes that matter for the future, and which is, I believe, satisfactory

Now, with regard to the use of water-

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator be kind enough to have the amendment read and printed, so that we may see the effect of it before it is finally acted on?

Mr. PROCTOR. I will read it now.

And have it printed.

Mr. PROCTOR. And I will then pass it up to be printed. In place of the proviso after the appropriation, I propose to in-

Provided. That hereafter, on or before the 1st day of January in each year, the Secretary of Agriculture shall submit to Congress detailed estimates of all expenditures intended for this service for the next fiscal year and detailed reports of all expenditures under any appropriation for such service during the preceding fiscal year.

I will send the amendment to the Secretary's desk and ask to have it printed.

Furthermore, as to the use of water-

Mr. HALE. As to the amendment which the Senator has submitted-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. PROCTOR.

Mr. HALE. My attention was distracted for a moment while the Senator's amendment was being read, and I wish to ask does it provide that estimates shall be submitted for all expenditures, including the official force and employees? That ought to be included.

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes. If the amendment is not broad enough to cover that, I will change it.

Mr. LODGE. I think that ought to be inserted.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think the amendment says which, I suppose, would cover everything of that kind. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

Mr. LODGE. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his point of order. Mr. LODGE. At what point in the proceedings did the Senator from California [Mr. Flint] lose the floor?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California yielded to the Senator from Vermont, as the Chair understood.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, in regard to the use of water, I wish to say that no charge has ever been made, and it is not proposed to make any charge for the use of water. was nothing in the law, as I understand, authorizing it; but it was proposed as a matter of negotiation where it was for the advantage of local interests to conserve the water, to make some arrangement by which a portion of the expenditure might be borne by those interested in it. It is, however, entirely a matter of negotiation, and nothing whatever was done under it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FLINT. Yes. Mr. HEMENWAY.

Just a word, Mr. President. ask if it would not be advisable to so amend this bill that the receipts from the sales of dead and down timber and for the rent of grazing lands should be covered into the Treasury, and then that appropriations be made from time to time as the committee sees proper; in other words, if we should not so amend the bill as to accomplish that result?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon rises to point of order, which he will state.

Mr. FULTON. I must submit that it is not in order during the course of the speech of the Senator from California to propose another amendment and to discuss it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from California had yielded.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Oregon that my suggestion was with the full permission, as I understood, of the Senator from California. I have learned believe that that Senator can take care of himself fairly well, whether in California or in the Senate of the United States; but if I am intruding on the Senator, I will not press my inquiry further.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. PROCTOR. In answer to the question of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway], I will say that I think the bill does now provide that all receipts shall be turned into the If not, I am in favor of so doing, and trust it may be so changed. If it is lacking in that particular, I will ask that it may be corrected. I believe in that just as earnestly as the Senator from Indiana can.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, in answer to the question of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I desire to say that if the timber in these reservations owned by the United States can not be controlled by the Congress of the United States by proper legislation so that they will not aid the great lumber companies of this country, but will be operated in the interest of the people, then that is the fault of the Congress of the United States and not of the Forestry Bureau. In my opinion the management of the Forestry Service thus far has not resulted in benefit to the great lumber companies, but to the people; and it will continue so in the future. I believe that to-day if it were not for these reserves every stick of timber would be in the hands of the great lumber companies of the United States, and would not be owned by the Government of the United States as a protection to the people.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California

vield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has not answered the question which I propounded, and I want to put it in this form because am seeking information: Will the Senator state what his opinion is as to whether or not, if we should establish forest reserves in the White Mountains of New Hampshire, this service could exact tribute from the mills along the Merrimac River?

Mr. FLINT. I will answer the Senator in this way: If, as a matter of fact, the Appalachian and the White Mountain forest reserves were created, no right that now exists could be disturbed; but by reason of the creation of that reserve, if the water power in those rivers were increased 50 per cent and other companies desired to go in there and obtain rights upon these reservations, the Government of the United States should charge not for the water, but for conserving the water.

Mr. GALLINGER. I can not imagine how the water could be greatly increased; it might be to a small extent. But if the new concerns are to pay tribute, I do not know any reason why existing concerns ought not; and it has been said here to-day that that is the policy of the Service, and that they do exact such tribute.

Mr. FLINT. As I understand it, no charge has yet been made. Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California ield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FLINT.

Mr. TILLMAN. My understanding of the Appalachian Forest Reserve project is this: That the timber now on the mountains, among which these rivers rise in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, already, so far as forests do such things, preserve the rainfall and hold it in the leaves in the woods. The object of a reserve is simply to preserve the forests as they are, not as to the matter of timber especially; though in time, of course, the logs and the trees that are there should culled out and turned into lumber. Yet the preservation of the water would continue, by reason of its being woodland, instead of being cut down and left for the rains to fall and rush off in torrents. There is no increase of water power. The only object is to preserve and let the water flow gradually, rather than to have it all rush off at one time, and thus have a succession of droughts and floods,

Mr. HALE. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. HALE. Right in line with this discussion, which is helping to educate certain people, and right in line with what the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Tillman] has said, I wish to say that I supposed when we established this feature of the forest reserves, it was, as the Senator from South Carolina in-dicates, simply to hold the water and to prevent its rushing off, and that it was to maintain the forest system, in order to hold the water, but that that was to be for the benefit of the citizens below, so that his supply of water for his industry would be more regular in its flow and that there would be more of it during any particular season. But it never entered into my mind that because of this conservation of the forest any power. governmental or otherwise, would take advantage of that and raise the question in any way of charging the citizen for water in the river below.

My idea was that the forest reserve was for the purpose of increasing the flow of water, distributing it more properly, and that the citizen below got the benefit of it. I do not understand how it is that this question has ever been raised. I would not be in favor of this conservation of the water of the forest being doled out, no matter what any Attorney-General decided, by the managers of the reserve to the citizen below. I do not like that question to be raised at all, and I do not think the Senator himself ought to raise it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Wyo-

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I never heard that question raised until to-day, and I do not think it has been the law or practice. If there has been anything of the kind, Congress ought to curb it, of course.

Mr. President-Mr. CARTER.

Mr. WARREN. One moment. I assume that in the case mentioned by the Senator from Montana it occurred because it was done under some peculiar circumstances as the Senator can understand, such, for instance, as the expenditure of money or labor to especially accommodate or benefit some person

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that the claim is made that this conservation of water in the timber on the forest reserves constitutes such a benefaction to that community as to warrant the Government in charging for the use of the water as it runs down the stream.

Mr. WARREN. I never heard of that, and if the Senator from California will permit me a little further-I will only take

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLINT. I do.

Mr. WARREN. The whole forestry question was opened up or initiated, if you please, not many years ago in the Interior Department because the forests were being rapidly devastated by fire. I state it as my opinion, after living nearly forty years in the Rocky Mountain country, that up to the time when the Government interposed with its care and supervision more than 90 per cent of the forest growth of the public domain in the arid and semiarid region was consumed by fire. I have seen it estimated that 97 per cent of the forests have been so consumed; but I do not think I ever saw it estimated by those who were conversant with the subject at less than 90 per cent. loss aggregated not only millions, but scores, yes hundreds of millions of dollars. Now, there were large areas in the forest-reserve project of the Interior Department, to take care of which they at first commenced with a few men at $50 or $60 a month each for a man with a horse. It was found that the fires got away from them; that they could not be controlled. The men and horses were too few, too poorly paid, and scattered over too wide an area. It then occurred to the Department to put in cabins and improvements, so that more men could be employed, and better men, because of better inducements. So that in addition to sentinels, reserve men could remain in certain localities and be distributed around the forest reserve. They also put in telephone lines, which contributed much to the purpose and success. After this experimental stage it was plainly proven that with the building of roads and bridges, cutting trails, building cabins or dugouts, telephone lines, etc., and with proper care in the burning of brush and refuse ravages by fire could be prevented and a thousand times the cost of prevention could be saved.

Of course, the timber in these forest reserves on the public domain was there, first, for the use of the settler, and second, for the use of the mills, railroads, and commercial industries of the surrounding country. It seemed better to have somebody control it all and sell the down timber and grown timber, which was of no further use as a growing product, and protect and foster the growing green timber.

We may have gone along too fast or we may have been too slow; and we may be too extravagant now or we may have been too economical heretofore; but I will submit that in the first instance the matter of forest reserves was outside and apart from the matter of the conservation of the water. the latter soon followed, as it was a consideration vital to an irrigated or irrigable country, but outside of the water question we were rapidly losing the forests by fire. For that matter, the Indian who went hunting to shoot deer set fire to the forests to drive the game out. So did the white man. I have seen those fires, and other Senators present have seen them. Sometimes they were started by the Indians and by the white men to make trouble. And all of this was the inception of this forestry enterprise on the part of the Government. States and Territories could not do it; they did not own the lands nor did they have the money.

Now, at the present time it seems that we have two funds. We have a fund that is taken from the sale of the timber and a fund from the grazing permits. We have passed a law by which 10 per cent of the fund received from forest earnings shall go for roads to each county in which it is earned, the balance to be expended for administration and betterments.

Then we have another fund by direct appropriation from the Treasury for permanent improvements

I want to say that my understanding is-if the Senator from California will permit me further—that the million dollars proposed to be appropriated in this bill, or whatever sum we shall provide, is for permanent improvements, such as cabins, roads, bridges, reservoirs, trails, telephones, etc., the roads being open to the public generally, and the telephones, so far as they have been put in, being such that they can be reached by the community at large, all this chiefly to place the whole forestry system under control against fire.

If the Department is taking too high a price for the lumber or for grazing, let us treat that subject on its merits. million dollars is too much to appropriate in one year, let us appropriate less; but let us not attack the matter of forest reserves proper and say we shall not protect them against these great fires and against carelessness in cutting out growing timber. Let us protect them fully. I do not think anyone believes we ought to bar all the cattle and all the sheep sut of these bare parks inclosed by forests—and that is about all they really offer for grazing. We ought to permit grazing on the park-like areas within the limits of the reserves. But I will not encroach longer on the time of the Senator from California.

I thank him very much for his forbearance.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that the Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that the estimates made by the Department show that the forest reserves will be self-sustaining.

Objection is made on the one hand to the manner in which this fund is being accumulated for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the reservations, and on the other hand objection is made to appropriating the necessary money for their maintenance. I am convinced that the Forestry Service has had an economical and honest administration, and the only question that arises is as to whether or not the Congress of the United States desire these reservations to be self-sustaining or whether Congress desire to appropriate money for their maintenance.

Mr. Pinchot has furnished me a statement, which I will ask to have printed in the Record. It contains the estimated expenses and receipts of the Forest Service from 1907 to 1917.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BULKELEY in the chair). In the absence of objection, the statement referred to by the Senator from California will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Mr. FLINT. The question is asked why should we appropriate $1,000,000 at this time for permanent improvements:

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator right there—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not want to intrude upon the time of the Senator from California, but does the Senator think that in the scope of the original forestry reserve proposition for the conservation of the forests the question of their being self-sustaining entered at all into the consideration of their establishment? I did not so understand. I understood that it was a great project—to keep these forest tracts for the purpose of holding water, to make, as I said before—and I do not wish to repeat to make it more equal in its flow and distribution. I did not understand that the Government, into whose hands we put this, was to go into any form of business upon these reservations, and the question of whether they were self-sustaining did not enter into my mind in the slightest degree.

Mr. FLINT. Does the Senator believe that forest reserva-tions should be maintained at the expense of the Government of the United States?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly, Mr. President. If the great beneficent object which we had in view is to be so great as all nature, and all the operations of nature show to every man it will be the forest reservations should be kept up if they do cost the Government. The moment that you introduce the feature of making them profitable, then you extend the reservation over tracts and areas that are not forests where it never ought to have been extended, and you depart from the original project upon which we embarked. They were not established for busi-ness and revenue, but for benevolent and beneficent purposes, and the forest reservations ought to have been kept in that way, devoted to that, and nothing else. We have departed from that and have made it a great business enterprise, in which the Government is engaged, and the question of profit to the Government has usurped the place of what was originally intended should be a great project of benevolence and beneficence in order to hold back and conserve the waters.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, in connection with that, I de-

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator permit me to give some figures in connection with that statement?

I want to finish to-night.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator will yield, I will say the interruption is for a useful purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California declines to yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to say that on Saturday Mr. Pinchot, the Chief Forester, under oath, before a responsible body stated toat not less than 30,000,000 acres of land in the forest reserves do not at the present time contain merchantable In other words, there is not less than 30,000,000 acres of nontimber land in forest reservations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Out of how many? Mr. HEYBURN. Out of 121,000,000 acres.

Mr. FLINT. In answer to the statement as to land being included in the forest reserves that is not timber land, I desire to say that there is no question but that there are lands within forest reserves that are not now timber lands. But they are included in the reserves for two reasons. First, they are a part of a watershed and help conserve the water; and, second, they are lands which in time will be replanted and re-That seems to me a part of the original plan, that we should not only have the lands reserved that would conserve the waters, but, in addition, we should reserve the lands that will grow trees as, although they may not now be covered with timber, they should be replanted so that they will in time become great forests.

Mr. HALE. Now, I see

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FLINT. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I see the force of that. I see that where in a great forest reserve of so many thousand acres there is in the midst of it a tract which is not forest, but is comparatively bare—I see the force of the Senator's suggestion, that that should so be treated that in time it would merge with the other and become a forest reserve and help to conserve the waters. But, Mr. President, it is as far as the East is from the West that you substitute for that that the Government shall go into the grazing business on these areas which are not forests, and grazing on which through all time will prevent their ever being We never contemplated that, and that never should have been embodied in this scheme of forestry reserve.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Sen-Mr. FLINT. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Maine alludes to the grazing privileges on the public lands now or the grazing permits on the forest reserves, but so far as the grazing permits on the forest reserves are concerned it must naturally follow that in these great reserves there must if that land was not used for that purpose and the stock permitted to go upon the reserves

Mr. HALE. But I understood the Senator to say—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield further to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FLINT. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I understood the Senator to say that the plan not forests now was so that of treating these tracts which are not forests now was so that they would in the end become forests and would merge with the forests. We never will get that done if the Government goes into the grazing performance. You will never have anything there that will become forests. I object to the Government going into the grazing business on these tracts which are not now and if the Government continues to pasture them and graze them will never become forest lands.

Mr. FLINT. I am not in favor of permitting pasturing on forest reservations so that it will injure the land and prevent its being planted for the purpose of reforestation.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President

Mr. FLINT. I decline to yield. I desire to conclude to-

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course it is the privilege of the Senator to decline to yield—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California declines to yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. But if he is going to do it I want to know it.

Mr. FLINT. I want to finish. That is all.
Mr. HEYBURN. I ask only an ordinary courtesy.
Mr. FLINT. I will grant it. Proceed.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California yields to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rose for the purpose of putting into the Record some figures which are pertinent to the question immediately under consideration. I do not intend to tax the patience of the Senator from California by asking to interrupt him any more than is customary in the procedure of this body, and whenever the Senator from California desires to make an exception in my case he has only to indicate it, and I will not interrupt him further.

The Senator from Maine inquired as to the use that was made of these forest reserves for pasturage. I happen to have before me the testimony, under oath, of Mr. Pinchot, the Chief Forester, taken on Saturday before a committee of Congress, and he states:

That at least three-fourths of the whole area-

That is, the whole area of forest reserves-is more or less used for grazing. Most of the western forests, you understand, are sparse, and the trees standing far apart, much sunlight reaches the ground, and there is a heavy growth of various kinds under the trees.

I desire also to give the figures, if it will not tax the patience of the Senator unduly, as to the extent of the grazing. He was inquired of as to the number and character of the stock grazed upon forest reserves, and he said:

We had last summer about 1,250,000 head of cattle and horses and about 6,000,000 sheep and goats on the forest reserves.

He was asked:

About how many would that be per acre?
Mr. PINCHOT. If there should be 7,250,000 head altogether, divided into 100,000,000 acres, it would be one animal to 15 acres.

Those are facts which I thought it important to have considered in connection with the discussion of this question.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from California allow me to say a word partly in reply to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. It seems to me where the ground is covered with full-sized, comparatively open forests there can be no great objection to some grazing upon it.

Another thing, in regard to restocking; I had the honor once to serve as a member of a forestry commission in my own State, and I gave considerable attention to that. There are some trees which are not cropped very much, if at all, by stock. pends upon the nature of the trees. Stock do not take to every kind of a tree. Pine and oak are not cropped very much, I think. I suppose that is a question which an experienced for-ester understands and ought to guard against. There ought to be no grazing that would interfere with the growth of the forest.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.
Mr. HALE. I know something about lumber lands in Maine.
I was struck with the testimony of the Chief Forester in favor be land that is suitable for grazing, and it would be a mistake of grazing, that large tracts of these reserve lands are covered with a thick green growth underneath. Now, instead of that tnick green growth being removed and destroyed by pasturing and by grazing, that is the very kind of growth which ought to be encouraged, because it is that which helps to hold the water. We found that out in Maine. The more undergrowth there is the better the supply of water that is retained in the forests for the benefit of the streams below, and instead of that being pastured on and nibbled and grazed off it ought to be kept in order to hold the water supply.

Mr. THLLMAN. The Senator should not forget to say that the packing of the earth by the animals destroys the water-holding qualities.

Mr. FLINT. I am not prepared to answer the question propounded by the Senator from Maine and answered by the Senator from Vermont. It is a practical question, and I take it for granted that a man like Mr. Pinchot, who has devoted his life to this work, who has not only studied the question in Maine, but in other States throughout the whole country, understands whether this particular reserve or that particular reserve should be pastured. I know that in my own State, in the southern part of the State, great harm would result to the reservation by pasturing sheep. In the northern part of the State, where there is plenty of rain, the result is different. There no harm could come, but benefit, by permitting the sheep to be pastured in the

Mr. HALE. What would be the benefit?
Mr. FLINT. The benefit, I would say, principally would result in eating up all the grass which, when it became dry, might catch fire in summer time and result in great forest fires.

We are making an appropriation this year of $900,000 for expenses, and that, with the amount of the receipts from the reserves, will be sufficient to manage and operate them. question is now presented whether or not the Congress desires to appropriate $1,000,000 for permanent improvements. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren] stated a moment ago the great loss to the reserves by reason of fires. We know from a study of this question that the reason why the fires have resulted in such great destruction is that because of the lack of proper roads, or trails, etc., they have not been able to have the forest rangers reach the fires in time to put them out, and that they had no means of communication with other rangers, so that they could all be brought to the place where the fire started.

This $1,000,000 is asked so that the Forester can construct telephone lines, build houses for the rangers, and build trails throughout the mountains; so that they can travel from one part of the range to the other, build wagon roads; so that the lumber can be brought from the reserves and placed upon the market, and in addition to that give the public access through these reserves. I believe that if a prudent business man owned these reserves he would expend a sufficient amount of money to protect them from fire, and if we do not make this appropriation in the end there will be sufficient money from these receipts to do the work as planned. Mr. Pinchot believes that the income, as he estimates it, will permit him to build these trails, these roads and telephone lines. But in the meantime thousands of acres of timber and millions of dollars of property may be destroyed by fire. The question is, will the Congress of the United States make an appropriation now, so as to allow the Forester to proceed with this work, which is simply a matter of protection to the Government's property?
Mr. CLAY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FLINT. I do. Mr. CLAY. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the very feature he is now discussing. On page 41, lines 23 and 24, as the Senator has stated, it reads:

Total for salaries and general expenses, Forest Service, $900,000.

On page 42, which the Senator was discussing, the House gave an item of $500,000, "to be expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forests." want to say this to the Senator-

Mr. TILLMAN. That has been increased to a million.
Mr. CLAY. It has been increased by the Senate committee Mr. CLAY. to a million dollars.

Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir.
Mr. CLAY. This amendment provides for the appropriation of $1,000,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to protect the forests, and there is not any estimate made of how it shall be expended. Does not the Senator think that in order to justify an appropriation of a million dollars for that purpose the Secretary of Agriculture ought to send to Congress an itemized statement as to how the money is to be expended? Is it not with him entirely—as to the necessity and value of preserving going a long ways when we appropriate $1,000,000 for him to use in his discretion, as he sees fit and proper, to employ any number of persons he may desire to employ, and to fix their salaries? I see the Senate committee has stricken out the

That hereafter a detailed estimate of the services herein appropriated for shall be submitted to Congress with the other estimates for the Department of Agriculture.

Is it not true that at every session of Congress there ought to be estimates sent to Congress showing how much it will take for these expenditures and what kind and classes of expenditures will be made? Simply to leave the Secretary to say how a million dollars shall be expended is, to say the least of it, giving him a power that he ought not to enjoy.

Mr. FLINT. I stated in the commencement that I was in favor of that and thought that was the proper procedure, and I understand an amendment has been agreed upon which provides that that shall be done hereafter.

Mr. CLAY. I was not aware of that.
Mr. FLINT. I believe the million dollars should be appropriated upon an estimate made to the Congress of the United States, and, in my opinion, all money for every Department should be appropriated only after an estimate has been made to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I wish to ask the Senator a question.
Mr. FLINT. Only a word, and I shall be through.
Mr. HEMENWAY. I should like to ask a question as to the million-dollar appropriations.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California

yield to the Senator from Indiana?

I do.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If this appropriation of a million dollars is made, I ask if it will not commit the Government to the scheme to the extent of six or seven million dollars? I see it is stated that the improvements desired to be made will cost some six or seven million dollars, and this one million would only be the first appropriation, and it would commit the Government to the expenditure of the other six or seven millions.

Mr. FLINT. I do not think it commits us to any There is no necessity for appropriating this million dollars to carry out any plan other than the same work that would be ultimately carried out by the Forester. The appropriation of a million dollars simply permits the Forester to do the work now, whereas otherwise it would be postponed some five or six or seven or perhaps ten years—the very work that the Forester would carry out now with this appropriation, provided he is permitted to continue the management and control of the reserves as he is now doing.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. FLINT. I will close in a minute, if the Senator from South Carolina will permit me.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will let the Senator get through, but before he sits down I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. FLINT. I simply want to say one or two words in reference to the frauds which have been perpetrated by the creation of these forest reserves.

No one realizes more than I do the truth of the statement made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] that great frauds have been perpetrated by the creation of these forest reserves and the acquisition of lands by forest reserve scrip, but if these forest reserves had not been created the frauds in the homestead laws and the timber and stone act would have wiped out the forests and we would not have any timber land.

While the result of creating the reserves permitted a great many to obtain timber lands, at the same time the timber and stone act permitted them to take them also. The result of all the land laws has been that the West has been robbed of its rights. I believe that more than 50 per cent of the timber lands in the West have been directly or indirectly fraudulently acquired, and if our forest reserves did not exist and the land been thrown open under the land laws as they now exist, in a few years every foot of timber land in this country would be in the hands of large operators and the people of the United States would be helpless so far as concerns the charges that the owners of the timber could make for lumber. The only protection that we now have is to retain these lands and keep some timber in the possession of the people of the United States.

Mr. TILLMAN. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to ask him a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. FLINT. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator has just argued—and I agree the forests, and he says that if we had not inaugurated the scheme of forest reservations all these lands would now be in the hands of large lumber barons, we will call them. What does the Senator consider the value of the timber on the forest reservations to-day?

Mr. FLINT. I have the statement here—$660,000,000.
Mr. TILLMAN. That is Mr. Pinchot's estimate?
Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir. And then $110,000,000. That would be $770,000,000.

Mr. HALE. That is the timber on the reservations?

Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does that mean all the timber, or that which is to-day merchantable?

Mr. FLINT. That is the present value of it. Mr. TILLMAN. Of the merchantable timber?

What I wish the Senator to consider and give us any information he has on it, for he has studied this question very thoroughly, is this: These reservations are intended to preserve that timber for the benefit of the people of the United States.

Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. A capital of seven hundred and odd million dollars, with the income that would be derived from it in marketing that timber which is ready to be cut and sawed, ought to yield not only enough to administer it, but a very large income in addition, to go into the Treasury of the United States. Have you studied—I have read just a little on the subject anything about the forest reserves in Germany and other European countries, where the governments have found it necessary to set apart certain areas of wooded land and to preserve those inviolable and to replant a tree for every one cut? They are protected and guarded, and the timber, as soon as it ripens, sold to somebody who wants to turn it into lumber, and the governments derive large revenues from their forest reservations.

Now, in a barren country such as the West is, in a way, as far as water goes, with the preservation of the water supply for irrigation purposes involved in these reservations, there ought also to be held in view the preservation of the timber for the use of the country as lumber. Now, here are two interests to be served. Agreeing that a proper forest policy would be a wise and statesmanlike act on the part of Congress, does not the Senator see that with the immense amount of land covered by these trees, which are in a condition to be turned into lumber, we ought to derive a much greater revenue than the simple expense account of preserving them? In other words, if this timber is to be preserved and in the end is to be dribbled out to favorites who will buy it under conditions where there is not proper competition, will we not be preserving the timber for the benefit of those who will sell it at an enormous profit to other people later on rather than have it go into the market in such a way and under such conditions as will be to the best interests of those who want to buy lumber as well as to the best interests of those who want to preserve the water?

I ask the Senator this question because I know he will agree with me in the main, and I want him to give us the information which he has, if he has it handy, as to how long it will be be-fore, if Mr. Pinchet is allowed to go on in his scheme, these forests will not only be self-sustaining, and not only will we not have to appropriate from the Treasury a sum commensurate with the expenses, but we will derive from these forests a large income to go into the Treasury, and at the same time there will be a continual reproduction of trees to supply those which are cut annually, like they do in Europe, and the forest policy of the Government will yield an income to the country, preserve the trees for lumber, preserve the wood for water supply for irrigation, and we will have a benevolent and proper administra-

How long will it be before we reach that?

Mr. FLINT. I think the forest reserves in five years will be self-sustaining. I furnish a statement, which will go in the RECORD, which shows year by year up to 1917 what the profits will be from the reserves. I have not the figures so that I can give them, but they will appear in the Record.

Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator can assure us from his study of this question and from his knowledge of conditions in the West that that is the policy which we are called on to appropriate for, and that in a very short time we will have an income from such forests, and that the lumber supply will not be gobbled up by the lumber trust, and that the trees will be there to supply the lumber for the country for all time to come, and that the trees will be there to supply water for irrigation for all time to come, I can see some sense in it; otherwise I do not see a bit.

Mr. FLINT. The Senator has stated it correctly, and much more clearly than I could state it. The maintenance of these reserves will not only assure a permanent water flow for the arid districts, so that many acres can be irrigated, but it will make certain a supply of timber for the future.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the Senator ought not to forget, and those in charge of these interests ought not to forget, the point made by the Senator from Maine, to the effect that grazing on these lands destroys all possibility of their being reforested, be-cause anyone who is acquainted with timber growth knows that the nibbling of the buds of the young trees just come up destroys all possibility of their growing, and you can never get trees to grow on land after it has once been packed by the hoofs of cattle and sheep and the young growth destroyed as fast as it comes up. We have got to let the trees grow according to nature and try to keep the fires down, or else we will never have forests.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from California a moment ago to say that the timber on the forest reserves is estimated to be worth $700,000,000. Am I correct?

Mr. FLINT. Seven hundred and seven million dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a letter from Mr. Pinchot under date of April 27, 1906, in which he estimates the value of all the forest reservations, 103,000,000 acres, at $300,000,000, and that includes the timber. I simply want the Senator from California to look up the statistics in order to get it right.

I have the statement of the present capitalized Mr. FLIXT.

while of the forest reserves, which I ask to have printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the Record without reading.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to offer an amendment to follow the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor] a little time ago. I ask to have it read and printed that Senators may see it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

It is proposed to add to the amendment of The SECRETARY. the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Proctor] the following proviso:

Provided further. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby expressly prohibited from making any charge whatsoever for the use of water in the streams running through or any part of which is contiguous to any forest reserve.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, with characteristic modesty I wish to suggest that we have merely progressed, in five hours, two lines in the bill, and that we are discussing matters five pages ahead of the point that has been reached in the reading. I can see no stumbling blocks until we reach page 41, where we have been discussing the matter of this appropriation. I suggest that it would forward matters to proceed with the reading and when we reach the point we have been discussing I will then be ready to yield for more discussion on it or for an adjournment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed at page 38, line 6. The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 38, line 7, to increase the total appropriation for salaries, Forest Service, from $141,700 to $143,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 2, to strike

That 10 per cent of all money received from each national forest during any fiscal year shall be paid at the end thereof by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State or Territory in which said national forest is situated, to be expended as the State or Territorial legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which the said national forest is situated: Provided. That when any national forest is in more than one State or Territory or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of said forest shall be proportional to its area therein: And provided further, That there shall not be paid to any State or Territory for any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such county from all other sources.

Mr. ALDRICH. As I understand it, this is a provision which has been alluded to on several occasions, particularly by the Senator from Wyoming, as being the existing law. It seems to me that this was in the last agricultural appropriation act, and it is now proposed to be stricken out of this bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is already the law. That is the reason why it is stricken out. The Comptroller holds that it is already the law. I will read from the appropriation act of last year the provision which provides for the 10 per cent.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he has any objection to passing over the amendment for the present? I should like to examine it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think we had better pass over both amendments on the thirty-ninth page, because the next one certainly will lead to discussion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over, and the next amendment on page 39 will also be passed over.

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment on the next page the committee withdraws. I think there will be no discussion on that.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask what amendment is withdrawn?
Mr. PROCTOR. The one striking out. If the Senator is not satisfied to-morrow that it is already law, we will consider it again; but I am very sure it is. I know the Comptroller holds that it is already law.

The next amendment, on page 39, line 18, was, after the word "forests," to insert "and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may divide all lands in national forests into such specific national forests as he may deem best from time to time for administrative purposes, and give to each such name as may be convenient;" and in line 22, after the word "and," to insert "hereafter;" so as read:

To ascertain the natural conditions upon and utilize the national forests; and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may divide all lands in national forests into such specific national forests as he may deem best from time to time for administrative purposes, and give to each such name as may be convenient; and hereafter the Secretary of Agriculture may, in his discretion, permit timber and other forest products cut or removed from the national forests of the United States, etc.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Vermont as to the proposed disposition of the amendment on line 18, down to line 22, page 39?

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that it was withdrawn.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is what I supposed.
Mr. PROCTOR. That is a matter of convenience. Of course that can be done by the President, but it is throwing upon him matter of detail, which more properly belongs to the Depart-It is not a matter of any particular consequence, but it is in the interest of proper administration merely.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, being somewhat familiar with these subjects, I would say to the Senator from Vermont that it is one of the most far-reaching and possibly expensive amendments in this bill. It is an amendment that may devote a vast sum of money to the administration of the forest reserves, and, when it is reached for consideration, I will very briefly point out wherein it is the most subtle and dangerous amendment that we have yet reached. It would enable the Forestry Service to divide up the forest reserves into an infinite number of administrations.

I suppose to be called by name. Mr. KEAN.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; by merely dividing them up and naming them, each of them carrying complete administrative powers The object is in order that they may multiply the offices in the field and subdivide the administration in Washington, and add infinitely to the expense of the Forest Reserve Service.

Mr. PROCTOR. As I said, it is a matter of administration. It is now in the power of the President to create these districts, and it is merely a convenience of administration. If it meets the objection of the Senator from Idaho, the committee will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. It certainly will meet not only with my objection, but that of a number of Senators who have discussed it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HALE. It has been withdrawn.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is withdrawn.

Mr. KEAN. It is disagreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. The striking out is agreed to, subject to any revision to-morrow.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the amendment referred to has been withdrawn.

I desire to direct attention—

N. I think the Record will show that the Mr. HEYBURN. amendment was withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment was disagreed to. Mr. HEYBURN. I beg the pardon of the Chair. stood the expression.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the word "hereafter," in line 22 on page 39.

I think that had better be passed over. Mr. ALDRICH. certainly should like to have the provisions in lines 22, 23, 24, and 25 of the bill explained. I think it had better be passed over, because there may be some contention in regard to it.

Mr. CARTER. I think it is very proper to have the entire matter explained, but its effect is to make this particular provision permanent law and provide for the unlimited exportation of timber from one State to another regardless of local needs. I hope the chairman of the committee will pass that over.

Mr. PROCTOR. Let the provision go over

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading will proceed.

Mr. CARTER. To and including the word "situated," in line 2, page 40.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is the amendment that consists of striking out line 3 to line 16 on page 39 passed over?

Mr. PROCTOR. That has been agreed to subject to a change to-morrow, provided it is not settled to the satisfaction of the Senator from Rhode Island that it is already a law. The reason for striking it out was that it was enacted as permanent

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would state that the part stricken out was passed over subject to further consideraion. The committee amendment on line 22, after the word and," to insert the word "hereafter," is passed over.

Mr. CARTER. The entire paragraph is passed over to the word "situated," in line 2, page 40. The House provision is likewise included in the right of amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was, on page 40, line 8, after the date "1908,"

And hereafter all moneys received as contributions toward cooperative work in forest investigations and in the protection and improvement of the national forests shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, for the payment of the expenses of said investigation, protection, and improvement by the Forest Service, and for refunds to the contributors of amounts heretofore or hereafter paid in by them in excess of their share of the cost of said investigations, protection, and improvement.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let that amendment go over.

Mr. KEAN. Let it go over. Mr. PROCTOR. That the committee withdraws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest that in his opinion the committee amendment can not be withdrawn except by unanimous consent. The amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Before that amendment is disposed of finally I wish to call attention to the peculiarities of the amendment. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] this afternoon suggested that the last appropriation act provided that after the fiscal year 1907 or the beginning of 1908 detailed estimates should be submitted to Congress. It is contended that that is now the law. This bill as it came from the House contemplated I have no doubt this particular language was insuch results. serted at the request of some one from the Forestry Bureau. I have no idea whatever that any member of the committee originated the amendment. Yet the effect of the amendment would inevitably be to repeal the law providing for the submission of estimates. It does appear like an effort to evade the jurisdiction of Congress in the making of appropriations. I think it well for the committee hereafter to scrutinize proposed amendments along this line.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 22, after the word "forest," to insert "and in conducting experiments and investigations in the city of Washington and elsewhere.'

Mr. CARTER. I should like to have the chairman explain what that means.

Mr. PROCTOR. The Comptroller holds that that is neces-It is inserted in all similar appropriations for other bareaus.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Let the amendment go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what the meaning is in lines 4, 5, and 6, on page 41, "to collate, digest, report, illustrate, and print the results of experiments and investigations made by the Forest Service." Does this authorize the Forest Reserve Bureau to establish a I should suppose it did.

Mr. PROCTOR. No. Mr. President, nothing of the kind. The printing, under the law, is done at the Government Printing

Mr. ALDRICH. Under the law; but does not this repeal or modify that law?

Mr. PROCTOR. Oh, no; nothing of the kind, Mr. President.
Mr. ALDRICH. I am not so sure about that myself. I think authority to print results of experiments and investiga-Mr. PROCTOR. tions might be to establish a printing office. Still I will not press the point.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The next aniendment was, on page 41, line 8, after the word "fixtures," to insert "and;" in the same line, after the word "books," to insert "and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington;" and in line 13, before the word "hundred," to strike out "fifty-seven thousand three" and insert "fifty-six thousand eight;" so as to

To purchase law books to an amount not exceeding $500, necessary supplies, apparatus, office fixtures, and technical books and technical journals for officers of the Forest Service stationed outside of Washington; and to pay freight, express, telegraph, and telephone charges, and for electric light and power, fuel, gas, ice, washing towels, and traveling and other necessary expenses, $756,800, of which sum not to exceed $40,000 may be used for rent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 24, to increase the total appropriation for salaries and general expenses, Forest-Service, from $899,000 to $900,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. Now I think we have reached the disputed territory, and I see no occasion to proceed any farther to-night, unless the Senate is prepared for another hour's session.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator withhold that for a few moments that I may submit some reports from the Commit-tee on Pensions for consideration?

Mr. ALDRICH. I withhold the motion.

Sec. 19. That all aliens brought to this country in violation of law shall, if practicable, be immediately sent back to the country whence they respectively came on the vessels bringing them. The cost of their maintenance while on land, as well as the expense of the return of such aliens, shall be borne by the owner or owners of the vessels on which they respectively came; and if any master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee of any such vessel shall refuse to receive back on board thereof, or on board of any other vessel owned or operated by the same interests, such aliens, or shall fail to detain them thereon, or shall refuse or fail to return them to the foreign port from which they came, or to pay the cost of their maintenance while on land, or shall make any charge for the return of any such alien, or shall take any security from him for the payment of such charge, such master, person in charge, agent, owner, or consignee shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall, on conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than three hundred dollars for each and every such offense; and no vessel shall have clearance from any port of the United States while any such fine is unpaid: Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, may suspend, upon conditions to be prescribed by the Commissioner-General of Immigration, the deportation of any alien found to have come in violation of any provision of this act, if, in his judgment, the testimony of such alien is necessary on behalf of the United States Government in the prosecution of offenders against any provision of this act: Provided, That the cost of maintenance of any person so detained resulting from such suspension of deportation shall be paid from the "immigrant fund," but no alien certified, as provided in section seventeen of this act, to be suffering from tuberculosis or from a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease other than one of quarantinable nature shall be permitted to land for medical treatment thereof in any hospital in the United States, unless with the express permission of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That upon the certificate of a medical officer of the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to the effect that the health or safety of an insane alien would be unduly imperiled by immediate deportation, such alien may, at the expense of the "immigrant fund," be held for treatment until such time as such alien may, in the opinion of such medical officer, be safely deported.

Sec. 20. That any alien who shall enter the United States in violation of law, and such as become public charges from causes existing prior to landing, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, be taken into custody and deported to the country whence he came at any time within three years after the date of his entry into the United States. Such deportation, including one-half of the entire cost of removal to the port of deportation, shall be at the expense of the contractor, procurer, or other person by whom the alien was unlawfully induced to enter the United States, or, if that can not be done,

SEC. 22. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, in addition to such other duties as may by law be assigned to him, shall, under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, have charge of the administration of all laws relating to the immigration of aliens into the United States, and shall have the control, direction, and supervision of all officers, clerks, and employees appointed thereunder. He shall establish such rules and regulations, prescribe such forms of bond, reports, entries, and other papers, and shall issue from time to time such instructions, not inconsistent with law, as he shall deem best calculated for carrying out the provisions of this act and for protecting the United States and aliens migrating thereto from fraud and loss, and shall have authority to enter into contract for the support and relief of such aliens as may fall into distress or need public aid; all under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner-General of Immigration to detail officers of the immigration service from time to time as may be necessary, in his judgment, to secure information as to the number of aliens detained in the penal, reformatory, and charitable institutions (public and private) of the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and other territory of the United States, and to inform the officers of such institutions of the provisions of law in relation to the deportation of aliens who have become public charges: Provided, That the Commissioner-General of Immigration may, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, whenever in his judgment such action may be necessary to accomplish the purposes of this act, detail immigration officers, and also surgeons, in accordance with the provisions of section seventeen, for service in foreign countries.

Sec. 23. That the duties of the commissioners of immigration shall be of an administrative character, to be prescribed in detail by regulations prepared under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Sec. 24. That immigrant inspectors and other immigration officers, clerks, and employees shall hereafter be appointed and their compensation fixed and raised or decreased from time to time by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner-General of Immigration and in accordance with the provisions of the civil-service act of January sixteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-three: Provided, That said Secretary, in the enforcement of that portion of this act which excludes contract laborers, may employ, without reference to the provisions of the said civil-service act, or to the various acts relative to the compilation of the official register, such persons as he may deem advisable and from time to time fix, raise, or decrease their compensation. He may draw from the "immigrant fund" annually fifty thousand dollars, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended for the salaries and expenses of persons so employed and for expenses incident to such employment; and the accounting officers of the Treasury shall pass to the credit of the proper disbursing officer expenditures from said sum without itemized account whenever the Secretary of Commerce and Labor certifies that an itemized account would not be for the best interests of the Government: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to alter the mode of appointing commissioners of immigration at the several ports of the United States as provided by the sundry civil appropriation act approved August eighteenth, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, or the official status of such commissioners heretofore appointed. Immigration officers shall have power to administer oaths and to take and consider evidence touching the right of any alien to enter the United States, and, where such action may be necessary, to make a written record of such evidence; and any perto whom such an oath has been administered under the provisions of this act who shall knowingly or willfully give false evidence or swear to any false statement in any way affecting or in relation to the right of any alien to admission to the United States shall be deemed guilty of perjury and be punished as provided by section fifty-three hundred and ninety-two, United States Revised Statutes. The decision of any such officer, if favorable to the admission of any alien, shall be subject to challenge by any other immigration officer, and such challenge shall operate to take the alien whose right to land is so challenged before a board of special inquiry for its investigation. Every alien who may not appear to the examining immigrant inspector at the port of arrival to be clearly and beyond a doubt entitled to land shall be detained for examination in relation thereto by a board of special inquiry.

Sec. 25. That such boards of special inquiry shall be appointed by the commissioner of immigration at the various ports of arrival as may be necessary for the prompt determination of all cases of immigrants detained at such ports under the provisions of law. Each board shall consist of three members, who shall be selected from such of the immigrant officials in the service as the Commissioner-General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall from time to time designate as qualified to serve on such boards: Provided, That at ports where there are fewer than three immigrant inspectors the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner-General of Immigration, may designate other United States officials for service on such boards of special inquiry. Such boards shall have authority to determine whether an alien who has been duly held shall be allowed to land or shall be deported. All hearings before boards shall be separate and apart from the public, but the said boards shall keep a complete, permanent record of their proceedings and of all such testimony as may be produced before them, and the decision of any two members of a board shall prevail, but either the alien or any dissenting member of the said board may appeal, through the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival and the Commissioner-General of Immigration to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the taking of such appeal shall operate to stay any action in regard to the final disposal of any alien whose case is so appealed until the receipt by the commissioner of immigration at the port of arrival of such decision, which shall be rendered solely upon the evidence adduced before the board of special inquiry: Provided. That in every case where an alien is excluded from admission into the United States, under any law or treaty now existing or hereafter made, the decision of the appropriate immigration officers, if adverse to the admission of such alien, shall be final, unless reversed on appeal to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor; but nothing in this section shall be construed to admit of any appeal in the case of an alien rejected as provided for in section ten of this act.

SEC. 26. That any alien liable to be excluded because likely to become a public charge or because of physical disability other than tuberculosis, or a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease, may, if otherwise admissible, nevertheless be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon the giving of a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by said Secretary, in such amount and containing such conditions as he may prescribe, to the people of the United States, holding the United States or any State, Territory, county, municipality, or district thereof harmless against such alien becoming a public charge. The admission of such alien shall be a consideration for the giving of such bond or undertaking. Suit may be brought thereon in the name and by the proper law officers either of the United States Government or of any State, Territory, district, county, or municipality in which such allen becomes a public charge.

Sec. 27. That no suit or proceeding for a violation of the provisions of this act shall be settled, compromised, or discontinued without the consent of the court in which it is pending, entered of record, with the reasons therefor.

Sec. 28. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect any prosecution, suit, action, or proceedings brought, or any act, thing, or matter, civil or criminal, done or existing at the time of the taking effect of this act; but as to all such prosecutions, suits, actions, proceedings, acts, things, or matters the laws or parts of laws repealed or amended by this act are hereby continued in force and effect.

Sec. 31. That for the preservation of the peace and in order that arrests may be made for crimes under the laws of the States and Territories of the United States where the various immigrant stations are located, the officers in charge of such stations, as occasion may require, shall admit therein the proper State and municipal officers charged with the enforcement of such laws, and for the purpose of this section the jurisdiction of such officers and of the local courts shall extend over such stations.

Sec. 32. That the Commissioner-General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, shall prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens along the borders of Canada and Mexico, so as not to unnecessarily delay, impede, or annoy passengers in ordinary travel between the United States and said countries, and shall have power to enter into contracts with transportation lines for the said purpose.

The Senate having stricken out the entire House amendment, which in its turn had stricken out the entire Senate bill, the whole subject of immigration came before the conference com-

The amendment further provides that if the lower deck be less than 7 feet in height, or if the apertures through which light and air are admitted to the lower passenger deck are less in size than in the proportion of 3 square feet to every 100 superficial feet on that deck, then the deck space for each passenger shall be 30 clear superficial feet.

The proposed increase may be shown by the following minimum cubic feet (7 feet between decks):

BENJ. F. HOWELL, WILLIAM S. BENNET, Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. BURNETT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. BURNETT. To make a point of order against two clauses in the bill. I make a point of order against the entire conference report, but I desire to address my remarks against I desire to make a point of order against the proviso at the end of section 1.

The SPEAKER. Let us get one at a time.

Mr. BURNETT. At the end of section 1, page 17 of the

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman report No. 7607?

Mr. BURNETT. I have Senate Document 318.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman in his hand the Senate report or the House report?

Mr. BURNETT. Senate report No. 318.

The SPEAKER. After all, why not take report No. 7607, the House report?

That is the language. Then my point is against section 42, on page 15. [Reading:]

Mr. BURNETT (reading):

(ports and places in foreign territory contiguous to the United States excepted) to bring such vessel and passengers to any port or place in the United States unless the compartments, spaces, and accommodations hereinafter mentioned have been provided, allotted, maintained, and used for and by such passengers during the entire voyage; that is to say, in a steamship, the compartments or spaces, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods, shall be of sufficient dimensions to allow for each and every passenger carried or brought therein 18 clear superical feet of deck allotted to his or her use, if the compartment or space is located on the main deck or on the first deck next below the main deck of the vessel, and 20 clear superficial feet of deck allotted to his or her use for each passenger carried or brought therein if the compartment or space is located on the second deck below the main deck of the vessel: *Provided*. That if the height between the lower passenger deck and the deck immediately above it is less than 7 feet, or if the apertures (exclusive of the side scuttles) through which light and air are admitted together to the lower passenger deck are less in size than in the proportion of 3 square feet to every 100 superficial feet of that deck, the ship shall not carry a greater number of passengers on that deck than in the proportion of one passenger to every 30 clear superficial feet thereof. It shall not be lawful to carry or bring passengers on any deck other than the decks above mentioned. And in sailing vessels such passengers shall be carried or brought only on the deck (not being an orlop deck) that is next below the main deck; and the compartment or space, unobstructed by cargo, stores, or goods, shall be of sufficient dimensions to allow 110 cubic feet for each and every passenger: and any person brought in any sessel, children under 1 year of age shall be counted as one passenger: and any person brought in any such vessel whecked or in distress on the high sea

Now, Mr. Speaker, the point that I think is involved in that is both of these sections contain new matter and not matter which was referred to the conference committee. Now, I refer the Chair to page 429 of the Rules to this language, "The managers of a conference must confine themselves strictly to the differences committed to them." Now, I respectfully submit that you may search all the bills upon which action was taken, and the matter referred to this conference committee, and you will not find where those two matters were ever referred to them. In the first place, section 42, I understand, is an amendment that should be included in the navigation laws, and it is an attempt to engraft upon an immigration bill matter that belongs to the navigation laws and is no part of the matter submitted to these conferees. Now, further along on the same page of the Rules it says, "A conference committee may not include in its report new items even though germane to questions in issue." "By concurrent resolution conferees are sometimes authorized to include in their reports subjects not at issue between the two Houses." That suggests, Mr. Speaker, the manner in which it might be gotten at in order to have free discussion in regard to it. There is a rule laid down as to how it may be done-by concurrent resolution. Now, I do not say these are not proper provisions if properly brought in. I do not believe there is a Member in this House on this side, Mr. Speaker, who will say that Japanese cooly laborers ought to be brought in, but we do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the President ought to be able to hold a big stick over a sovereign State and that we should engraft such a law as this on an immigration That is exactly my view in regard to it. The same is true in regard to the other provisions, if it is properly brought in by an amendment to the navigation laws, Mr. Speaker, and I expect there would be but few Members on this side of the House objecting to section 42, but there is an orderly way of doing these things, and the rules prescribe that orderly way. The Speaker and the Committee on Rules, if they want to proceed in an orderly way, can have this done in such a way. This looks like a law passed in this way in order to give the President the whip hand, a big stick, to hold over the States in order to force them to do things which under their constitutional prerogatives he could not otherwise force them to do.

Now, he can say this: "If you do not let the Japanese into your schools there, I will exercise the prerogative given by that proviso and I will let these men indiscriminately in. If you do what I say in regard to it, then under the authority that is given to me by that proviso to section 1 I will exclude them.' And in that way, Mr. Speaker, we have a matter of coercion by the President ingrafted, as we believe, in the bill in that proviso

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, very briefly on the bint of order. This bill is a Senate bill, and in the House the point of order. entire Senate bill was stricken out—that is, everything except the enacting clause, and but one amendment inserted by the That amendment constituted an entire code of immigration law, and was so considered by the House. diagreed to the entire House bill. Differing from ordinary rules as to conferences this, according to long precedent, threw the entire subject of the regulation of immigration into disagree ment The two sections as to which my colleague on the committee has made the point of order are the labor-conditions proviso at the end of section 1, and the air-space provision, known as section 42. Not only are both of these provisions ger-

Mr. BURNETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. The point of order is against the report. The remarks that I made were against the provisions there, because I thought they were new matter.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I understand that portion. But it is because of these two sections. Now, as to the labor-conditions provision which the gentleman has read, and which I will not reread, not only was that germane to the subject of immigration, relating as it did entirely to immigrants, but it was germane to provisions already in the bill. For in section 2 the House, and Senate also, had regulated labor as related to contract labor, and in sections 4 and 6 of the House bill there had been provisions relative to contract labor. So that not only under the rules making such matters as this permissible, when the whole subject is thrown into disagreement, is this amendment in order, but it is in order because it is germane to provisions already in the bill. Now, as to section 42, known as the "air-space provision," there have been three laws prior to this, that I now recall, relating to immigration. Each of these bills carried provisions regulating steamship companies with reference to immigration, and this very bill when it passed the House contained four sections so doing.

The SPEAKER. Were the measures that the gentleman now refers to enacted into law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes, sir; in 1891, 1893, and 1903, The SPEAKER. And are they part of the law which the House provision repeals?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Absolutely.

The SPEAKER. And did repeal; and to which the Senate disagreed?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Absolutely. And in this very bill there are restrictions on steamship companies in sections 12 13, 14, 15, and 16 that I now recall. And it is certainly within the purview of the bill regulating immigration to regulate it on board the steamship which brings the immigrants to our shores. And not only does it come within that rule, but I have already shown by citations from the act it is similar to legislation already in the bill to which the Senate disagreed, and which therefore was thrown into disagreement and as to which the conferees had the right to act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there are no two more familiar principles than these: First, that a conference committee can not legislate; secondly, that conferees can not take up for settlement any matter which does not form a matter of disagreement between the two Houses. This provise to section 1 was not put in to settle a matter of disagreement between the two Houses upon the subject-matter of the proviso, because there was nothing in either bill upon the subject-matter and no disagreement between the two Houses concerning it. Section 42, although excellent legislation in itself—that is, section 42 of the conference report—is entirely new matter to both bills, the Senate bill and the House bill, and did not constitute in its subjectmatter any point of disagreement between the two Houses

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are very few legislative bodies anywhere among self-governing people which have conference committees at all. One of the most dangerous powers is that which is conferred upon conference committees. Speaker after Speaker of this House has ruled that that power must be exercised in strict conformity with the rules of the House; otherwise, Mr. Speaker, after one House has acted and another House has acted a third House substantially can legislate for the country, when for the most part the Members of the House may have taken their eyes off the subject-matter as a matter of peculiarly pending study, and especially when, as very frequently happens, is at the end of the session.

I want to read a few words of wisdom upon that subject from a distinguished Speaker of this House. I read from the Journal of the first session of the Fifty-second Congress upon a point

There are but few countries, as the Chair now recalls, that have conference committees in their national legislative bodies; certainly none that have perfected them as we have in the United States. It is one of the vital instrumentalities in bringing the two Houses toget.er and securing joint legislation. But there must be no abuse of that power. It will not do to allow matters not in contemplation by the two Houses that are foreign to the questions being considered.

I ask the Speaker's particular attention to the language. I am reading from page 701 of the Journal of the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman now refers to the decision by Speaker Henderson?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair's recollection of that decision is that it was on the omnibus claims bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right.

The SPEAKER Putting in certain matter?

The conferees put in certain matter.
And the Senate, in an amendment to the Mr. WILLIAMS.

The SPEAKER. bill, put certain other matter in?
Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Each distinct from the other?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. And when the conferees met they put items in the conference report that never were considered by either Iouse or Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. Charges on the Treasury?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right. What I am calling the attention of the Chair to is-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that that authority or decision is in point here?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There may be some difference of opinion. Mr. Speaker, as to how far the language of this decision was obiter dictum as to the case then under consideration, but there is no difference as to the application of the decision to this case, If the Speaker will do me the honor to listen. Now, Speaker, I do not believe that it is obiter dictum as applicable to the case now in hand, because it is like the other in this. gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Mahon] made the argument that the entire question of claims was thrown into conference between the two Houses, and that when our House put on a claim, the Senate another and different claim, then the conferees put on still another, it was all right, which was a totally indefensible position. Now here, as I understand it, the position is taken that the entire matter of immigration was thrown into conference because the House struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and substantially put in a new bill. Now, it is applicable in this far: In so far as the House bill, after striking out the Senate bill, all after the enacting clause, put in matters which constituted matters of difference between the Houses. In that far this conference has a broader authority than others usually have; but in so far as neither House in either bill had any difference outstanding upon any particular subject-matter, and, indeed, no expression of any sort even, then in that far that particular subject-matter can not be a matter of conference or difference by the conferees. It is not only not a matter of difference, but until the conferees expressed themselves, a matter of legislative nonexistence. I ask the Speaker now to listen to the breadth of this language:

It will not do to allow matters not in contemplation by the two

This matter was not "in contemplation" by the two Houses. It was something put in to prevent an embroilment in our foreign affairs that neither House had theretofore considered, because nonexistent.

I continue to read:

It will not do to allow matters not in contemplation by the two Houses, that are foreign to the questions being considered, to be inserted by the conference committee.

Now, while the Chair believes that the conference committe is a great instrumentality to bring the two Houses together, still the Chair would be very loath to open the door to allow any conference committe to usurp the prerogatives of either House; and while he has examined with care the several decisions, the weight of authority is in the line of his own feelings on this question.

Now Mr. Speaker the point that I am making just at this

Now, Mr. Speaker, the point that I am making just at this moment is that this matter of the power of a conference committee is a source of great danger and that in it lies the possibility of great abuse, and that the power of a conference committee ought always to be strictly scrutinized and strictly construed in every respect. Now, what do we find before us, Mr. Speaker? Why, even by Republican admission here and in the Senate there goes to the two Houses the subject-matter of immigration. After the two Houses have passed a bill, there arises upon the Pacific slope a question about mixed schools there. This becomes an international question, Japan and the United States being the Neither House had considered it. There arises in parties. connection with that question also a question as to Japanese and others having passports to land in Hawaii and the Philippines landing in continental America. Neither House had considered it. It had not formed a part of either bill. Here is a sudden contingency arising, and instead of the two Houses dealing with it a conference committee reports to the two Houses, and in its report undertakes to deal with the question before either House has a chance to be consulted or to have an opportunity for deliberation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I stand with the State of California, as far as I am concerned, no matter where her delegation may stand, in opposition to mixed schools. [Applause.] I stand with Californians in favor of the proposition that we want a homogeneous and assimilable population of white people in this Republic [applause]; that we do not want unassimilable and alien races. And I do not base my opinion, so far as the Japanese are concerned, upon the ground that they are an inferior race, but simply upon the ground that they are different and unassimilable, and that it is contrary to the best interests of the Republic

The SPEAKER. The gentleman w to the discussion of the point of order. The gentleman will please confine himself

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am trying to show the gravity of the question, and therefore the danger of the exercise of this power by a mere conference committee.

The SPEAKER. Questions of order ought not to be decided by differences that may be partisan or otherwise. The question is a very plain proposition, and the argument is addressed to the Chair, and not to the House, primarily.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have just announced to the Chair—and of course if the Chair differs with me I shall not continue any further on that line—that in reading the decision of Speaker Henderson I have called attention to the gravity and the novelty of this power in the American National Legislature vested in conferees. I was trying just to illustrate, to carry further, to emphasize, and to reenforce those remarks of Speaker Henderson by showing that in this special case it was still more gravely dangerous to allow conferees to legis-

The SPEAKER. The Chair was giving very close attention to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS: Now, Mr. Speaker, I read again from the Parliamentary Precedents of the House of Representatives, by our friend Mr. Hinds, who upon a celebrated occasion was admitted by the Speaker and myself to be superior to either one of us as a repository of parliamentary information. I read from page 742, section 1414:

Conferees may not include in their report matters not committed to them by either House.

On June 23, 1812, Mr. Robert Wright, of Maryland, from the managers appointed on the part of the House to attend a conference with the managers on the part of the Senate upon the subject-matter of the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill for the more perfect organization of the Infantry of the Army of the United States, made a report which was read, and declared by the Speaker to be out of order, inasmuch as the conferees had discussed and proposed amendments which had not been committed to them by either of the two Houses.

Now, that is the point. It is not the point of germaneness to the subject-matter, but the point, as is so well said in these lines, is a question of what has been committed to the conferees in the language and substance of the bill as a matter of difference between the two Houses. There was no matter of difference between the two Houses with regard to this proviso to section 1. There was also no matter of difference be-tween the two Houses with regard to section 42, for the simple reason that there can not be a matter of difference with regard to a subject-matter when the subject-matter itself did not enter into either bill.

I read again:

The managers and conferees must confine themselves strictly to the differences submitted to them. (2d sess. 58th Cong., Journal, p. 404.) "Strictly" is the word used.

By concurrent resolution conferees are sometimes permitted to include in the report subjects not at issue,

The converse therefore is that never in any other manner is the committee to consider subjects "not at issue;" whether these matters be germane or not, they must be subjects at issue, they must constitute points of difference between the two Houses; because the jurisdictional question to be considered by conferees, or by the conference committee, is this: Upon this particular point is there any disagreement between the two Houses? If there be none, no matter how germane the matter may be to the general principles of the bill, no matter how good the legislation itself may be, it is not within the jurisdiction of conferees

Now, Mr. Speaker, some other things I had intended to say right now, but perhaps I may obtain an opportunity to say them later, because I understand the Speaker to rule that I can not now emphasize and reenforce the gravity of this particular racial and school question by describing what it is. If the Chair takes that position, I must obey the power of the Chair and the wisdom of the Chair and postpone until a later time the opportunity to say why this particular question of all questions should not be one to be dealt with by a conference committee when there is no point of disagreement between the two Houses. [Applause.]

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the question of parliamentary law is to be decided by precedents and by principle. The general merits of the proposition involved are not subject to discussion at this time, and I shall therefore confine myself to the matter that is legitimately at issue in the question presented. The gentleman from Mississippi has just read from the work of Mr. Hinds on Parliamentary Precedents, and he read section 1414. If he had only turned one more page, he would have found a precedent entirely on all fours with this one, presented to the Speaker at that time. I refer to the decision found on page 745, section 1420. The difference between the precedent, or the supposed precedent, cited by the gentleman from Mississippi and the real precedent in this case is that when the Senate bill on immigration came to this House the Committee on Immigration of the House of Representatives did not amend that bill in the ordinary way, but struck out all of the Senate bill and inserted by way of an amendment an entire substitute, wholly unlike the Senate bill which went to the Committee on Immigration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the House passed that substitute with only one amendment. That went back to the Senate, and the Senate did not concur. The matter was placed in conference. Therefore, when the matter went to the conferees there was not a single proposition upon which the Senate and the House had agreed. What, therefore, was necessarily the condition when it got into conference? The only thing that the conferees had before them was the subject-matter, but there was not a single line, there was not a single sentence, upon which the House and the Senate had agreed.

Therefore the whole subject-matter was before the conference committee, and it was clearly within the power of the conference committee to bring back any report on that subject-matter, whether it corresponded to what the Senate had in its original bill or what the House had in the substitute sent back to the House from its Committee on Immigration. What is the precedent, Mr. Speaker, and with that I shall be content? "On March 3, 1865, Mr. Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, from the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 51, entitled 'An act to establish a bureau of freedmen's affairs,' reported that the Senate had receded from their amendment, which was a substitute, and the committee had agreed upon, as a substitute, a new bill, entitled 'An act to establish a bureau for the relief of freedmen and refugees.' Speaker will-notice, a substitute, not the original proposition amended, but the original proposition stricken out and another new proposition brought in. "As soon as the report had been read Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, made the point that the report did not come within the scope of the conference committee. It did not report the proceedings of the Senate or an agreement by the committee on amendment to the Senate's amendment to the House bill, but it reported an entire substitute for both original bills and the substitute adopted by the Senate, and it established a department unprovided for by either of the other bills." Just precisely on all fours with this case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman think it is? Mr. WATSON. Why, I know it is; I do not think anything about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Certainly. Mr. WATSON.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman think that there is not in the present Senate bill any subject-matter that comes into agreement with any of the provisions of the House bill we are now considering, and yet that was the fact stated by the Speaker in regard to the matter which he is now quoting?

Mr. WATSON. The precedent I am citing has to do only with the subject-matter. That is all this Committee on Immigration had to do with-the subject-matter. It is not the bill that the Senate and House had passed, but an entire substitute for the What is the ruloriginal Senate bill, just as in the case cited. ing of the Speaker in that case, which I hold to be entirely on fours with the existing proposition? The Speaker said: "The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill," precisely what occurred in this case. "If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language or any part of a section the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate, having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference had the right to strike out that and report a substitute in Two separate bills have been referred to the commitits stead. tee, and they can take either one of them, or a new bill en-tirely, or a bill embracing parts of either." There is the de-cision. Two separate bills, the Senate bill and the House bill, having been referred to the conference committee, the conference committee can take either the Senate bill or the House bill or neither, and the conferees report an entirely new proposition not embraced in either one of the propositions referred to the committee. What else? "They have a right to report-any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them."

Now, Mr. Speaker, it was clearly within the power of this conference committee on immigration to report back the Senate bill, to report back the House bill, to report back an entirely new bill, just so it was germane to the question of immigration, and inasmuch as they have done that thing, they have not exceeded their authority, and their report is entirely within the rules of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Washington. Who was the Speaker who rendered that decision?

Mr. WATSON. Schuyler Colfax, of Indiana.
Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. WATSON. Certainly.
Mr. BURNETT. According to the argument of the gentleman, does the gentleman think that the committee could bring in a bill repealing the Chinese-exclusion act?

Mr. WATSON. How is that? Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman think this committee on conference could have brought in a bill repealing the Chineseexclusion act and substituting it for it?

Mr. WATSON. I understand from my friend that is specifically in the bill.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, answering my colleague on the committee, I would say that if he will turn to section 42 of the House bill he will find that the subject of the Chinese-exclusion matter is specifically referred to in the bill. So that would come in.

Mr. BURNETT. I will repeat my question, then, to the gentleman. That emphasizes it again. With that in there, does the gentleman think this committee could have come in and offered to report a substitute to the bill, repealing the Chineseexclusion act?

Mr. WATSON. I think that any bill might have been reported by the conference committee germane to the subject of immigration under this decision.

Mr. BURNETT. I will ask the gentleman not to dodge the question, but to answer it.

The SPEAKER. The Chinese-exclusion act in the repealing clause is especially excepted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was that?

The SPEAKER. In the repealing clause of the House substitute the Chinese-exclusion act is specially excepted.

Mr. BURNETT. Suppose it would not?
The SPEAKER. What is the use of guessing about what might, could, would, should, or ought not to be? The Chair is prepared to rule, although the Chair will hear, briefly, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. The position taken by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Watson], if I understand it correctly, is the position that was taken by the senior Senator from Massachusetts in the United States Senate on Saturday, to wit, that where one House passes a complete statute and another House a completely different statute, but "on the same subject-matter," the conferees may bring in anything touching the subject-matter of the two bills.

Now, granting for the sake of argument the soundness of that position for the present, and I grant it only for the sake of argument, I contend that this question does not come within the purview even of that opinion, because, Mr. Speaker, these matters in this proviso and in this section are not a part of the subject-matter of either one of these two bills, hitherto passed by the Senate and the House. There was no such subject-matter as vesting the regulation of immigration in the Executive, instead of prescribing it by the legislative, in either bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Senator-and I am quoting from the Congressional Record of February 16, 1907—goes on to say some things that are a little curious, coming from that side of the Capitol and relating to affairs on this side, I think. says:

I read from the Record of January 16 remarks of Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts.

I may say that very early in our conferences I thought it best to take the opinion of the Speaker of the other House as to the general powers of conferees in the conditions which then arose. I have no right to quote, and shall not, a private conversation, but on a parliamentary matter I think I am at liberty to say that the conferees, in their interpretation of the situation, did not go beyond the views and opinion of the Speaker of the other House, who is recognized as one of the great parliamentarians of the country.

The Senator from Massachusetts consulted a yet higher parliamentary authority, for a little later the Senator said:

in my judgment. Mr. President, the conferees had a right to make the addition with which fault is now found. I am informed to-day—and I venture to quote it that I may not be supposed to be advancing something which only a member of the conference would be supposed to hold—I am informed to-day that the man whom I tonisder, and whom I think all consider who have examined his books, to be the greatest parliamentary expert living as to the parliamentary law of the Congress of the United States, Mr. Hinds, clerk at the Speaker's table, pronounced both these amendments to be entirely germane and within the power of the conferees.

I thought I would refer to that as a sort of an excuse for myself, because if the Speaker and the Senator from Massachusetts had had an understanding upon this question before it was presented to the House of Representatives it would seem that I have been engaged, while trying to prevail on the Speaker to open the case for a rehearing, in quite'a superfluous piece of work. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule. [Laughter.] The Senate during the last session passed an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States,'" etc.

This Senate bill was broad in its provisions and substantially amended the immigration laws then in force. It was very general in its nature, as will be found upon examination. bill came to the House. The House struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause, by way of amendment, and passed a substitute therefor. So that the House entirely disagreed with every line, with every paragraph, with every section of the Senate bill—everything except the enacting clause—and proposed a substitute therefor, and this substitute on examination is found to be a complete codification and amendment of existing immigration laws, and incidentally the labor laws connected therewith, especially those dealing with contract labor, and with many other questions to which it is not necessary to refer. And in the final clause of the House substitute there is the provision:

That the act of March 3, 1903, being an act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States, except section 34 thereof, and the act of March 22, 1904, being an act to extend the exemption from head tax to citizens of Newfoundland entering the United States, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed. Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend existing laws relating to the immigration or exclusion of Chinese persons, etc.

So that not only does the House by its substitute amendment codify and amend all the laws touching immigration, but incidentally changes those relating to labor, especially contract labor. The House substitute is found to be abounding in section after section with the prohibition of contract labor in connection with immigration, and with various other provisions of a similar nature.

The House substitute, by way of amendment, went to the Senate. The Senate disagreed to every line, paragraph, and section of the House provision; and with that disagreement to the Senate provision, and with the House provision in effect a disagreement to the original Senate bill, the whole matter went to conference. That is, by this action there was committed to conference the whole subject of immigration, and, as connected therewith, the prohibition of immigration by way of contract labor in the fullest sense of the words.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. WILLIAMS. I feel as if it were a trespass, but would the Speaker allow me to ask him a question there?

This taking the whole subject-matter of immigration to be thrown into the conference, was it not a subject-matter of legislation by Congress, for fixed and prescribed rules of immigration, and not a subject-matter of applying the discretion of the Executive upon that subject?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not had time to hunt up all the provisions of the immigration laws of the country, but the repealing clause, with the exception as proposed by the House and the disagreement of the Senate, sent this whole matter, in the opinion of the Chair, to the conferees. Now, then, there is but one provision that is seriously contended for in the point of order that is made, and that is to be found on page 2 of the House conference report, 6607, and is as follows:

That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

Now, then, one of the principal efforts in legislation heretofore has been to exclude labor that is brought in under contract or is promoted, so to speak; and the very reason of that legislation has been and is that the labor conditions in the United States should not be affected unfavorably. Three sections of the House substitute deal expressly with that question. It is not like unto the precedent cited by the gentleman from Missis-sippi, which was made by the ruling of Mr. Speaker Henderson. The only thing there was a disagreement between the House and the Senate as to certain specified claims, and between the Senate and House as to certain other specified claims. ferees in that case, taking in the whole sea or ocean of claims, from the birth of Christ to the supposed death of the man with hoofs and horns, picked out a number of claims that the House or Senate never had heard of or dealt with and put them in the or Senate never had heard of or dead thenderson properly sus-conference report, and Mr. Speaker Henderson properly sustained the point of order to the conference report. The Chair has no difficulty nor any hesitation in holding that this is germane first; and, second, that it comes within the scope of the disagreement between the House and Senate as affects immigra-tion on the one hand and the interest of labor on the other, and therefore overrules the point of order. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the Mr. BURNETT.

decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The the decision of the Chair. The gentleman from Alabama appeals from

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

A parliamentary inquiry. Mr. BARTHOLDT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does the ruling of the Chair apply also to the point of order raised against section 42?

question is, Shall the appeal from the decision of the Chair lie upon the table? The SPEAKER. It applies to everything. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to save the time of the House, I call for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 198, nays 104, answered "present" 4, not voting 71, as follows:

Mr. BENNET of New York rose and was recognized by the Speaker

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from New York begins—my understanding is that he has an hour for debate—I would suggest that we agree to an equal division of time, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Benner] to control half, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] half.

Mr. Bennett of New York. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi, I will say that I had agreed with the gentleman from Alabama that he might have as much time myself with others occupied. Mr. WILLIAMS. That there shall be an equal division of time?

Mr. BENNET of New York. All within my hour.
Mr. WILLIAMS. That gives our side thirty minutes.
Mr. BENNET of New York. No; I do not want to mislead me gentleman. If there are not requests on my side for thirty the gentleman. minutes, then the other side does not get thirty minutes. If we get thirty minutes, then the other side gets thirty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That will leave it entirely within t power of the gentleman from New York to cut off all discussion by simply sitting down at the end of three or four minutes and not yielding any time to anybody else. I would ask unanimous consent that thirty minutes to a side be granted, the gentleman from New York to control thirty minutes in favor of and the gentleman from Alabama to control thirty minutes in opposition to the pending legislation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is entitled to sixty minutes. Now, the gentleman from Mississippi appeals to him to yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Alabama. That is, if the Chair understands the gentleman from Missis-

Mr. BURNETT. I understood, Mr. Speaker, that to be the arrangement, that they expected to consume one-half an hour on that side and that we should have half an hour on this side.

Mr. BENNET of New York. So far as I am concerned, I will not object to yielding thirty minutes to that side if no other Member objects.

Mr. LACEY. With the understanding that the vote will be taken at the end of the hour?

Mr. BENNET of New York. With the understanding that a vote shall be had at the end of the hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has it in his power to move the previous question at the end of the hour or at any time before that to test the sense of the House. But, of course, if he yields thirty minutes to the other side, he can not do it until the expiration of that thirty minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand, then, that the gentleman from New York yields thirty minutes to this side.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I desire first, Mr. Speaker, to make a brief statement myself. The principal points of difference, so far as they have not been discussed in the House when the bill was before the committee, have been discussed this morning on the point of order. The changes in that part of the bill which came before the House at the last session are very few. The matters in difference were the educational test, from which the Senate has receded; the form of the bill, as to which the Senate has receded; the commission section, to which the Senate has agreed with an amendment; the Littauer amendment, to which the House receded, and the so-called "head tax," which as it passed the Senate was $5 and as it passed the House $2, and on this matter there has been a compromise of $4. administrative changes, about 100 in number, meet with universal approval.

These changes were very largely the result of the work of the gentleman from Massachusetts, my colleague on the committee [Mr. GARDNER], and to him more than anyone else is due the fact that after this bill becomes a law the laws regulating immigration will be simpler, better, and more efficacious.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes; for a question.
Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The head tax as now proposed in the conference report is double that provided by existing law?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What purpose is to be subserved by doubling the head tax? Does the gentleman from New York believe that doubling the head tax will increase the quality of immigration?

Immigration?

Mr. BENNET of New York. "The gentleman from New York" prefers to state the prevailing opinion among the conferees, which was that the extra $2 would create a fund which would go toward paying the share of the immigrant immediately in our expenses. My own views differ; but the gentleman must realize that in the conference, which lasted from June, 1906, until now, neither side could get all that it wished, and while the Senate receded on most of the preventions and and while the Senate receded on most of the propositions and those of largest importance, the House conferees compromised on this.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman proposes to put a head tax on the admissible immigrant; in other words, those who are found to be desirable immigrants, those who ought to enter the United States, must pay this tax.

Mr. SHERLEY rose.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yielded to the gentleman for a nestion. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand, the Littauer amendment question.

put on the bill in the House has not been agreed to by the con-

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is correct.

Mr. SHERLEY. That was an amendment providing for the admission of aliens who were refugees on account of their religious or political opinions without regard to their ability to earn a livelihood. Is there any other provision put in the bill, as reported by the conferees, that would afford ground for admitting refugees from Russia to America without their undergoing the rigid examination that would be required as to other immigrants:

Mr. BENNET of New York. There has, and there is a provision for striking from the House bill the provisions to which my friend alludes, to which the friends of the refugees strenuously object; the other provision in section 2 of the House bill which prohibits the admission of persons of poor physique or low vitality, that language has been stricken from the bill, and also in section 26 of the bill as proposed in the conference report there is a provision admitting persons found physically defective or liable to be a public charge upon giving a bond.

Mr. SHERLEY. Those are the only provisions made to cover the case of refugees?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Absolutely.

Mr. SHERLEY. And the provisions that the House made to cover specific cases that are now arising were waived by the House conferees?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, the question, I know, is not intentionally unfair, but it is in fact unfair, because the gentleman from Kentucky does not bear in mind that under the provision of the so-called "Littauer amendment" those refugees were subject to the rigid examination of which he speaks and were only relieved from one clause, and that was that they were to be deported because of want of means or the probability of their being found to be unable to earn a livelihood.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Did not the Denby amendment cover the other case'

Mr. BENNET of New York. The Denby amendment never passed the House, having been stricken out in the House when the commission section was substituted for the educational test.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course the gentleman from Kentucky did not desire to put the gentleman from New York in a false light, but the gentleman from Kentucky still reserves right to determine what amendments mean and still thinks the provisions made are not ample to cover the case, and that the House conferees have disregarded the interests of the Rus-

Mr. BENNET of New York. There were many times, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky, when the conferees on the part of the House themselves felt like refugees in that conference committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am prepared to admit that fully.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But we think the case is covered. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for this conference report, although I am obliged to admit that I am sorry to see a situation arise in which it is impossible to get a yea-and-nay vote on the educational test. I should vote against this conference report were it not for the fact that it carries the Japanese-passport amendment; but I am not willing to take any step which, if successful, might embarrass the hands of the Administration in settling the very important problem which has arisen on the Pacific coast. Unfortunately we must accept this conference report as a whole or get no legislation. We can not amend it. Mr. Speaker, if we vote down this conference report, we do not get the Japanese-passport amendment. Moreover, many Members of this House who believe in the educational test do not agree with me in thinking that it would be wise to vote down this conference report, even if it did not contain the Japanese amendment. Many Members of the House point out to me that under this conference report the contract-labor law is very much strengthened; that the $4 head tax will be restrictive, and that the new requirements of the steamship companies in the matter of air space for each immigrant will act as a further restriction. The administrative features, which the gentleman from New York was kind enough to credit to me and which I in my turn credit to him, are certainly of value. Nevertheless, I myself should vote against this conference report if it were not for the passport amendment. I believe that the best plan to pursue, if we want the educational test, is to refuse passage to any immigration bill at all until the House is brought to a yea-andnay vote upon that question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I can not yield now. There can be but little doubt as to the attitude of this House if permitted to express its opinion on the illiteracy clause. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss the educational test. come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him. [Laughter.]. But want to warn you I am only burying him temporarily. Thi House and this country sooner or later must choose between two courses, and we must make our choice on a vote of such a nature that our constituents will know where we stand. The country must ultimately choose between two policies. The selection policy would admit every able-bodied alien of good character. We must choose between that policy and the restrictive policy which aims radically and substantially to reduce the flow of immigration, even if, in so doing many a good and honest man must be excluded.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman on the other side exhaust some of his time.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, although the point of order was made to section 42 of this conference bill, I shall not waste any time talking about that, because it is excellent legislation, and ought to have been passed a long time ago, and will do a It was merely in the wrong place. great deal of good now. ought to have been enacted by at least one House and not solely by a conference committee. I want to call the attention of the Speaker of the House, and in as far as my poor voice can carry weight the attention of the country, to the broad language contained in the second proviso of section 1, as follows:

Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

Could delegation of legislative power to the Executive be broader?

"Whenever the President is satisfied" of what? That the passport is being used "to the detriment of labor conditions" the United States. Could there be a phrase more indefinite? Full power to the President to relax or restrict? It is not the law which has to be "satisfied," but the discretion of the President dent of the United States. It is not a prescribed law wherein the American people shall be the judges of when a person comes in "in detriment to labor," but the entire responsibility is shifted by us from the shoulders of the legislative body and vested in the discretion of the President of the United States.

And I warn California and Californians now of what they ought already to know, that the President's view on how far and when and under what circumstances oriental labor may be to the labor of the United States is not their opinion upon that subject. Mr. Speaker, I regret more to-day than I have regretted for some time that there is not even one Democrat from the State of California in either of the Houses of Congress. Had there been, this craven surrender of California's representatives in Washington to White House and foreign influence would not have been unanimous. I am with Californians on the separate school question. I do not believe in mixed schools. The future welfare of the South is wrapped up in the question of separate schools and the separation of the two races there in order to maintain racial peace and to prevent the outbreak of racial hostility. We can not afford to have the police power of the State to regulate its own schools independently of the Federal Government and of foreign powers infringed or even so much as questioned. If questioned in California, the precedent is made to question it some day in Mississippi. I can not vote to lodge in the President a discretionary power to be used as a bludgeon to force a sovereign State to forego its sovereign right to maintain separate schools. I am with the Californians, Mr. Speaker, upon the subject of protection of the white labor of the United States against either African or oriental imported competition, and not upon the ground that Africans and orientals are essentially inferior to Caucasians. The former are. Whether the latter are or not is a question, perhaps. It is not that. I for one believe that the Japanese are one of the most superior races upon the surface of this In certain points of courtesy and culture they are, in my opinion, our superiors, but they are just simply different—radically different. Their coming would result in a population lacking in homogeneity. They would bring a population unassimilable in the only manner in which any assimilation can take place that leads to brotherhood and equality and liberty—the pillars of a free republic. They are so radically different that the two races will not mingle to form one race to support upon its back the responsibility of our destiny, the burdens of our peculiar civilization, the ideals, the traditions, and the future of the Republic.

I am with the Californians upon another question, and I have no hesitancy in uttering it here, however unpopular it may be in some quarters. I want the Pacific slope kept a white man's country [applause], as I want all of this land, as far as it can be, a white man's country. Not because I am a blind chauvinist, not because I think we are the only race upon the surface of the earth, but because this is our land—the land of our traditions, the land of our ideals-and I know that the influx of another and a radically different race, even though it be said, for the sake of argument, to be not only equal, but superior, means another race problem for another portion of this Republic; means racial antagonism and racial warfare after a while; entails not the strength which comes from unity, but the weakness which proceeds from discord.

This gentleman to whose judgment this matter is to be leftthe President—is one who has recommended already the naturalization of Japanese in this country. Who does not know that his discretion will be exercised on the side of relaxation and not on the side of restriction of Japanese inflow? want another section of this country cursed as the South has been cursed, with an almost insoluble race problem, and I warn you now it will be a worse one than ours, for the reason that the Japanese are a superior race to the African, and therefore can be relied upon to assert themselves in combat with you and in antagonism to you in a very much more serious manner.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up any more of the time, because it is very limited and several gentlemen on this side desire to speak. I shall ask to insert as a part of my remarks certain portions of a memorial of the California State Federation of Labor to the Congress of the United States, as follows:

Resolved by the California State Federation of Labor, That the views expressed by President Roosevelt concerning our attitude toward the Japanese indicate misinformation or misconstruction of the facts; that his threat to "deal summarily" with us is therefore entirely uncalled for, and his request for an enlargement of his powers quite unnecessary; further

Resolved, That the action of the San Francisco board of education, in providing separate schoolhouses for Caucasian and Mongolian pupils, which action is authorized and, in fact, required by the State constitution, is indorsed and supported by the practically unanimous sentiment of the State, and can not by any reasonable process of construction be regarded, either in intent or in effect, as "shutting them (the Japanese) out from the common schools," and is therefore not open to the terms of expletive which the President has applied to it; further Resolved, That we insist upon, and shall to the limit of our power maintain, our right, under the Constitution of the United States and the constitution of California, and as a matter of practical necessity to the moral and mental well-being of our people, to segregate the pupils in the common schools in such manner as reason and experience shall dictate, and to adopt and enforce such other regulations as may be deemed wise and expedient in the conduct of our educational and other State or municipal affairs; further

Resolved. That we are opposed to the President's recommendations that an act be passed specifically providing for the naturalization of Japanese, and that the powers of the Federal Government be enlarged for the purpose of subverting the proper authority of this and other States; further

Resolved. That the powers vested in the Federal Government by the respective States are designed for use in protecting the latter in the exercise of their reserved rights and functions; consequently any attempt or threat to use these powers to prevent or obstruct the freest possible exercise of these rights and functions must be regarded as an act of usurpation, menacing the freedom of the American people, endangering the stability of American institutions, and demanding the strongest possible protest on the part of every patriotic citizen.

We are opposed to enlarging the power of the Federal Gov-

We are opposed to enlarging the power of the Federal Government for the purpose of subverting the power of their State the whole Federal Government. How much more, then, to vesting discretionary power in one branch of it—the executive?

Now, Mr. Speaker, one word and I am done. The right way to keep a homogeneous white population is by fixed prescription of law or treaty and not to leave it to the doubtful issue of Executive discretion. There is much said about race prejudice. Every race has its prejudices in favor of itself and against other races, but all history teaches this, that every race feeling, be it an instinct or a prejudice, or, as I hold, a conclusion arrived at or after knowledge is essential to national progress, greatness, and happiness. No country whose institutions rest upon equality and fraternity and liberty, as all democratic institutions do, can have an assured future without a homogeneous population, made homogeneous and kept so by assimilating each part to every other part by voluntary union in lawful wedlock based upon the recognition on both sides of absolute equality. Every great woe and check to progress that this country has suffered is dated from the landing of the first slave ship at Jamestown. The very Iliad of all our wees was that. Had we had sense enough to do with regard to the negro race early in the history of the country what I would have you do with every other unassimilated race now and hereafter we would never have had war and its ensuing destruction of property and morals and happiness. We would never have parties based on sectionalism alone; we never would have had the fair proportions of our democratic temple marred by things that were necessary to preserve civilization itself. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that my opin-lons on this matter are of importance or that they will have any effect, but I shall venture to express them.

There are several reasons why I am opposed to this bill reported by the conference committee. In the time allowed I can not even try to state them all.

One is, sir, because of the absence of an educational qualification. I am in favor of that, and I believe, from my experiences here, that the best method of securing that is to have no legislation on the subject-matter until that is included. The section from which I come, I know, sir, stands in need of laborers, but we are particular about the class. A tax is now laid upon the substance of the white people of my State for the education of another race. It is one of the burdens we have to bear, but I do not want to add to the burden by swelling the illiterate class. It is not sufficiently important.

If the present generation does not succeed in developing all of our resources, if we do not get all that is to be gotten, we in my section shall not complain, because we know our children or our children's children may derive happiness by tapping the fertilities of that goodly land which we leave untapped.

Again, sir, the vital feature of the conference bill is based on a question of labor. No satisfactory solution of the immigration question will be had except upon a basis of race. We must have immigrants from a race with which we can coalesce. Unless we can assimilate the immigrants that come to us they will not strengthen, but will weaken.

In the third place, sir, I oppose the bill because of my opposition to the delegation of legislative power to the executive. This question is essentially a legislative matter, one that neither in law nor in fact should be delegated to another branch of the Government. Ah, amid the confusion I caught a suggestion of the Speaker when he was ruling on the point of order to the effect, as I understand it, that this was a contest between the friends and opponents of labor.

So far as I am concerned, sir, I am willing, as one Member of this House, to retain here, where it belongs, full power to legislate on questions affecting labor and to assume responsibility for such action as I take. This side of the Chamber can well afford to do this in the light of the open record. I have a faint suspicion, sir, that labor would prefer to see this side of the Chamber legislate on their matters rather than to see authority delegated to the present President of the United States. the confusion, while the Chair was ruling on the point of order, I thought I understood him to suggest that all he could see in the contest was a fight between the friends and opponents of labor. I may have misunderstood the Chair, but I so caught the suggestion. In the light of the Speaker's well-known record that was interesting. Has Moses looked upon the burning bush? Ah, Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that in matters affecting labor here the preponderance of noise at talking time is on your side of the Chamber; at voting time it is on this side. When I recall the record of the Speaker and his party on labor questions and measure it by the utterances he used in ruling on the point of order, I am driven to think of Moore's familiar lines. Slightly paraphrased they can be well quoted by labor's friends. I suggest this version:

The harp that now through Congress Halls Doth labor music shed Then hung as silent on these walls As though that soul were fled.

[Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. One more reason, Mr. Speaker, and I am done. The vital feature of this bill, the conspicuous feature of it, was placed there because of the situation as regards California and the admission of Japanese to her schools along with the children of her own citizens. The big stick has been al-ready wielded by the President in behalf of Japan and against California. I love California, too well to vote to place this power, which may be wielded internally or externally, for peace or for war, by an Executive who has already on the vital question, before all the world, sided with the foreign nation and against that part of his own country affected; sided with the Japanese against his own countrymen. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN].

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, just a word or two on the bill the immigration of aliens now before the House to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States.

In the main, it is a good, wholesome measure. However, I am opposed to the increase of the head tax from $2 to $4 on each and every alien entering the United States.

It will work a serious hardship on the poor man with a family.

For instance, in my frequent visits to Ellis Island I have observed that the average family of the alien is from five to eight, including his wife and himself, which means a tax, over and above the transportation, of from $20 to $32, a very heavy burden, indeed.

Again, my observation has been that the man, with his family with him, comes to stay and to make this his home. His children enter our schools and become good, law-abiding citizens and add to the wealth and prosperity of the nation.

This head tax is not needed, as there are now several millions in the immigration fund, which is growing rapidly, and therefore is intended as a restrictive measure. In my judgment it is unnecessary and unwarranted, and an injustice to a deserving and a desirable class of immigrants.

In the second place, I do not like the following sentence in section 1 of the proposed bill:

Provided further. That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States, to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

Whill I have overy confidence in the President of the United

While I have every confidence in the President of the United States, whoever the occupant of that exalted position may be, vet I doubt the wisdom of extending the powers of the Chief Executive.

There is a tendency of late to add to the authority and scope of the administrative branch of the Government. Under the Constitution of the United States the three coordinate branches of the Government are equal, and any effort to injure any of these, or to exalt one at the expense of the others, is fraught with a danger to our free institutions.

Feeling that this is an encroachment on the prerogatives of the legislative branch of the Government in this bill, I am opposed to it as a matter of principle.

Section 2 contains the following, which, in my opinion, is likely to be abused:

And are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living.

The amendment to the Senate bill which was in the last session of Congress passed by this House, to exempt the unfortunate political and religious refugees fleeing from persecution, known as the "Littauer amendment," has been eliminated by the conferees. The reasons and the necessity for such exemption were well explained at the time this amendment was adopted by my colleagues from New York [Mr. LITTAUER and Mr. Goldfogle]. It seems to me that under existing conditions, when persecution still obtains in Russia and some other counwe ought not to drop what, as a matter of common humanity and justice, we during the last year deemed a wise provision. Under the rules of this House no such amendment can be offered to a conference report. Hence there is no opportunity to have the amendment in favor of these unfortunately persecuted people reinserted now.

Entertaining these views, I feel constrained, however good some of the provisions of the bill may be, to vote against the report, so that, if possible, the bill may be sent back to conference for further and more considerate action. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burgess].

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to admit that there are many wise provisions in this bill, but I regard the last proviso to section 1 as so pernicious, as so violative of all the fundamental principles upon which immigration laws should proceed, that I can not for a moment give my support to this conference report. It reads as follows:

Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports Issued by any foreign government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of embling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

Now let us look at this provision fairly. Let us see how we are drifting. Let us consider who we represent, who we speak for here, what our powers are, what our capacity is, and above all what our courage is. Let us see if this section does not involve a surrender on the part of the California Representatives on this floor, seconded by a surrender of all other representation upon this floor, upon a great question that involves our very civilization. Why should the power be delegated to the President of the United States or any President, now or hereafter, to determine who shall be admitted in our land?

Upon what principle can such delegation of power proceed?

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute? There is nothing in this section that relates to citizens of our land.

Mr. BURGESS. No, sir; but how can a man become a citizen of this country unless he is permitted to immigrate here, and immigration involves all the fundamentals necessarily that pertain to the question of citizenship, and when you abandon those fundamentals upon the question of immigration you abandon the whole subject of American citizenship.

But the naturalization laws of this country specifically prohibit an Asiatic from becoming a citizen of the United States, and therefore the question of citizenship is not involved in this question at all. Mr. BURGESS. That is only temporarily true.

Mr. KAHN. Perhaps this section may be only temporarily intended

Mr. BURGESS. Perhaps the gentleman from California knows. I welcome him as the first voice from California in either end of this House that has broken the solemn stillness on this great question which involves that State. [Applause.] Let them speak out, every one of them, and say whether they are in favor of this sort of legislation upon this question. There are three fundamental reasons upon which I can not support such legislation as this. The first is that we delegate to the President the powers which Congress possesses and ought to have the conscience and courage to exercise. We ought to deal directly with these questions ourselves and speak for the people we represent here, and not delegate the power to some other authority now and hereafter whose opinion and decision we can not know in advance.

Second, not only do we delegate that power to the President, but, what is worse, we fix in this bill the ground upon which he may exercise that discretion, and we do not make it racial, we do not make it anything else but a mere question of labor competition; and I want to serve notice on you Californians we vote with you upon the exclusion of the Chinese and we are ready to vote with you upon the exclusion of the Japanese, but not upon the question of labor competition. We do not belong to the labor organizations yet in Texas, or elsewhere, I hope, in this country; but we vote with you because we are not willing that any race shall be admitted here with whom we are not willing to intermarry and who will not become real progressive equal citizens under our free institutions. [Applause.] The Democratic party is a real friend to labor, organized or unorganized, but it can not, and ought not, become the legislative partial servant of any class of citizens, whether organized or not. Selfishness is common to all classes, and organization does not lessen it. On all questions "equal rights to all and special privileges to none" must control its action.

If the exclusion of a race or an individual, or any number of individuals, upon proper and just grounds has the effect to lessen labor competition and to benefit any class of tollers, no one should object, and for my part I frankly confess that I welcome the I believe in labor organizations, I believe in treating them in legislation fairly, but I do not believe in class legislation, whether for organized labor or organized capital, nominion labor, or any other class of citizens, organized into unions, associations, or what not, or unorganized classes of citizens. I do not believe that legislation excluding either a race, a class, cr an individual ought to proceed upon the interest of any particular class of American citizens. It seems perfectly clear to my mind that such fundamental position would result, if consistently followed, in the exclusion of all desirable as well as undesirable immigrants. To illustrate: Suppose the farmers' unions of Texas and other cotton-growing States, comprising, in my judgment, as patriotic and splendid a class of citizenship as the Republic possesses, should say that they desired the exclusion of all agricultural labor because their admission here would produce a disastrous competition with them in the production of cetton; that the admission of the German, the Bohemian, the Swede, the Italian, and the various other elements who engage in the raising of cotton would increase the product, decrease the price, lower wages, and injure these existing farmers' unions. Ought we to listen to that sort of a cry? So with every other class engaged in any pursuit in this country—the admission of most desirable immigration, pursuing the same pursuits, must result in labor competition.

To a Democrat the tariff affords a fine illustration of this position. We say we are for a tariff for revenue; we say that the protective theory is wrong, and yet we say that the levy of any tariff necessarily carries with it the incidental class benefit in a proportionate protection to the producer or manufacturer of the article taxed, and doubtless if that effect is produced upon our constituents we welcome the fact, but we all unite in proclaiming the sincere belief that it will not do to take this incidental class benefit and make it the basis of the levy and operation of the tariff taxation system prescribed by the Constitution, so we must say that we could not advocate upon the great immigration question a class benefit as the basis of the proper procedure, however much, here and there as individuals, we may welcome the effect produced by the proper exclusion upon the laborers or others of our sections.

At the last session of Congress, in a very brief speech in opposition to the drastic educational test, I had the occasion to express my views on the fundamental principles upon which immigration laws should proceed. I briefly summarize now those views: First, Mr. Speaker, the basic and controlling principle, most far-reaching in its scope upon the future of this Republic, in my judgment, is that no race ought to be permitted to immigrate here unless it is one with which we are willing to intermarry and unless it is of a blood worthy to blend with ours in the veins of a common posterity. I think that this great question is too much lost sight of in the selfishness of local interests and local politics, and that we are entirely too prone to think of our pockets and our profits rather than of our civilization and our posterity. Second, assuming that the immigrant comes of such a race, then it becomes a question of individual fitness, and these questions naturally suggest themselves to the American who wishes to preserve orderly and decent society: Is the immigrant honest; does he come under the tongue of good report; does he possess the essential element, individually, of a future valuable citizenship, namely, character, which now and in the future, as ever in the past, is a far more important factor in seciety than wealth, rank, capacity, or anything else? Next, is he industrious; is he willing to work; does he seek in good faith employment? Next, is he a believer in free government; is he devoted to orderly organized government? This idea has been universally recognized because of the universal opposition to the admission of anarchists as immigrants. Next, and last, in my judgment, is he mentally and physically sound, so that he will not be a charge upon us or a peril to us?

If all these questions can be answered affirmatively, my opinion is well settled the immigrant should be allowed to come, and not only that, in a comparatively reasonable length of time should be clothed with the rights of citizenship; for, in my judgment, if these things are true of the immigrant, it is as certain as that day follows the night that he will become an American citizen whose posterity will be a blessing to this Re-This, of course, I recognize, excludes the idea of an educational test, and I recognize that many of the wisest and best men believe in an educational test, but, Mr. Speaker, I am unable to subscribe to that view. I do not believe that in any age of the world in the past it has been true, or that in any age of the world in the future it will be true, that character, that virtue, that honor, that industry, that economy, that friendship, that religion, that devotion to law and order--in a word, that all that makes up what makes a real man, honored of men and loved of God, can be measured by education. I believe these attributes have ever been found in men and women whose opportunities were such that they had never learned to read Holy Writ and yet had squared their lives by the precepts of Jesus of Nazareth.

The third objection to this proviso emphasizes both the others and expands into other wide fields. I have said that it was legislative cowardice for us to confer this power on the President. I have said that the limitation put upon the exercise of the power in grounding it upon labor competition antagonized whole theory upon which immigration should proceed. But, Mr. Speaker, the third objection is that both these things make it possible for the President, if he should so elect, to coerce a sovereign State and force it into a trade by which it would surrender its own police powers in consideration of class benefits. Mr. Speaker, such a position constitutes a national No matter how great and good a President may be, no matter how sincere his action may be, no matter what desirable consideration of international policy may impel him to such course, the fact will remain that taking a power which ought not to be granted him, exercising a discretion upon radically erroneous ground, these two errors are combined and used as a weapon of expanding Presidential power and contracting the rights of the sovereign State. If all the great cry we have heard coming from California is true, what a miserable deal this provision, put into practical effect, reveals. Were the Californians sincere when the contention went over the country from them that the Japanese were not fit to mingle in the common schools with their children? Did they really contemplate the effect upon social order, upon the character and future of their children, or was it a great false cry in order to make life for the competitive Japanese so intolerable as that he would leave California?

Mark Twain once wrote a very able article in which he attempted to demonstrate that the religious persecution, so called, of the Jew in history was a great subterfuge, a false cry, a weapon of passion and prejudice used to produce an effect, the real cause of which was the commercial superiority of the Jew as a competitor in commercial pursuits. Was this cry of the Californians a mere subterfuge, a mere scheme prompted by the desire to persecute the Jap, unjustly at that, so as to force him into exodus? If so, it is a sad situation, and if this is not true, then they are willing to trade off the character of their posterity, to threaten and imperil their civilization, in order to increase the profits of a class of their citizenship.

God help them in either event!

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish to say I have spoken not a word in malice toward anybody, and I have tried to express in as terse, plain English as I am capable of what I conceive to be the rottenness of this sort of legislation, and in my feeble way attempt along this line, as I shall continually attempt to do along all lines, to call a halt upon the fearful tendency to drift rapidy into despotism in this country. It is not material what the form of despotism is; it is immaterial what the name of the person is who exercises undue power; the substance will be the same. It is immaterial whether this Republic becomes a despotism in name or not if it becomes a despotism in fact.

Thoughtful, patriotic men of all shades of political thought in this country are recognizing more and more clearly the threatening and fatal tendency toward centralized Federal power and are speaking out in clear and determined tones their views as to the necessity of adherence to the fundamental divisions of power conceived and contended for by the early great and good men of this Republic. It is true that from the beginning of our history extremists on the one side have sought in every possible way to lessen the powers of the Federal Government, and, on the other hand, to lessen the powers of the respective States. I trust, however, that it is true that the great body of the people will recognize and insist upon the true middle course, in accord with the Constitution of the United States and the great lines of thought fixing the boundaries of power between the Federal and State governments, long ago pretty well defined. Some old thinker, whose name I do not recall, long ago tersely expressed a profound thought when he said: "It is not so much the distance as it is the direction that counts." The whole theory of jurisprudence, the very evolution of civilization recognizes the value of precedent, the power and the danger of tendency. If we go on and on, first on one question, then on another and another, expanding Presidential and Federal powers, encroaching upon and lessening the responsibilities and the powers of the State governments, gradually the people will less and less exert their will, and they will less and less give attention and thought necessary to the exercise of their will, and hence more and more we shall drift into a servile acquiescence in the will of a dictator; and this tendency will finally convert this real Republic into a despotism in fact under the guise of a republic in name. Nothing will prevent this except the continued earnest, determined opposition of the representatives of the people against such tendency on all lines. it is being gravely proposed that the control of all interstate business shall, upon one pretext or another, be exercised by the Federal Government.

The pretext of the commerce clause of the Constitution, of the taxation powers of the Federal Government, of the post-office powers, of the military powers are some of the various grounds upon which we are asked to proceed to thrust the Federal power into the States and say who the factory shall employ, how long their employees shall contract to labor, upon what terms insurance companies shall conduct their business, under what conditions corporations—the creatures of the States, and subject alone under our theory of government in their local operations to the will of the State in which they are operated—shall conduct their business. If upon any such subterfuge we are to go, what may be now laughed at as a dream of despotic power will become an awful reality, destructive of representative, constitutional, republican government representative, constitutional, republican government.

I invite the fhoughtful consideration of my colleagues in this House and all patriots in the country everywhere to an address delivered by a distinguished Member of this House, Hon. Samuel W. McCall, of Massachusetts, before the Republican Club in New York City, February 12, 1907, and I would indorse his thoughtful appeal to the Republican party in the closing words of that address to the consideration of all parties and all patriots when he says:

But I trust the Republican party will make it its first duty to resist the coming of that day, and while always ready to exercise when necessary any national power in its full vigor, that it will safeguard the autonomy of the States, so that those who dwell in America hereafter may continue to enjoy that rounded and symmetrical system of free government preserved and handed down to us under that greatest of Republican statesmen, whose career we to-day commemorate, and to that end, too, that in the words of the lummortal message from Gettysburg "government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Mr. BURNETT will the gentleman from New York pow

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman from New York now use some of his time?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Burnett] has twelve minutes and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bennet] has nineteen minutes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, in order to allow a member of the California delegation to "break the solemn stillness," to use the expression of my colleague on the committee [Mr. Burnett], I now yield eight minutes to my colleague on the committee from California [Mr. Hayes].

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those Members of this House who are not entirely satisfied with the bill now before us. I do not think it entirely meets the situation. And yet I recognize, as my colleagues on the committee pointed out, that it contains many necessary provisions, provisions relating to the administrations of the immigration laws which are imperatively demanded and which have been repeatedly asked for by the officials of the United States Government charged with the administration of these laws. Therefore, it is my purpose to vote for this bill, or rather for the report of the conference committee.

Among other provisions which I regard as very important provided for by this bill are amendments to the contract-labor laws. For years the immigration officials of the United States have not been able to enforce those laws, and I believe that the provisions inserted in this bill, formulated by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of this House, of which I have the honor to be a member, will make such changes in the law as will enable the immigration officers to administer these laws and carry into effect the purposes that Congress had in view when it enacted them.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. BURNETT. I notice the statement in the press of the country that the mayor and school board of San Francisco, in order to secure legislation on this subject, had capitulated on the subject of the admission of Japanese to the schools there. I should like to ask the gentleman if the California delegation in this House was a party to that, and what they think of that proposition.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Alabama I would say that I can not state what the mayor and the school board of San Francisco have agreed to. Neither myself nor any other member of the California delegation was a party to the conferences which have been held by the local anthorities of San Francisco with the President of the United States, and therefore we are not entitled to any of the credit which should go to them for their patriotic efforts to remove the causes of friction between this country and the Government of Japan by doing what they have concluded to do.

But I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I be-lieve that when whatever is agreed upon becomes a public matter the gentleman and all others interested will see that the city of San Francisco has not sacrificed any of its rights of self-government. It has not agreed even tacitly that the Government of the United States may by treaty dictate to an American city how its public schools shall be run.

The gentleman from Alabama can not go further than I will go in upholding the proposition that the right of every local community to conduct its own affairs in accordance with what it conceives to be its highest interest should be upheld, and that the right of self-government should not be surrendered to nor usurped by the Government of the United States.

The principal part of this report, or the most interesting part to me as a Representative of California, is the last proviso of section 1; and it is interesting because, as we interpret it, it gives the President of the United States the authority to put an end to at least two-thirds of the immigration troubles from which we are suffering on the Pacific coast. I sympathize with nearly all that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Williams] said a few moments ago in his remarks. The people of Cali-fornia are practically a unit in their desire to prevent the immigration of any Japanese or Chinese or other Asiatic coolies or laborers to their State. They will go as far as the gentleman from Mississippi to prevent that, and will not cease their efforts until a permanent exclusion act is passed by Congress. pect this proviso in behalf of the State of California to reach only the present emergency, and I believe when the citizens of California come to understand this that they will gratefully accept it as a temporary expedient which, as I said before, will cure a large part of their difficulties; and I have every reason to believe that in the near future a permanent and satisfactory provision will be put into effect that will remove all of the troubles arising from this sort of immigration. Therefore we who represent California on this floor have agreed that we will support this report, including the provision referred to. Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. There is a proviso here that the President of the United States shall have the discretion to exclude the Japanese whenever, in his opinion, labor conditions require it. Now, does the gentleman know what the opinion of the President of the United States is with reference to the labor conditions in California at this time? The gentleman, as I understand, says he is willing to accept this bill. Is it not a fact that the President recently characterized the conduct of the citizenship of San Francisco as "wickedly absurd" and "most unat the time they excluded the Japanese and Mongolians from their schools, and I ask the gentleman now if he has any knowledge that the President of the United States has changed his opinion? Will be give aid to these most unworthy people who entertain wickedly absurd opinions when they come before him to impress upon him the condition of the labor people and ask him to take action?

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is through, I will say in reply that if he desires to know what the opinions of the President of the United States are upon this matter and whether they have undergone any change, let him go to head-quarters and find out for himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. I know from his message what his opin-ion was concerning the Californians. He did characterize the conduct of San Francisco citizenship as unworthy and wickedly What I want to know is, what change has been brought about in his opinions?

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman asked whether the opinions of the President had undergone any change. One of the best things about the present occupant of the White House is that he is brave enough to change his mind. I desire to say that so far as I am concerned, as a Representative of the people of California, I believe that the ultimate result will justify the California Members of this House in agreeing to this provision. The people of California are willing to trust to the patriotism and sense of justice of the President of the United States to protect them from the immigration of the Asiatic and to secure them in the enjoyment of their rights as citizens of the United [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCall].

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, the part of this report which it is difficult for me to accept is that which confers on the President of the United States what I think is a high legislative discretion. If we can confer upon the President the power to say that people with passports shall not be admitted, we can confer upon him the power to say that people without passports shall not be admitted; and if we can give him the power to say that they shall not be admitted when, in his judgment, it will be to the detriment of American labor, we can say more broadly that he shall have that authority when, in his judgment, it might be for the detriment of the country

We could precisely as constitutionally endow the President with authority, whenever in his discretion he thought that there were too many immigrants coming to the United States, to stop it altogether as to give him the power we confer upon him by this proviso. Now, I do not believe in the abdication of the legislative power. I do not believe in throwing ourselves upon the guardianship of the Supreme Court. I believe the place for us to assert our prerogatives is right here upon the floor of the House of Repesentatives and of the Senate. [Applause.] And while I should very much like, Mr. Speaker, to vote for other features of this report, I am unable to see my way clear to accept the principle that is involved in that proviso, and I shall therefore vote against it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. I shall ask the gentleman from Alabama to use some of his time.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Gudger].

Mr. GUDGER. Mr. Speaker, in the short space which has been allotted to me I can only express briefly two or three thoughts that occur to me in connection with this great question. In my judgment the bill as reported by the conferees is more restrictive in some respects than the present law, and therefore I shall vote for it, although I am not in accord with some of its features. It falls far short of what is expected and demanded of this Congress by the people. They have asked for bread and you are giving them a stone. Relief has been promised them, but that promise has been broken. They have trusted you, but that trust has been violated. I am unalterably opposed to the importation of this foreign pauper element into our country. will not only result in disturbing labor conditions, but, if unchecked, it will ultimately wreck and ruin our American social system. Sooner or later the country must choose between two causes. One of two policies must be adopted. must have either a selective or an absolute restrictive policy. At present we are attempting both, but, I regret to say, enforcing neither.

If this foreign population continues to be admitted as at present, we shall cease to have a homogeneous class, created and maintained by assimilation through voluntary union in lawful wedlock, based upon and sustained by absolute equality. Such will be the inevitable result if this foreign element continues to pour in upon us from all quarters of the globe. Therefore this influx of undesirable immigrants is a hindrance to our progress and a menace to our peace and happiness. At the present ratio of increase the reports of the next fiscal year will show that a million and a half of foreigners have landed on our shores during that period; and in twenty years from now the number will have increased to 10,000,000 annually. It is not unreasonable to predict that holding the balance of power in the nation, and controlling absolutely some sections of it, they will demand and secure such laws as they may desire. Thus the control of America will have passed from the hands of Americans. It is within our power to act now, and I hope that an organization will be formed in this country to force the enactment of a re -an organization so powerful that it will be able to crush political factions and men standing in the way of such beneficial and protective measures.

It is true that in some sections of the country there is a demand for more labor-the right kind of labor-but in the South a smaller acreage of cotton is urged for the purpose of sustaining the price of that staple. This is not consistent with the contention that more labor is needed here. Would it not be wiser to be content with the labor now at our command? Let us have a care lest we sow to the wind and reap the whirlwind.

What the people of the whole country desire and demand is legislation that will restrict immigration in a substantial way, but this bill does not do that. If amendments were permitted, I should like to offer several, but we are denied that right under the rule. Mr. Speaker, the tyrannical control of this House by a few men, as a result of which the people are denied the right to vote, through their Representatives, for the kind of legislation they want, and in which they are vitally interested, will be Legislation for the trusts and for millionaires, like the ship subsidy, which proposes to give away the people's money, is given the right of way, while the laboring man, the real wealth producer, is denied a hearing on the eight-hour law and other measures for his protection. The right to legislate is fast passing out of the power of the people. We are falling into dangerous hands, and unless the country can be aroused to the seriousness of the situation, our liberties will soon be in ieopardy. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, the dangerous proposition which I think is involved in this conference report is couched in the proviso at the end of section 1. Section 42, requiring the steamships to furnish greater air space, is good legislation. It is well known that I believe in the restriction of immigration, and I think one of the effects of that section will be to restrict it to a very great extent. But amid all the good phases of the report, Mr. Speaker, there is one which I think is so obnoxious to any man who does not believe in investing the President with the autocratic powers embraced in the proviso that it ought to be defeated. Any man who believes in the right of local self-government and in the autonomy of the States, notwithstanding all the good features of this report, is in duty bound, as I see it, to vote against the report. The big stick which it permits the President to hold over the States may sometime be wielded to the overthrow of the most sacred institutions of the South. constant trenching on the reserved rights of the States is becoming more dangerous with every Republican Administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the question of immigration; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gardner] and myself toiled in season and out of season, as did our colleagues on the committee who agreed with us, in the framing of a bill which would be restrictive and would keep out the very people we desired to restrict, and I believe the educational test that we framed was the proper way to reach it. We thought for a while, Mr. Speaker, that we had the concurrence of the President, because he had sent in a message some years ago, as said by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], in which he advised that very test, but when it came to a "show down" the President was not to be seen, and his hand was not to be felt here, but the hands of other estimable gentlemen on this floor were felt in the defeat of that wise part of this legisla-Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen from the South believe that our section of country favors unrestricted immigration, I have but to refer them to a great address made by Mr. Harvey Jordan, president of the Southern Cotton Association, a few weeks ago in Birmingham, in which he shows that the southern farmer does not want the pauper labor of Europe to come there and raise cotton and other products of our country to bear down the prices of what we produce. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to incorporate in my remarks that portion of the address of Not only that, but the governor of Alabama, in his inaugural address and in a message that he sent to the legislature that is now in session, emphasizes the same proposition. We have, Mr. Speaker, in the South one race question. We have felt some of the effects of pauper labor in portions of our Union, and not only do the members of the labor unions, for whom I have the greatest respect, desire a restriction, but the agriculturists of my country, the small farmers of Alabama, and of the South, are agreed on a restrictive policy.

Last June, when we had the question of the educational test up for discussion in this House, I submitted some remarks in support of that policy. This speech I circulated among my people, and during the summer as I mingled with them all over the district hundreds did me the honor of expressing their approval of my views, and not a single one expressed a word of dissent or criticism. In my home county are a few hundred members of labor unions, and they gave me their unqualified approval. Mr. Speaker, they were no more emphatic in their indorsement than were the farmers and business men. My people have heard of the conditions being brought about by the congestion of illiterate pauper immigrants in the great cities of the East, and they do not want the time to come when this horde will swoop down upon our Southland like the locusts that plagued the Egyptians. I am no extremist, Mr. Speaker, on this subject. I have always said that my people would welcome with a warm southern welcome those from any land and any clime who come to help build up the waste places of my country, and who desire to lend their aid to the moral, mental, and material uplifting of our Southland. But, gentlemen, we have suffered enough already from one race question, and now will we fly to a conflict with another? My colleagues from the South, God knows we have illiterates enough of our own, both black and white, withour scouring the slums of Europe and Asia for more. [Loud applause.] I can not better express my views on this subject than by quoting an extract from the Farmers' Union Guide, of Pell City, in my district. It is the splendid organ of that magnificent organization in that part of Alabama. It is as follows:

anificent organization in that part of Alabama. It is as follows:

A natural migration of people from one country to another has always been successful and in its effect beneficial to both the nations of the new territory and the immigrants.

We can not say as much for the artificial stimulus of the migratory spirit of to-day. We believe it is pernicious in its tendency, and ultimately the degeneracy of the native population resulting from it will be manifest. It is manifest in American politics to-day, especially in the North and West.

The farmers and the laborers of Alabama should awake to the purpose hidden beneath all such schemes. The honest, industrious, and intelligent immigrant is invited to come, and that is enough. The other kind are coming too fast to be assimilated to our American ideas without hurt to our citizenship.

The quotation from the address of Harvey Jordan, referred to before, is along the same line and is as follows:

The quotation from the address of Harvey Jordan, referred to before, is along the same line and is as follows:

The labor problem of the South is attracting the serious attention, at the present time, of our State legislatures, organized commercial and industrial bodies, and railroad corporations. The question of immigration to the South, if attempted on a large scale, should command the most serious and thoughtful attention of every man who loves the South and wishes to safeguard our country to the future ownership and protection of our present Anglo-Saxon race. If southern cotton mills, industrial enterprises, and railway interests require additional expert labor, let them import this labor from tnose sections of Europe that will fill the demand and at the same time give an addition to our population that will not jeopardize the future rights and privileges of American labor, and which will at all times respect the religions, laws, and traditions of the South. The demand from some quarters (especially emanating from foreign spinning centers) for the wholesale importation of foreign immigrants on southern farms for the supreme purpose of largely increasing the present supply of American cotton, is a matter which can not longer be looked upon with indifference by southern farmers. If additional labor is required upon southern farms, let the landlords of those farms say from what countries and what classes and numbers shall provide the demands to meet the situation. I am unalterably opposed to the passage of any immigration law which is not bound by every restriction that will protect the people of the South from the importation of pauper labor, and which does not restrict the right of immigrant entry to the best and highest type of people from the countries of Northern Europe. If we must begin the assimilation of the pure-blooded Anglo-Saxon of the South with foreigners, let those foreigners come from those countries which first made the Anglo-Saxon the type of the present day. If the time ever comes when the s

Governor Comer, of Alabama, in his inaugural address a few weeks ago, in discussing the enactment of laws to encourage immigration, said:

immigration, said:

What law we make certainly we should make it so restrictive as to make those who come fit associates for our own yellow-haired, blue-eyed people. Alabama is just emerging from the impoverishing condition of low-price labor, and for the first time we are approaching the standard of price paid by Northern States, and it would be a calamity to throw an underlying quicksand foundation of this lowest class of labor from the congested districts of the Mediterranean shore. Make the conditions in our own State so fructifying that our own people will stop emigrating, and give the natural inflow and increase that will come from improved conditions a chance, and this will largely rectify the proper demand for labor. Some 400,000 of our own people have emigrated. It will be a calamity to put in competition with and push out those who are here, substituting a mass of this low-price stuff which this bill proposes to introduce. Five-eighths of the labor of this State is white; five-eighths of the cotton crop is made by white labor. The first effect of this flood of cheap labor would be a vital blow to the white labor in our midst, this white labor which reaches from our northern to our southern boundaries, whether engaged in production or manufacture. manufacture Immigrants, yes, we want them; but we do not want immigrants for the purpose of reducing the price of labor. We want them for citizen-

In this statement the governor was correct. Our people do want immigrants, but they do not want those who will sap the foundations of our own prosperity and send their gains to build up their own impoverished land. We want those who are fit associates for white freemen and not those who prefer to consort with American negroes.

We want those who may at least learn to respect the American flag and not those who look upon it as an emblem of oppres-We want those who can be taught the gospel of freedom and the tenets of the Golden Rule, and not those who from their infancy have been taught the law of the hidden stiletto and the religion of the assassin's knife. [Loud applause.] Let us have those who can learn that in America freedom does not mean anarchy and liberty does not mean an unbridled license to crime.

The South is prospering as it never prospered before, and Not those who have fought starvation amid the who did it? scenes of filth and squalor in the congested cities of the Mediterranean, but those through whose veins the warm red blood of the Caucasian flows in quickening currents. There are portions of my district where lands are bringing from $20 to $40 per acre which sold for $3 to $5 ten years ago. Who brought about this transformation? Not the Bohemian and the Hun, but Caucasians, who with their true wives and their children have ever been the pioneers of civilization and the advance guard of Christianity.

Mr. Speaker, I ask to here insert an extract from a recent issue of the Manufacturers' Record in regard to the marvelous growth of the South:

[Manufacturers' Record.]

A FORECAST OF THE SOUTH'S WONDERFUL FUTURE.

During 1906 the wealth of the South increased $7,300,000 for every day of the year, Sundays included, or a total of $2,600,000,000. The actual increase in assessed value was $1,076,479,788; and this was, on the average, 40 per cent of the true value. The amazing magnitude of this gain of $7,300,000 a day is strikingly shown by the statement of the London Express, which, bemoaning the inability of Great Britain to keep pace with America's growth, put the increase in Great Britain's wealth at $7,000,000 a week.

Contrast the South's increase of $7,300,000 a day with Great Britain's $7,000,000 a week, and then think of the future.

Given a few more years of this rapid advance by the South and it will begin to pile up a vast accumulation of capital, whereas now its business is increasing so rapidly that it requires all of its earnings for active business operations. Surely the vision is one to stir every Southern heart, for it is, indeed, a reality.

The growth in wealth during the coming years will far exceed the wonderful story of 1906.

Along educational lines the progress of Alabama has also been Along educational lines the progress of Alabama has also been wonderful. Our State is beginning to do something like a moiety of justice to the common schools, our people are themselves awakening more than ever to the necessity of educating their sons and daughters, and mental, moral, and material seen on every hand. All this has been done without growth are the aid of illiterates from the slums of Europe and Asia.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with my people prosperous and happy, with the future roseate with the brightest hues of hope, I can not lend my vote or my voice to the effort of cold commercialism to subvert the happiness of my people by throwing another dark cloud of racial conflict across the pathway of themselves or of their [Loud applause.] posterity.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Alabama yields the remainder of his time to his colleague from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How many minutes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the restriction of immigration coming into this country. I am opposed to the Asiatic immigration coming in here; I am opposed to the European immigration coming into this country that is not homogeneous with our home people and that we can not assimilate. I do not believe that you can accomplish this result by any makeshifts. I believe that to attempt to do so is only temporizing, and no result will be accomplished. I believe there are but two ways in which this question can be reached and entirely solved, and that is to pass a prohibitive law against the Asiatic coolies coming into this country at all, and so far as the European nations are concerned I believe that the wise position to take with reference to this matter is to adopt an educational test that will largely eliminate the races from Mediterranean Europe, and will not interfere to any material extent with the races of northern Europe coming in here-races of whom we can make good citizens.

Now, that was the proposition that came before this House. That was the proposition that the Senate of the United States presented to the country, and that was the proposition that the Committee on Immigration of this House presented to the House, That is the only question that the people of the United States want any legislation in reference to. The people who believe in restriction in this country, the people who believe in maintaining a Lomogeneous race of people, the people who believe in protecting the labor at home from the pauper labor of Europe, do not believe in and do not want the makeshifts written in this They want a straight-out, honest, fair declaration and fair restrictions of immigration, and they do not get it in this bill.

You can say what you please about the important administrative conditions in this bill. That is a mere drop in a bucket of water. It is a matter of little importance. But the real questions that the country called on us to legislate about have been stricken out of this bill and have been abandoned. Why, they come here—the gentlemen who bring in this bill before the House—with a great parade that they are legislating to keep the Chinese out of California, and what do they do? They bring in a provision here authorizing the President, if he sees proper, to refuse to allow Japanese to land on our shores who come to this country from our colonial possessions.

There are only a few hundred thousand Japanese in all our colonial possessions. There are millions of Japanese in Japan itself, and yet, with all this hurrah, all this pretense that you are legislating for the benefit of the people of California, you are merely prohibiting the Japanese to come from the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippine Islands, and you leave the door wide open to the millions of Japanese in Japan itself, and no power on the statute books to stop them. Is that restriction of Japanese immigration? Not at all. It is merely a makeshift. On the other hand, the increase in the head tax from $2 to $4 amounts to but little. It may be that it will help the administration of affairs. It may be that it may bring a small amount of revenue into the Treasury, but everyone knows that has considered the question at all that the head tax within the present limits or within the limits of the $4 put on it by this bill is not paid by the immigrant himself, but paid by the steamship company, and the increased tax will not prevent a single other immigrant from coming into the United States. Then why should we go before the country parading this bill as we were accomplishing something for the people of the United States along the line of restricted immigration? fraud and a sham and a shame, so far as those men are concerned who believe in restricting immigration and protecting our people at home. There is nothing in the bill, there is not one line here, that carries out the promises to the people in that respect or to better the present conditions. On the other will really be an impediment in our way in the future. It is a bill that goes to the country as a pretense, and it will be necessary for those who believe in real restriction of immigration—an honest restriction of immigration—first to go to the country and show that this bill is a prétense and a sham before we can get the sentiment that will bring about an action of legislation that we need. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, before I yield any further I will ask unanimous consent that the Members may have leave to print, with reference to the subject-matter, at any time within the next five days

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bartholdt].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, if this conference report were subject to amendment, I should move to reduce the head tax from $4, at which it has been fixed in this bill, to $2, namely, to what it has been all along. There is no valid reason why that increase should be made. It is certainly not restrictive of any undesirable immigration, because the objectionable immigrant who can pay $2 to come into the United States will certainly be able to raise $4. But it might be a very serious impediment to a man with a family, who would have to pay $4 for each head of that family. If a man comes with his family in order to make this country his home for all time to come, it seems to me he is the very man who is a desirable acquisition to our population and our citizenship. Upon the other hand, that increase, Mr. Speaker, is not needed for our financial purposes, because the fund now, I understand, has more than $2,500,000 in it. So that as a fiscal measure it will be a failure. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if it were desired to put it on a financial test I would oppose it, because the possession of money, in my judgment, is never a test of character. A man without a dollar in his pocket may become a more desirable citizen than a man who has plenty of money, which perhaps he has secured in an illegitimate way before coming to this coun-So there is absolutely no reason why this tax should have been raised.

There is another provision to which I should call attention, and to which the point of order has been made, namely, section 42 of the bill. This section may be desirable to immigration, but I do not know it; the members of the Committee on Immigration do not know it; I am sure the members of the conference committee do not know it. From a casual inspection I find it will necessitate a reconstruction of every ocean steamer that plies between the United States and any other country. In other words, the subject-matter of this provision has not been investigated. It was not considered by either a committee of the House or the Senate or by either House, and from what I can glean from a cursory investigation the provision will prohibit the carrying of passengers on any but three decks of a steamer, while the new and large ocean steamers to-day have three decks alone for first and second cabin passengers. I should on account of these objectionable features vote against the conference report but for the fact that the bill presents a peaceful solution of the California school question and will enable us to maintain cordial relations with a friendly power.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Michalek].

Mr. MICHALEK. Mr. Speaker, while there are some provisions in this bill which are of doubtful value and the necessity of which I can not at this time see, yet I believe that the measure in other respects is an improvement upon our present immigration laws, and I shall therefore vote for the adoption of this conference report.

I do not favor the head-tax compromise; and if it were not for the fact that the parliamentary situation is such as to prohibit the offering of any amendments, I should move to reduce this tax from four to two dollars, which is the amount of the head tax under our present immigration act. Also to strike out the section the enforcement of which is left to the scientific (?) "guess" of the examining surgeon, as to whether persons of poor physique can or can not earn a living. This provision and its practical effect and operation will unjustly affect a certain virile, though not physically robust, race.

I am glad to note the absence of the educational-test amendment from this bill, the incorporation of which, in my judgment, would unreasonably restrict desirable immigration and not have any material effect in barring undesirables.

The provision for the creation of a commission to investigate this subject and report its findings to Congress is a step in the right direction and ought to result in a harmonious solution of this question.

While many of us in and out of Congress honestly differ in our opinions on various phases of this immigration question, it will perhaps not be amiss for me to remind you and the country in general in this connection that nothing is gained, and a great deal of friction caused, putting it briefly and bluntly, by the indiscriminate and lamentably ignorant classification of certain nationalities of eastern and southern Europe as "Dagoes" by certain writers and professional reformers in the guise of slum workers.

These people seem to have and preserve a stubborn mental antipathy toward a white person not born in this country, and what is more to be regretted, are prone to make him feel like an alien at every opportunity that presents itself, although in thought and feeling he may be a better American than the one who traces his ancestry to the landing of the Pilgrims.

Let us not draw our conclusions of the foreign element in our midst by impressions of them created when they first land or are here a short time. Let us readjust those first impressions and conclusions to their relation to us as a nation that the powerful influence of Americanization inevitably brings.

This so-called white immigration problem is, in my humble opinion, a question largely of proper distribution. I am glad to see that there is in this bill a provision authorizing the establishment of a bureau of information for the special purpose of dealing with this most important phase of this question. I sincerely hope that it will accomplish its purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this report would not have been agreed upon by the conference committees had it not been for the interjection of the Japanese question. With regard to the Roosevelt amendment and the reasons that caused its insertion, I regret to note that the big stick has dwindled, sir, to the magnificent dispersions of a technical Hayriter.

nificent dimensions of a toothpick. [Laughter.]

Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and you gentlemen of this House, by what law of human reasoning based upon the logic of the situation can we, the greatest nation of the West, kotow to the little pampered bully of the East [applause on the Democratic side], whose self-asserted greatness lies solely in his highly developed sense of imitation and in his recent success in the art of glorified murder, which is the plain term for war?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MICHALEK. Just one moment more. And in common justice to labor—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. Does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I should like to, but can not, as I have promised all the time I have.

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have further time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The

Mr. MICHALEK. Mr. Speaker, at the last session of this Congress I have sat and listened to and read several speeches of gentlemen who declaimed loudly against the immigrant from Russia, Austria-Hungary, and Italy. I have heard these peoples, with centuries of civilization and culture behind them, denounced as unfit for American citizenship and as tending to corrupt our morals, lower our ideals, and debase our national life, and through the infusion of their blood bring about the mental and physical degeneracy of the people of this country.

And yet we are confronted with the spectacle of a nation hardly emerged from barbarism treated with a consideration by this nation that seems to imply some wondrous superiority of this branch of the yellow race over the white races.

And, strange as it may seem, I heard no denunciation or even a criticism of the Japanese by the Members of this House who so feelingly portrayed the evils of this European immigration and its detrimental effect upon the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I am for the State of California as against any race or nation, because it is an American State and a part of the United States. I am with the people of California, because this Japanese question is the Chinese question with another name. [Applause.]

Whatever may be said in criticism of the San Francisco school officials' attitude on the school question, it can not be contended that their demands were any violation of any treaty between the United States and Japan.

In my opinion the Federal Government has no constitutional right to interfere in the management of the schools of any State; and its interference in local matters is hardly conducive to the peace and well-being of these United States.

The Japanese nation demands the surrender of the rights of a sovereign State to control its own affairs. Rights, Mr. Speaker, guaranteed the people of California by our Constitution.

As far as I know there has never been denied to the Japanese the privilege of education; there has only been denied the right to attend the same schools with the white children of California.

. And shall we blame the people of this State, the fathers and mothers, for objecting to the enforced association of their daughters with Japanese young men? With the offspring of a nation whose moral standards are at variance with those that western civilization prescribes?

Mr. Speaker, the demand of the people of California for separate schools for white and Mongolian children is primarily a local issue.

The demand for a rigid Japanese exclusion act, not only by the people of that section of this country, but by the great mass of American people in other sections, is a national issue that affects the very existence of every wage-earner in every State in the Union.

It can hardly be disputed that Japanese immigration affects the interests of our wage-earner in precisely the same manner as do the Chinese, with this added danger: That the superior sense of imitation and adaptability of the Jap enables him to compete in the skilled trades, whereas the Chinese scope of activity is generally confined to the coarser trades. I maintain emphatically that the interests of the American workingman are of greater moment, of greater importance, than the interests or needs of a few corporations or individuals desiring cooly labor.

Now, it seems to me that in common justice to the laborer of this country the Japanese ought to be placed in the same class as the Chinese and excluded. However, Mr. Speaker, this question can not, this question will not, be settled by this delightfully vague amendment.

It will be settled, sir, when the American people, through their representatives, will come to a realization of the fact that the policy of excluding all Asiatic labor is just as essential, just as important, just as justifiable as our adherence to the Monroe doctrine. [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the proviso at the end of the first section of this bill, while it does not go as far as Members upon this floor from the State of California would desire, nevertheless meets with their hearty approval. The conditions that require such a provision are these: The Japanese Government itself, we are informed, does not desire its cooly laborers to come to the mainland of the United States; therefore it positively refuses to issue passports to those coolies to come to the mainland of this country; and no Japanese cooly can leave the home country without a passport. But there are many and large Japanese interests in Hawaii, and so the Japanese Government readily grants its laborers passports to our island possessions. So the cooly asks for a passport to Hawaii and lands there in due season. As soon as he sets foot on American soil at Honolulu he is no longer under the jurisdiction of his home Government, and shortly thereafter he takes passage to the mainland of the United States. Now, we believe that this provision, if enacted into law, will absolutely prohibit the Japanese cooly from coming to California and the mainland.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker-

I can not yield; I have only two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. KAHN. As I said, we believe it will prohibit these coolies from coming from the island possessions to the mainland, and since the cooly can not procure a passport from the Japanese Government to come to the mainland, we feel that it will wipe out all cause of friction that now exists because these coolies come. We accept it because we believe it to be a step in the right direction. We have had great experience in exclusion legislation. It took us four years to get the first Chinese-immi-gration law. It took us ten years more to secure the first Chinese-exclusion law. This present legislation comes to us within one year after our people have asked for Japanese exclusion. We hope it may prove effective. At any rate, we from California are willing to give it a trial. We believe, as I have already stated, that it is a step in the right direction, and therefore we heartily indorse it. Mr. Speaker, I desire to print, as a part of my remarks, an address I recently delivered in the city of Boston, and which, I believe, expresses the views of a large majority of the people of California:

Epecch of Hon. Julius Kahn on "Asiatic immigration" before the Middlesex Club, Boston, Mass., February 12, 1907.

Recause the people of California have taken a decided stand in favor of the exclusion of Asiatic coolies they are too frequently charged with being intolerant and provincial. They are neither. On the contrary, they are among the most tolerant people in the whole world; while San Francisco, the spiendid metropolis of the Golden State, is one of the most cosmopolitan communities on the face of the globe. Walking along her busy thoroughfares one meets representatives of every race, of every land, of every clime—and even the occasional immigrant from the distant Indies, clothed in the strange, fantastic garb of his native land, scarcely excites passing comment. It is not at all strange that such should be the case. The very manner in which the State was settled bred a spirit of tolerance from the very beginning.

When the news was heralded to the nations of the world that gold had been found within the confines of the newly acquired territory of the United States known as "California," a steady stream of sturdy, hardy, adventurous pioneers set their faces toward the land of the setting sun. Some braved all the dangers of a six months' journey across the plains, through lands infested by tribes of hostile and marauding indians; others risked their lives in creaking hulks that made the long and tedious voyage around the storm-swept seas of Cape Horn; while others still defied the malignant fevers that lurked in the swamps of the Isthmus of Panama; all of them eager to seek fame and fortune in this new Eldorado. The resolute and the brave alone reached the weaklings and the cowards fell by the wayside or returned ignominously to their homes and friends. There were few in that great outpeuring of Argonauts that had passed middle life. Most of them were young men of good education and good breeding. In the mad quest for the precious yellow metal religious and political lines were obliterated and all men felt that they were kin. The proud planter from the Southern States bunked in the same cabin with the humble farmer fr camps and in the pueblos made these men tolerant of the rights of otners.

But they had not been in the Golden State more than two of three years when the first Asiatic coolies made their appearance among them. These were Chinese, who had been brought from their native land under contract to work in the gold mines. From the very outset their presence was looked upon as a menace. Their habits, their customs, their method of living, and the low wages for which they worked at once caused a strong antipathy to spring up against them. This feeling gradually grew stronger and stronger as they came in increasing numbers during the succeeding years, until it finally culminated in the passage of the so-called "Chinese-exclusion laws," under the terms of which their number has decreased materially during the past ten years. But during these ten years a new invasion of Asiatic coolies has begun to threaten the peace and the welfare of the people of California. However, I deem it but proper to state at this time, and in this presence, that there is no antagonism on the Pacific coast to the Japanese of the better class, such as scholars, professional men, bankers, and merchants. The opposition is entirely directed against the cooly, or laboring, class. And I say frankly that the Japanese cooly is much more feared in California than is his meek, docile, childlike, and bland counterpart from the vicinage of Canton.

As a matter of fact, the Japanese cooly did not make his appearance among us to any appreciable extent prior to the close of the China-Japan war. Since then, however, he has been coming in constantly increasing numbers, and during the past year he has been landing at the port of secure the extension of the exclusion laws to Japanese and Korean coolies. But the incident of the segregation of Japanese children from white children in the primary and grammar schools of San Francisco at once brought the question of the exclusion of Japanese children from white children in the primary and grammar schools of San Francisco at once brought the question of the exclusion of Japanese abovers into the foreground and made it a burning, vital issue. For some reason or other in the discussion of the matter of the segregation of pupils are that the san Francisco bad denied all Japanese children admission into her public schools. No such step has even been contemplated. The action of the school board simply contemplated the consolidation of all Japanese school children under one root, and it has been generally admitted that the school provided for these Japanese children admission into her public schools. No such step has even been contemplated. The action of the school provided for these Japanese children work and ompared most favorably with the teachers in the other schools of the city. It is not my purpose to discuss this school question this evening. My individual opinion is, and always has been, that every State in the United States, has the right to interfere. But the courts will probably pass upon that subject, and anything that I may say upon it would be purely academic. Unfortunately, however, the discussion of the school question has constantly carried more or less war talk in its train. For that the special school of the school question has constantly carried more or less war talk in its train solution would be found which would be creditable alike to the people of our own Government and the Government of Japan. I believe such a programme is now fairly under way and that there is every prospect for an early settlement of the much-fiscussed question. It has been generally believed on the Pacific coast that the manufacturers of this country are the most pronounced opponents to the enclusion of Six: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your favor of the 12th instant; also the newspaper clippings within referred to. The paragraph in the clipping referring to the market for the product of the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Company in the Far East as having been practically destroyed is true; also the report of the British army officer, although he did not make the investigation at the request of this company. He reported that he found in southern China a Chinese arms factory, under the superintendence of Japanese, which was manufacturing the Colt automatic guns. It was also reported to us that the Japanese, previous to their war with Russia, manufactured a large number of Colt automatic and Gatling guns at the armories in Japan, and this we have every reason to believe is true, as during the past eighteen months we have received no inquiry for machine guns from the Far East.

It is well known that with very little teaching the Japanese make very skillful mechanics, and the low rate of labor in China and Japan makes it impossible for the American manufacturer to compete with Respectfully. COLT'S PATENT FIRE ARMS MFG. CO. L. C. GROVER, President.

Surely Mr. Grover can not be charged with having the so-called "bigoted and intolerant" notions of the people of California; but, lke the latter, he has had actual experiences with the little brown men. Mr. Grover hails from New England, and we from California are glad to accept and welcome him as a friend and ally.

But the case of the Celt company is only a forcrunner of what we may expect to happen with our oriental trade. Japan is just as ambitious commercially as we are. She will exert every effort to build up her markets at our expense. She has given evidence that she will even subsidize her manufacturers, if it shall become necessary, for them to control their markets. And I have always felt that if ever a clash of arms shall occur between the two nations it will arise as a result of our own commercial expansion interfering with the commercial expansion of our powerful neighbor on the other side of the Pacific.

Just as we desire to be the dominant power on the American Centinent, so Japan aspires to be the dominant power on Asia. She is already stirring China out of her lethargy of ages, and action the whole world will have to sit up and take notice. There is a strong antiforeign sentiment in both Japan and China. True, the argument is often made that the United States is the traditional friend of both of these oriental countries. But in my study of world political control of the sentiment o

On motion of Mr. Benner of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk's desk,

The Clerk read as follows:

*Resolved**, That immediately upon the final passage of the bill (H. R. 25483) making appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, it shall be in order in the House to offer the following, under the conditions prescribed in Rule XXVIII, covering suspension of the rules:

*Ordered**, That in the engrossment of the bill (H. R. 25483) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes, the Clerk be directed to insert after the paragraph of appropriation for inland transportation by railroad route, $44,660,000;" the following:

"The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to readjust the compensation to be paid from and after the 1st day of July, 1907, for the transportation of mail on railroad routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of upward of 5,000 pounds by making the following changes in the present rates per mile per annum for the transportation of mail on such routes, and hereafter the rates on such routes shall be as follows: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mail per day of more than 5,000 pounds and less than 48,000 pounds the rate shall be 5 per cent less than the present rates on all weight carried in excess of 5,000 pounds up to 48,000 pounds, and for each additional 2,000 pounds in excess of 48,000 pounds art he rate of $19.24 upon all roads other than landgrant roads, and upon all land-grant roads the rate shall be $17.10 for each 2,000 pounds carried in excess of said 48,000 pounds.

"That after July 1, 1907, additional pay allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars shall be at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length and $27.50 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length and $27.50 per mile per annum for cars 55 feet or more in length."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Who demands a second? [After a pause.]

If nobody desires

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering a second as ordered? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the House, I think I can explain in a very short time the effect of this resolution if it should be adopted. The post-office appropriation bill, which was under consideration on Saturday last, contains certain items seeking to reduce the rate of pay upon railway mail routes, which items are clearly subject to points of order. By the adoption of this resolution, which, under the rules, requires a two-thirds vote, the language in which the order is drawn would be equivalent to its adoption in the bill itself. It therefore would avoid the necessity of a rule and would avoid further controversy in the event points of order should be made upon these several provisions.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. In just a moment. In submitting this resolution I have, after conversation with members of the committee having jurisdiction of the post-office appropriation bill, been guided by an effort to bring about some substantial legislation and avoid the entanglements which may arise by virtue of the items being subject to the point of order. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there are differences of opinion among the Members of the House with respect to the various items recommended by the committee, which would operate in the reduction of pay to the carrying roads.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I should prefer not to be interrupted until I have completed my remark

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman will yield later?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes. The four items recommended by the committee were, first, a reduction of certain per cents upon routes carrying an excess of 5,000 pounds per day; second, an elimination of empty mail bags from the weights third, a change of method of computing the compensation by changing the divisor from six to seven days, and fourth, a change of rates with respect to the pay on full railway post-office cars. I stated, Mr. Speaker, on Saturday that I had con-siderable doubt with respect to the items of elimination of the empty bags and the change of divisor in the computation of the conpensation, but that I believed that it was fair and reasonable to make a reduction in the rates upon railway routes above 5,000 pounds a day, and equally fair and reasonable to reduce the rates upon full railway post-office cars. I trust, therefore, that at least a two-thirds vote of this House may be had upon the pending resolution, which will incorporate in the bill at the proper place when the proper motion shall be made, freeing them from being subject to the points of order, those two provisions; first, the reduction of the present rates upon the routes carrying in excess of 5,000 pounds a day; second, a change of rate relative to a rate for full postoffice car pay.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I will yield for just a ques-

Mr. YOUNG. Do I understand, then, that if this resolution was adopted that the provisions as to new divisor and mail bags would be subject to the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, will the gentleman permit a question? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes.
Mr. MURDOCK. Now, Rule XXVIII, which you quote in your order, reads:

No rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the Members voting, a quorum being present; nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees, and during the last six days of the session.

Now, I would like to ask if he introduces this as an individual or as chairman of a committee?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I introduced it as an individual, but I introduced it individually upon my personal responsibility and after consultation with a majority of the com-

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman— Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I submitted it to the leader of the minority [Mr. Moon of Tennessee], who in turn advised with some Members on that side of the aisle, and I submitted it to other Members on this side of the aisle, including my friend from Kansas.

For which I thank the gentleman. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if his proposition as contained in this proposed order carries the same rates as the bill which he defended Saturday Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. They are modified in two particulars. The bill which was before the House on Saturday. when I made the statement referred to, provided for a 5 per cent reduction on routes carrying an excess of 5,000 pounds and not in excess of 48,000 pounds; 10 per cent in excess of 48,000 pounds and not in excess of 80,000 pounds, and $19 per ton in addition to the 80,000 pounds a day. Nineteen dollars and twentyfour cents per ton is equivalent to a 10 per cent reduction from the existing rate of $21.37 per ton. Therefore, in this proposed order, embodied in the pending resolution, a change is made to $19.24, instead of $19. The second exception is that the landgrant roads are specifically excepted. The present rate carried by existing statutes on routes carrying in excess of 5,000 pounds a day is $21.37 per ton per year, as to roads other than land grant, but under the law the land-grant contract, providing for 80 per cent of the total pay, the rate per ton per year upon 5,000 pounds is $17.10. Therefore, if the language of the bill should be at the rate of $19.24 per ton in excess of 48,000 pounds, without any qualification, it would mean that the landgrant road would have to be paid at the same rate, or $19.24 per ton per year, which in effect would increase the rate upon the land-grant road. And in order to avoid an increase of rate upon the land-grant road and at the same time to avoid a too serious reduction upon the land-grant road where they now carry 80 per cent only of existing rates, I thought that it would be wise to put in that exception. So that by the adoption of this resolution there would be as to the per cents of 5 and 10 only a change of making it 10 per cent flat, or $19.24 per ton, instead of $19 per ton for the excess.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has stated that there was an exception so far as land-grant roads are concerned. Do I understand him to mean that the exception extends to the weight below 48,000 pounds?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Only in excess of 48,000 pounds

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the way I understood the resolution and that the $17.10 rate per ton provided only on the weight in excess. But on any of the land-grant roads where the weight is below 48,000, 5 per cent reduction of the present rates on land-grant roads would prevail.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the effect of the passage of this resolution be to cut off any opportunity to change the rates specified in the resolution? The gentleman provides for a 5 and 10 per cent reduction.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; there would be no opportunity to make any change. This resolution—

Mr. STEENERSON. That would commit us to that percentage.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. This resolution must be adopted or voted down. It must be adopted as a whole or not adopted at all, under the rules which govern in suspension of the rules. Mr. STEENERSON. Then I understand the position to be that he knows that all of these provisions are subject to a point of order and would be ruled out, and he concludes to press this resolution in order that he may get a half loaf instead of a whole loaf?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Exactly so. Just to answer a little more fully, I have my own personal doubts as to whether we could hope for any rule. And I believe that even the members of the Committee on Rules ought not to be expected to settle differences affecting legislation. That is not the province of that committee. And recognizing as I do a decided difference of opinion among the Members of the House as well as the members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads with respect to these several provisions, I think it is proper for me to exercise my rights under the Rules of the House and offer a resolution suspending the rules, and not saddle upon the Committee on Rules the burden which ought not, properly, to fall upon that committee. But, believing as I do that a reasonable proposition, such as I think is embodied in the pending resolution will meet with the favor and approval of two-thirds of this body, and inasmuch as it will secure what I think is, at least, fair, even though it may not go as far as some Members may think and even a little further than some others may think, it is far better, Mr. Speaker, that we should adopt this resolution and put that language in the post-office appropriation bill rather than to resort to extreme measures or to postpone the evil day to a later period. Now I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he will make plain to me how this reduction, or percentage of reduction, operates. In other words, how it will compare on the main lines of railroad with the smaller lines.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. If this resolution should be adopted, there would be no change whatever upon the roads carrying less than 5,000 pounds a day. On the roads carrying in excess of 5,000 pounds a day and not more than 48,000 pounds a day there would be a 5 per cent reduction from existing rates over the 5,000 pounds. The first 5,000 pounds would be computed according to existing rates; the next 43,000 pounds, up to 48,000, would have a 5 per cent cut. On roads carrying in excess of 48,000 pounds there would be a 5 per cent cut up to 48,000, and above that at the proper rate, $19.24 per ton of mail, which is an equivalent of 10 per cent reduction, except as to land-grant roads the rate will be $17.10 per ton in excess of 48,000 pounds.

Mr. SULZER. Just a question. If this resolution is adopted. how much will it save the Government?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. In my own judgment-and that judgment is based upon a computation made by the bureau of adjustments of the Department—it will amount to a maximum of $4,000,000, including the reduction of rates for postoffice-car pay

Mr. SULZER. Then I shall vote for the resolution.
Mr. JAMES. Does this resolution make in order all the reductions that your bill proposes?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. It does not. Surely the gentleman was not present when I explained it.

Mr. JAMES. I have just come in. Why do you not make all of them in order?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Because I do not think I could get a resolution of that kind adopted, and I would not go to the extreme. Because I am a practical man. I suggest a practical solution of a difficult problem.

But you believe they ought all to be adopted? Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky. I decline to yield any further. How much further time have I? The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I reserve the balance of my

Mr. PRINCE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I have only six minutes remaining, and I want to retain that until the opposition has deits position.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second not be-I proposed to oppose the resolution, but because nized the importance of it, and I believed we should have as much discussion as we could have upon it under the rules. am therefore perfectly willing to yield to anyone who is opposed to the resolution; and in the absence of any such gentleman wanting to address the committee, then I will yield to any gentleman who desires to further explain it to the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. May I inquire of the gentle-man from Kentucky if he will not yield a few minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Moon], to whom I had in-

Mr. SHERLEY. I will take pleasure in doing so, if he desires any time.

The SPEAKER. What time does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SHERLEY. Whatever time the gentleman desires.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not desire to discuss the question if there is no opposition to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I want the time only in order that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK] may explain his substitute bill to the House. I do not know what he wants to

Mr. MURDOCK. I do not know whether I have any time on the floor of this House.

Mr. SIMS. I am giving you the benefit of the five minutes that I have if you need it.

Mr. MURDOCK. This bill proper, as reported by the committee and adopted in committee after long and sometimes tedious debate as to many details, contains the four well-known provisions looking to the reduction of railway mail pay. As I understand the statement of the chairman of the committee just made, the order, if adopted by the House, carries with it all four of the provisions. Am I right? That is, the order, if it is made by the House, will make impossible the amendment or consideration on the floor of any of these four provisions.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. They are all subject to the point of order, and, as I am informed, the point of order will be made, and then the adoption of this resolution would leave in the bill this provision.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman does not understand me. Leaving out and waiving the matter of the point of order, if the point of order should not be made against any one or all four of these provisions, would not any one or all of these provisions in the bill be subject to amendment and debate?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Yes; if no point of order be

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, this provision to defend two provisions from a point of order and to leave the other two exposed to a point of order comes under a parliamentary turn. I have been around legislative bodies all my life. I have seen this played on the other fellow a thousand times, and now I find it played upon myself. [Laughter.]
Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman explain the substitute he wanted to offer.

Mr. MURDOCK. My substitute, which I desired to offer and attempted to offer, simply took the provisions as they stood in the bill—the four provisions making the four reductions—substituting them for the two provisions offered here now by the chairman. I want to say to the House that the proposition is this: There are four distinct propositions looking to the reduction of railway mail pay in the House bill as reported by the committee. One of them is a 5 per cent horizontal reduction, from 5,000 pounds to 48,000 pounds; a 10 per cent reduction from 48,000 to 80,000 pounds. This one matter is a very debatable one that should have come before the whole membership of this House, because I want to say that there is an honest difference of opinion about horizontal reductions. Mostly they can be accounted unjust, because it is not fair to cut a route that carries 8,000 pounds a day the same per cent that you cut a route that carries 48,000 pounds a day, nor is it fair to cut a route that carries 50,000 pounds a day the same per cent that you cut a route that carries 80,000 pounds a day.

Mr. Speaker, there is in the bill, and there is not in this proposed resolution, a provision for a lower rate on routes that carry over 80,000 pounds of mail per day, and there are great routes in this country which could stand a progressive reduction for weights above 80,000 pounds per day. The larger railroads for weights above $0,000 pounds per day. The larger railroads of this country—the New York Central, the Pennsylvania, and the Burlington—are saved a very large amount by this resolution.

Every man in this House and every man within the hearing of my voice knows that no Member here would for a moment oppose the opportunity to cut down, even if he can not cut it as much as it should be, the gross overpay that these railroads have received for thirty years. The provision for horizontal reductions, changed from those in the bill, and the postal-carpay reduction are included in this proposed order. rected divisor and empty-mail-bag provisions are not.

Mr. JAMES. Why were not those other propositions made in order by this same resolution?

Mr. MURDOCK. That I can not answer. I tried to get them in by way of substitute. Now, every man here will vote for this proposition, containing but two of the bill's four provisions, because it does propose to cut down the largest single item of expenditure of the Government of the United States, an item that has been indefensible for many years, an item that has been almost without exception criticised by every Postmaster-General since 1875.

Mr. JAMES. By the failure to include the provisions about which you have been talking, how much does the Government lose, and how much do the railroads make?

Mr. MURDOCK. That I can not answer exactly. All the attempts that have been made at an estimate, running from $6,000,000 to $16,000,000, are mere estimates, and no one knows. You can not tell except by carefully working it out in the Department. Some men can guess, and some men may conjecture.

Mr. JAMES. You might approximate it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words to the House in regard to the reason why I support this resolution. I am with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Murpock] in favor of the reduction of railway mail pay. amendments to the appropriation bill last year looking to a reduction as great as 20 per cent on the heavy routes. I do not favor this proposition for a divisor of 105 instead of 90, now in the bill, in toto, because it reduces the railway mail pay 14 per cent and a fraction upon the densest routes as well as upon the lightest routes, which are generally conceded not to be overpaid now. But I am in favor of a material reduction, a reduction by a larger per cent than is provided for in this resolution, upon routes carrying over 5,000 pounds daily. But the parliamentary situation, as I understand it, is this: If a point of order is made against any of these provisions, being new legislation, they will be ruled out, and we would simply find ourselves at the last with a bill that contained no change of law and no railway mail pay reduction at all. And a change of law in regard to ascertaining average daily weight of mail is proposed in this bill. The only effect of changing the divisor, as proposed in the bill, is to reduce the average daily weight upon all roads by one-seventh. The relative pay of all routes, seven-day-a-week routes, six-day-a-week routes, and three-day-a-week routes, will remain the same, and they are relatively the same-that is, the per ton per mile rate is the same on all and will be the same with the new divisor, only, as I said, the "average daily weight" will, with the larger divisor, be reduced one-seventh.

A simpler way is to make one flat reduction by a larger per cent cut. It would take four years to put a new divisor in effect, for we only have weighings every four years. The division weighed last year have contracts running four years under present legal basis and can't be changed. The only way we can get reduction of railway mail pay is by changing the law, and by this resolution we make sure we get some reduction.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. The only thing I care to know about it is if this bill is passed, is it a six-day average for seven days' work or a seven-day average?

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that the passage of this resolution does not change the divisor; that provision in the bill remains subject to a point of order And, further, it is entirely immaterial, because the only thing there is to it, and I will convince the gentleman whea I come to address the House upon the question, which I will do as soon as an opportunity offers, is that the pay per ton per mile under the present law is the same for a three day in the week, or a six day in the week, or a seven day in the week It will be the same per ton mile under the new divisor proposed in this bill. Its only effect is to reduce the pay by reducing average daily weight by one-seventh. That is the provision in the bill, and it is a mathematical certainty, so I can convince the gentleman from Connecticut because he is a good mathematician.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. You will have to work a good deal longer than the balance of this session to do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEENERSON. I am certain that the gentleman will be convinced, because it can be demonstrated.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly. Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman concede that the basis of pay is the average daily weight as recited in the law?

Mr. STEENERSON. What is the average daily weight? The daily weight, the daily route, is six times a week, just the same as the rural free-delivery carrier delivers daily mail. The railway carries it six times a week and that is a daily mail. you carry it seven days a week, it is "daily and Sunday."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota

Mr. MURDOCK. I wanted to say to the gentleman who has asked me what the daily weight was—

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want some more time. Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, the law does recite the average daily mail weight, and if you divide this by six you get a better average than you do if you divide it by seven; and if you divide it by seven you get a lower average; and the Postmaster-General says if you will take the divisor seven, you will make a difference in excess of this difference of $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. STEENERSON. Nobody questions that; that is as clear as that two and two make four. It makes a difference of one-seventh. It is a method of changing the mail pay. Under the present rule the pay per ton-mile for movement of mail is the same upon the three-day-a-week route, upon the six-day-a-week route, and upon the seven-day-a-week route, because you use six as a divisor. Under the new provision of the bill you would use seven, or, in other words, for ninety days you would use the one hundred and five instead of ninety, the law of seven. Now, it is all a question of what is daily mail. The whole question turns upon that, and when this law was passed, through an abundance of caution Congress put in that the mail should be weighed upon working days. The proposition is to leave out the words "working day."

Mr. MURDOCK rose.

Mr. STEENERSON. Wait a minute. The gentleman, in his last speech, said that the provision was subject to a point of order because it was new legislation, and gave away his whole case, because when it is a change of law the present method of computing is according to law, and the Department has not used a "false" divisor as he then charged.

Mr. MURDOCK. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to consume more time, but I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana one question, and that is if this resolution offered by him is adopted, whether the provisions made in order on the postoffice bill will then be subject to amendment when that bill is considered?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. The gentleman refers to the items incorporated in this resolution?
Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. No; because the resolution provides that it shall be in order to make this motion when the bill has been passed by the House. A motion to incorporate the items pending in this resolution will be made after the consideration of the bill, and then they will not be open to amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply wanted the House to understand at fact. I myself so understood it. that fact.

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would ask if it is not true after the passage of this resolution all new provisions not included in the resolution are just as well off?

Mr. OVERSTREET of Indiana. Just the same. If the point of order is made, they go out, and if the point of order is not made they are subject to amendment. Mr. Speaker, I have stated to the House that I have been prompted in offering this resolution to bring about some practical results. I doubt very seriously if this resolution should fail if anything can be done at this session, and in a spirit of fairness and in the hope that we can arrive at a reasonable conclusion I hope the House will adopt the resolution, and I call for a vote.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (8, 5133) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and meer:

"That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers, their officers, agents, and employees, engaged in the transportation of passengers and property by railroad in the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States, or from one State or Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States and the set of the place of the country to any other place in the United States and the set of the place of th

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. ADAMSON. I demand a second.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Georgia to twenty minutes

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, the House committee has had under consideration this measure for a period of two months. It has given to it more deliberation than to any other measure that has come before it for the last four years, barring possibly the rate bill. We endeavored to secure unanimity of opinion with reference thereto. The majority members are in favor of the amendment which we wish to offer to Senate bill 5133. Legislation on this subject is asked for by the Interstate Commerce Commission, as shown by its last three annual reports; it is strongly indorsed by the President in his three last annual messages; it is also asked for by the brotherhoods of railway employees. The terms of the demand for this legislation are not agreed upon, but the necessity for legislation restricting the consecutive hours of service for railway employees engaged in train operation is generally admitted. We found that as the railroad employees and the railroads could not come to any agreement in their Chicago conference during the holidays, that it became the duty of Congress to take this subject-matter under consideration and to recommend such legislation as We have therefore presented to the House

In brief, I wish to give its scope, for I wish to yield time to other members of the committee. The first section of the House amendment is almost verbatim section 1 of the arbitration act amendment is almost verbatim section 1 of the arbitration act of 1898. It applies to all employees engaged in the operation of any train on interstate roads. It differs from the Senate bill in that the Senate bill limits it to "any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers." The second section of the amendment prescribes the hours of service. There are three classifications, and I wish to call attention to them. First, no employee engaged in train operations shall be permitted to work more than sixteen consecutive hours without having ten consecutive hours off duty. This is the first clause. Second, no such employee shall be allowed to work more than sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four-hour period without having eight consecutive hours off duty.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Not eight consecutive hours? Mr. ESCH. Eight hours off duty.

Third, if any such employee shall have had eight consecutive hours of rest preceding any twenty-four-hour period and six consecutive hours off duty within that period, then the limitation in the second class does not apply.

This second section also prescribes a limitation of service of train dispatchers and of telegraph operators. So that all such who work in offices open day and night shall not be permitted to work more than nine consecutive hours and in all offices open only during the daytime not to exceed thirteen hours, except in cases of emergency, when four hours additional may be added, but not for a longer period than three days.

The third section prescribes a penalty for violations of this act not exceeding $500 for each offense. This penalty is to be collected by the United States district attorney in the district where the offense is committed, and he shall only act upon the verified information under direction of the Attorney-General. It may be objected that this takes away the initiative of the several district attorneys, but, as a matter of fact, this would simply enforce the practice that exists to-day in enforcing the safety-appliance law. The district attorneys are instructed by the Attorney-General in the bringing of these actions, and the provisions of this bill will bring about the same practice. is further provided that in all prosecutions under this act the common carrier shall be deemed to have knowledge of all acts of its duly authorized agents. We have inserted the word "knowingly" before the word "permit." There are records kept in roundhouses, and in the offices of the dispatchers, and in the offices of those who direct train movements, which give the exact minute of the departure and the arrival of all these train employees. There therefore is preserved record evidence which can be used in prosecution under this act.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.

The gentleman stated a moment ago that Mr. BARTLETT. the provisions in this bill in reference to the duties of the district attorney were the same as those contained in the safetyappliance act. The gentleman certainly does not mean that.

Mr. ESCH. The gentleman did not understand me. I said the provisions which we have in this act would bring about the same practice which practically obtains now in the prosecutions under the safety-appliance act.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman answer this ques-

Mr. ESCH. Certainly.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. In relation to the word "knowingly," does that add anything to the legal significance of the bill?

Can anything be permitted in the sense of the law without knowing it is going on?

Mr. ESCH. I suppose permission implies knowledge.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does it not necessarily imply knowledge? Mr. ESCH.

I rather think so.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not believe the word "knowingly" is of any significance in the text of the bill.

Mr. ESCH. We have in the third section a proviso which stays the operation of the act upon the happening of certain contingencies, it being the desire of the committee to strictly enforce the law except where by reason of an unavoidable accident or casualty or the act of God it was impossible for these employees to come within the time limit.

The fourth section of the bill provides the machinery for its operation, giving the commission the power and making it its duty to execute and enforce the provisions of this act, "and, to enable it to do so, it should employ such inspectors and other persons as may be provided for by law." It may be said that this is not specific authority and is not sufficient to provide for efficient enforcement, but I want to call your attention to the fact that in the safety-appliance act of 1892, as amended in 1896, and again amended in 1902, there were no provisions for the appointment of inspectors or other persons to carry out the provisions of those laws,
Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. ESCH. Yes.
Mr. NORRIS. I notice in section 3, in line 8, on page 5, where the penalty is fixed, that it says— Mr. ESCH. Not to exceed $500.

Mr. NORRIS. Not to exceed $500. Does the gentleman think, or has the committee determined in their judgment, that it would not be wise to fix a minimum as well as a maximum penalty there? Mr. ESCH. The committee deemed it wise to only fix the maximum

Mr. NORRIS. Has it been the custom of the committee, in other matters as well as that, to fix only a maximum?

Mr. ESCH. Under the safety-appliance law the minimum was $100 and the maximum was $500.

Mr. NORRIS. In the law now, as you have it here, with no minimum, the maximum penalty will be imposed in all cases.

Mr. ESCH. Yes; possibly. Mr. NORRIS. Does not the gentleman think it would be better that a minimum as well as a maximum might be fixed, so that if a prosecution was had and conviction obtained, that there would be no danger of no punishment being inflicted?

Mr. ESCH. That feature of the matter was presented to the committee, and the committee determined to fix only a maximum penalty.

Mr. WANGER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Committee on Revision of the Laws concluded it was better to strike out the minimum penalties in all our statutes?

Mr. ESCH.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have received quite a number of letters on this subject favoring legislation of this general character, and I have not been able to learn whether the railroad labor organizations of the country favor this or the Senate bill known as the "La Follette bill." I would state also I have received petitions in favor of the adoption of the law and some from organizations against it.

Mr. ESCH. I will say that there are numerous petitions in our committee favoring this bill and a number of petitions from the same organizations protesting against any law on the sub-

Mr. HUGHES. I see that your bill provides that violations should only be punished on recommendations of the Attorney-General. Why not make that so that they could be indicted by the district attorney and that he should prosecute them?

Mr. ESCH. The committee did not deem that process wise. They deemed it best to have this come from the Attorney-General, just as he is charged practically with the enforcement of the safety-appliance law.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will not the gentleman unite with me in a request for unanimous consent for a longer time for debate on this bill? So many requests have been made for time.

Mr. ESCH. I do not understand I have it in my power to yield to that. I think the rule gives twenty minutes on a side. Mr. ADAMSON. I then request unanimous consent for one more hour's time for debate on this subject.

Mr. ESCH. I reserve the balance of my time.
Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I think that everybody knows how they are going to vote on this proposition,
The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I recognize that the necessity for legislation upon this important matter is urgent. ple demand it. The safety of the traveling public demands it. and we should prepare and pass an effective measure. The Senate sent to us a good bill. We also unanimously reported from our committee nearly a year ago the Esch House bill. For either of those we were willing to vote and still offer to do so. The men affected have sent petition after petition in support of these bills. They will not be satisfied with the substitute which is now sought to be dragooned through the House under whip and spur by suspension of the rules without opportunity of amendment. Mr. Speaker, if our constituents and the public safety demand bread, we should not give them a stone; if they demand a fish, we should not give them a serpent. It requires a sound mind in a sound body, with every faculty of both fully awake, to operate trains with safety to the traveling public. Tired and sleepy men are unreliable. Cupidity operating on men and managers constantly permits operators incompetent from exhaustion to endanger the lives of themselves and the traveling public by operating trains. It has become obvious that nothing but the law will correct the evil. We are unwilling that the demand for legislation shall be mocked by destroying our opportunity to accomplish something. The whole subject be closed for the present, genuine relief can be prevented, and the hypocritical pretense go to the country that something

That is just a mockery and a delusion to any man who imagines for a moment that there is anything effective in it. The La Follette bill, as it came from the Senate, briefly provided for prohibition of work over sixteen hours, prescribed punishment, authorized investigation and report to the district attorney, whose authority to prosecute was not limited by the terms of the bill, as is done in the substitute. It also provided, by a virile and effective section, for the appointment of persons authorized by law to inspect and have these cases pun-

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. No; I can not yield; I have not time. Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would be glad to inform the gentleman, but I have yielded the entire time to others. I have no further time to allot. I have not time to allude to all the inconsistencies of this substitute; but everything good in it is so emasculated by exceptions and provisos that there is no railroad manager in the country who could tell his duties and liabilities, and the operatives would require the services of a lawyer all the time to advise them, and perhaps a surgeon, too, as present conditions, already bad enough, might be greatly aggravated by the uncertainties and inconsistencies of this substitute.

Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to incorporate in my remarks the minority report and the exhibits. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN].

The minority report is as follows:

the gentleman from New York [Mr. Ryan].

The minority report is as follows:

We, the undersigned, members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, regret we can not concur with the action of the majority in connection with S. 5133, just reported by substitute from said committee. We recognize the great and urgent importance of the subject and realize the pressing necessity for effective legislation to promote the safety of the traveling public, as well as of the employees operating railroads. Long and faithfully we have labored to secure such action as would promise such effective legislation. On May 31, 1906, we unanimously reported from our committee H. R. 18671, which is yet on the Calendar, and which we are ready to support by our votes and speech in the House. We opposed the amendment of S. 5133, substituting the provisions reported by the majority, for the reason that such substitute is not as good in point of value and effectiveness as the Senate act, but defeats the purposes thereof. The only improvement on the Senate act it contains is the provision to limit the hours of work of telegraphers, operators, and train dispatchers. That provision itself should have been further improved by fixing the hours at eight and twelve instead of nine and thirteen, respectively.

The contradictions and vagaries of the substitute appear to us to trifle with the demands and the hopes of the public for protection. The use of the word "knowingly," as applied to the action of railroad officials, and the unnecessary declaration that the corporation shall be construed to know the acts of its authorized agents would look ridiculous but for the suggestion of a sinister design contemplating reflex effect, which might permit the railroads to repudiate conduct of its servants, however careless and criminal, by denying that they were duly authorized for that particular purpose. The provision as to inspectors is uncertain and vague, if not meaningless, and might result in failure to execute that law as a result of a poi to limit the hours of telegraphers, operators, and train dispatchers on duty.

We are induced to believe, not only by the provisions of the substitute reported by the majority, but also by the treatment accorded H. R. 18671, that the proposed legislation will not be effective and is not intended to give the remedy and the protection that the public desire. The effect of the substitute will not be to accomplish the purpose ostensibly set forth as the purpose to be accomplished, but will, on the contrary, enable common carriers to evade and avoid all penalty and responsibility. We recommend that the proposed attempt of the majority to pass, under the suspension of the rules, the substitute, without opportunity for amendment, be defeated. The majority of this House can bring the subject-matter of this legislation before the House in other ways, so that the House may have the opportunity to substitute and amend and give the country effective legislation.

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary. By H. M. Rose, Assistant Secretary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman to extend his remarks by incorporating the minority report?

Mr. WANGER. There is one part of the request to which I must object, unless the gentleman is willing to make an exception. The language I allude to is in line 16 of the report of the minority and is not permissible under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects. Mr. WANGER. Except these words are stricken out in the sixteenth line.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary to remind my amiable friend from Pennsylvania—first, will be tell me what the words are?

Mr. WANGER. If the gentleman will look at the last word in line 16, the next line, and so much of line 18 as precedes the period, he will observe what the words are.

Mr. ADAMSON. What are they?
Mr. WANGER. I do not want to put them in the Record, because I contend that they have no place in the report and are not properly before the House.

Mr. ADAMSON. What is the language?

Mr. ADAMSON. What is the language? Mr. WANGER. They refer to the action of members of the committee in executive session.

The SPEAKER. This conversation is going on in the time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson].

Mr. Adamson. Mr. Speaker, I have already yielded my time to another. This is a point made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, then, objects to the request of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. If he wishes to do that, he may. I will find means to do what I wish to do in another way.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon." Now, Mr. Speaker, the first thing to consider is whether or not there is any necessity for this legislation. That question has been fully answered in the hearings before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and any Member of this House can satisfy himself as to the fact by reading the report on this bill.

The report on page 2 says:

The ever-increasing number of railroad accidents, with attendant loss of life and property, calls for remedial legislation so far as such legislation is within our power to grant and so far as the same is practicable. The Quarterly Accident Bulletins of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the data for which is entirely supplied by the railroads themselves, disclose a situation not creditable to their management. Casualties were reported as shown by the following table taken from Accident Bulletin No. 20, for April, May, and June, 1906:

	Passen- gers (a and b).		Persons carried under agreement, etc. (bb).		hh)		Train- men.		Train- men in yards.

Further on it says:

If the total casualties for the year 1906 be taken into account, they ould be found greater than those resulting from the three days' fight

And again:

That long service of the most hazardous and exacting character is not conducive to safety numerous accidents fully attest. The attention of Congress and the country has been repeatedly called to the necessity and efficacy of legislation looking to the restriction of the hours of continuous labor of employees engaged in or connected with the operation of trains.

The President in three messages to Congress has recommended that legislation be enacted on this question.

The Interstate Commerce Commission in its eighteenth and nineteenth annual reports urge the necessity for legislation to prevent excessive hours of labor of railroad employees.

The report of the committee, on page 4, says:

The title of this bill indicates that it is designed to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads. The fact that the statistics show that the number of employees killed and injured largely exceeds that of passengers makes pertinent the attitude of employees regarding the necessity and advisability of this legislation.

The following resolutions are therefore herewith presented:

The following resolutions are therefore herewith presented:

"Resolution passed by the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen at its convention at Buffalo, N. Y., in the year 1905.

"Whereas a large number of railways are requiring their employees to work an excessive number of hours, thereby endangering their lives and those of the general traveling public: Therefore, be it

"Resolved. That we condemn such a practice and urge Congress to enact a law governing the number of hours of service to not exceed sixteen hours for all employees engaged in train and yard service, as a large number of accidents that occur on the railroads are directly or indirectly traceable to the fact that employees have been overworked."

"Resolution passed by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers at its convention at Los Angeles, Cal., in the year 1904.

"Be it resolved, That the grand chief engineer be, and is hereby, instructed to present to all subdivisions, for signatures of their members, a petition addressed to the Congress of the United States, asking said Congress to enact a national law prohibiting the excessive hours that engineers on many roads are now held on duty. When said petitions are returned to the grand office, the grand chief is instructed to present the same to the Congress of the United States in such manner as he deems best."

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the foregoing show the urgent necessity for effective legislation on this subject, but notwith-standing that the representatives of various railroad systems appeared before the committee and opposed it. Now, is the bill reported by the majority of the committee and that we are now asked to pass under suspension of the rules the best we can do? I do not think so. This bill is called a "sixteen-hour bill," and the report of the majority purports to limit the hours of labor of railroad employees to sixteen in twenty-four, and then to provide for ten hours off duty.

I submit that their bill does not do that, but that it will permit the working of railroad employees thirty-four hours out of every forty-eight; in other words, the employees may only have six consecutive hours off duty every second day. I am in favor of saying in this act, in unmistakable language, just what we propose to do, and that is, not to permit any man engaged in train operation to work more than sixteen consecutive hours without having ten consecutive hours off duty, and after sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four to have eight consecutive hours off duty, with a proper provision for casualty. The large number of wrecks that are occurring daily in this country ought to be reduced to a minimum, and if we can in any degree reduce them by reducing the hours of labor of railroad employees, it ought to be done.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch] stated, among other things, that the representative of the railroad employees here in Washington was in favor of this legislation. I say that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and kindred organizations have passed resolutions in their national conventions asking for a sixteenfor the La Follette bill, so called, that passed the Senate with but one dissenting vote, provided there is added to it an amendment regulating and reducing the hours of train dispatchers and operators. Mr. Speaker, on the question as to whether the railroad employees of this country are satisfied with this bill, I wish to say I have in my hand a letter from Mr. H. R. Fuller, the representative of these organizations in this city, which I will ask the Clerk to read and which I will place in the RECORD:

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. Fuller, 216 New Jessey Avenue NW., Washington, D. C., February 18, 1907.

Hon. WILLIAM H. RYAN,

House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, Order of Railway

Conductors, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, having a membership of 250,000, I respectfully submit the following criticisms of the substitute reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for Senate bill 5133, entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees thereon."

The word "knowingly," as it appears on page 4, line 3, and on page 5, line 6, to say the least, arbitrarily puts upon the Government the burden of proof that the carrier or its officers or agents knowingly violated the law. It is true that in section 3 the bill provides that "the common carrier shall be deemed to have had knowledge of all acts of its duly authorized agents," but the carrier outdeny that the officer or agent was duly authorized for this particular purpose, In addition to this, it will render impossible in many cases the conviction of officers and agents of the carrier who are parties to and a part of a plan to permit employees to work longer than the limit prescribed in the bill. For instance, one officer could permit ten hours' service of an employee and withhold the information of such service from the next officer, who would then take charge of the employee and permit ten additional hours' service, as active of the employee and permit ten additional hours' service, as active of the employee and knowledge of the control of twenty-four hours following had at least six consecutive hours off duty" as they appear on page 4, beginning in line 13, will permit of an employee being worked as high as twenty-four hours following had at least six consecutive hours of duty before sixteen of these hours have elapsed. This exception therefore does not only destroy the provision of the bill relative to accumulative service, but it also defeats the purpose of the provision relating to consecutive hours of service, for the reason that a carrier conductive service, for the reason that a carrier of which a few minutes off duty.

The exceptions in the first provisio in servicing on houry without a sufficient number of hours o having had at least eight hours off duty." but it falls to specify who it is that shall not require or permit him to do so.

The bill does not even make it a misdemeanor for a carrier to violate its provisions.

Another serious defect is that the bill provides no machinery for its enforcement. The Interstate Commerce Commission, according to its provisions, is the body selected to furnish evidence of violations, but it is given no power whatever to collect such evidence. In the railroad rate law the Commission is given the power to prescribe forms of reports, examine books and papers, and to do other necessary things looking to the enforcement of that act, and it should be here granted such powers as to the enforcement of this act.

The provision in section 3 which prevents district attorneys from bringing suit except when directed so to do by the Attorney-General is arbitrary and will cause delay, as it contemplates that the Attorney-General is arbitrary and will cause delay, as it contemplates that the Attorney-General shall pass upon the evidence filed in each case before suit is instituted; and if violations of this law are as numerous as those of the safety-appliance law, hundreds of suits will be held back and delayed through this manner of procedure. Taking the safety-appliance law as a basis, the effect of this provision can be best estimated by the fact that at this time there are pending in the various district courts of the United States suits to recover for 500 violations of that law, and sixty more will be filed within the next few days. The only reason so far advanced for placing this provision in the bill is that it is necessary to prevent blackmall of railroad officers by their employees. This is an unfair reflection upon the railroad employees of the country and can not be justified. Out of the thousand suits brought for violation of the safety-appliance law there has not been one instance in which a railroad employee was accused of blackmall.

Section 5 provides that the act shall not take eff

H. R. FULLER, Legislative Representative.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I should like to know whether Mr. Fuller has authority to speak for the railway employees? I have not the highest opinion of Mr. Fuller, and I should like to know whether or not he has this authority?

Mr. RYAN. I believe that he has. I know he is a member of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and has authority to speak for them.

Mr. Speaker, the bill in its present form should not pass. It should be amended to meet the objections urged. The provision relating to train dispatchers and operators should be amended to provide for eight hours in offices continuously operated, and a maximum of twelve hours in offices operated only during daytime, with a proper provision for emergencies.

The provisions for enforcement are of doubtful construction, and this should not be. The language should be simple and effective. The law should be made to carry out the intention expressed in the title. I hope the bill as presented will be voted down in order that we may have an opportunity to vote for a bill that will reduce to a minimum the number of railroad accidents that are occurring in this country almost daily. [Ap-

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama
[Mr. Richardson] four minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am rather disappointed, after the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has labored for days and weeks and months on this important subject, that it has presented this substitute now pending for the Senate bill. As I understand, Mr. Speaker, there are two primal and essential objects to be accomplished in this bill in order to carry out its beneficial purposes: One is to provide a plain and intelligible remedy against the evil of permitting common carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers by railroad from working their employees more than sixteen hours, and the other is to provide a plain and clear remedy for the enforcement of the penalties when the provisions of the law are violated. This substitute bill reported by the majority of the members of the Commerce Committee does not accomplish either one of these purposes. It really and truly is a bill of words of doubtful meaning, tergiversation, and evasion, and dodging responsibility. I say that, Mr. Speaker, dispassionately and without meaning to reflect on the motives or purposes of any one on the committee reporting the bill. I only desire to point out, Mr. Speaker, the difference between the La Follette bill (S. 5133), for which this bill of the majority was substituted, or the Esch bill (H. R. 18671), that was reported unanimously by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee last May, on the subject of limiting the hours of service of employees working on railroads. If I can do this, then it will be readily understood why the minority members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee could not concur in the views of the majority. Of course we all realize the imperative necessity for legislation on these lines.

The protection of the lives of the people as well as the lives of the employees themselves is at stake. It is simply appalling to note in the public press the daily account of the loss of life by reason of some accident on railroads. No occasion for me to read from the accident bulletins of our Interstate Commerce Commission from 5 to 20, inclusive, which I have carefully read, which shows the casualties to persons during certain -quarterly-from 1901 to the latter part of June, 1906. These bulletins were prepared under the authority of a law of Congress passed March 3, 1901, and the duty, I say, is pressing on Congress, after we are fully advised as to the awful destruction of human life in railroad accidents and its startling increase, to enact some law that will check, at least, such carnage. The law of March 3, 1901, was in effect but five years ending in June, 1906, and the quarterly reports by bulletins show that the total number of casualties up to June 30, 1906, is 70,934 (4,225 killed and 66,709 injured). I here refer, in this connection, to a table that I clipped from the Times of this city, issued this afternoon:

WRECK RECORD FROM AUGUST 1, 1906.

Killed.	Injured.
Pennsylvania Railroad, August 19 77	7
Maine Central, August 251	3
Canadian Pacific, September 12 12	10
Rock Island, September 18 2	0
St. Louis and San Francisco, September 182	0
Boston and Albany, October 4 5	20
Pennsylvania Railroad, October 28 57	20 38
Baltimore and Ohio, November 12 47
Southern Railroad, November 29 7	11
Soo Line, December 2310	31
Baltimore and Ohio, December 30 59	- 60
Oregon Short Line, January 1 1	2
Rock Island, January 2 35	40
Union Pacific, January 31	1

The reason I object to this substitute bill by the majority is because it fails signally to meet the demands of the situation. No hostility, actual or assumed, to railroads can be injected into this measure or its consideration. It is a question of protecting the lives of the traveling public by administering proper punishment to a common carrier who requires or permits an employee to remain on duty so long that his physical senses are exhausted and he becomes unfit to discharge his responsible duties.

It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that it will certainly be in order for the Republican party to explain why it was that with such opportunities as the La Follette and the Esch bills offered them to get a real remedial bill, why did they turn and embrace and report this bill of the majority, which, to speak of it in mildest terms, is a travesty on what is demanded? It is truly "a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal." It violates every known and established rule "that it is always best to express what you think, where others are concerned, in plain, simple, and easily understood words." The bill really fails to give any relief of the evil complained of—working employees on railroads more than, continuously or consecutively, sixteen hours—but as I fairly understand it, its tendencies are to legalize the act of the common carriers if they work their employees over the limit of sixteen hours.

If, Mr. Speaker, any political complexion has been given to this bill it is not the fault of the minority Democrats on the committee. Just a word more, Mr. Speaker, on the probability of securing legislation on this subject. The people can not be fooled and deceived as to where the blame rests. I congratulate the Democrats on the floor of this House that we have taken the firm and manly stand that we have refused to say that if we can not secure the success of our own views, at last and on the wind up we will vote for the measure of the majority. The minority of the members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee rejects this paralyzing and humiliating purpose. The bill of the majority is wrong. It is a makeshift. It abounds in words of doubtful meaning and means nothing but to temporize and mislead and evade and ought to be defeated.

Mr. Speaker, I said the Republican party will have to explain its action on this bill to the country. I mean by that that we are now in a few days of the adjournment of the last session of the Fifty-ninth Congress. Are the Republicans sincere in attempting to make the bill of the majority the law, or do they want any legislation on this subject? We all realize that in the few days left for work in this Congress it can hardly be expected that this bill will get through. If legislation were really wanted by the controlling party on this long-discussed subject, the bill (H. R. 18671) to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon, introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch], a member of the committee, and after investigation and hearing unanimously, by both Republicans and Democrats, favorably reported to the House on May 31, 1906, and placed on the Calendar, would be passed. This Esch bill is in every respect a better bill than the substitute bill offered by the majority. Section 2 of the Esch bill reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier, its officers or agents, subject to this act to require or permit any employee subject to this act to be or remain on duty for a longer period than sixteen consecutive hours, and whenever any such employee of such common carrier shall have been continuously on duty for sixteen hours he shall be relieved and not required or permitted again to go on duty until he has had at least ten consecutive hours off duty; and no such employee who has been relieved from duty after a continuous service of any period more than ten hours shall be required or permitted to go on duty again until he has had eight consecutive hours off duty.

It will be seen that the limitation of sixteen consecutive hours on duty is plain and easily understood. Then the employee is entitled to ten hours' rest "off duty." If he has served not more than ten hours on duty then follows a rest of eight hours. The evidence in the hearings before the committee tended strongly to show that sixteen consecutive hours on duty would cover generally the divisions into which the trunk line railroads are divided. Another very important provision of this Esch bill is that the penalty of $500 imposed on the common carrier, or any officer or agent thereof, "requiring or permitting" any employee to go or remain on duty a longer period than prescribed shall be recovered by a suit brought in a Federal court having jurisdiction by the United States district attorney of that locality where the violation occurred.

It is true also that the Interstate Commerce Commission has the authority to lodge with the district attorney information of any such violation. This is but cumulative, and does not prevent the district attorney from taking the initiative. The La Follette bill (S. 5133) has this provision on the subject of the sixteen-hour limit:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier by railroad in any Territory of the United States or the District of Columbia, or any of its officers or agents, or any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by railroad, or any of its officers or agents, to require or permit any employee engaged in or connected with the movement of any train carrying interstate or foreign freight or passengers to remain on duty more than sixteen consecutive hours, except when by casualty occurring after such employee has started on his trip, or by unknown casualty occurring before he started on his trip, and except when by accident or unexpected delay of trains scheduled to make connection with the train on which such employee is serving, he is prevented from reaching his terminal; or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen consecutive hours to go on duty without having had at least ten hours off duty; or to require or permit any such employee who has been on duty sixteen hours in the aggregate in any twenty-four hour period to continue on duty or to go on duty without having had at least eight hours off duty within such twenty-four hour period.

I have called the attention of the House to the preceding pro-
